The Schatchen

By GEORGE MURRAY

(Copyright, 1915, by W. G. Chapman.)

"No, I don't need anything today, Abraham," said Miss Lisa Quentin.

The peddler sighed and began wrapping up his pack again. "It's a long time since you bought anything from me, lady," he said sadly. "There's lovely rugs. All grass, and only two fifty apiece. They'd brighten up your parlor so as you wouldn't know it, Miss."

"Not today, Abraham," said Miss Lisa, casting a glance at her floor, nevertheless as the peddler was quick to observe.

"Now if you was only married, lady, what a good trade I'd do with you," said the peddler.

"Go along with you, Abraham!" said the pleasant, comely looking woman. "Want to get me married so as to sell me your goods?"

"But that's my business, too, lady, begging the peddler's pardon. Lady When my people wants to get married, they're too modest to go courting. No, they call in the marriage broker, a 'schatchen,' as they calls it, to see the young people separately and find out if they're suited. Then, if everything's all right, I bring the young people together. You ain't so old, lady, not forty, I guess."

"Go along with you, Abraham! I'm only thirty-six!" exclaimed Miss Lisa, flushing furiously.

"All the better, lady. I've married worse ones than you. You got a better chance than some. I married a lady of sixty-eight last month."

"Abraham, how dare you!"

"It's all right," said the peddler. "All the womans says that. They get a lot more married as they never thought of marrying. But they'll always take a chance. Now let me marry you, miss, and you won't regret it. There's a fine fellow in Sidmouth, only forty, one—Mr. Frank Jones—with a big farm and horses to breed. You'd like him, lady."

"Abraham, will you go on till never boy anything from you again?"

"All right, miss," returned the inexorable peddler. "And maybe when I marry people I let me take the order for furniture from your house."

The cause of Miss Lisa's trepidation may or may not have been known to Mr. Abraham. The fact was that the said Mr. Jones had been an old sweetheart of Miss Lisa's years before, one among a number, when she was still late belle. Since then they had met several times, but there had never been any thought of courtship.

It was the following day that Abraham renewed his proposition, this time to Mr. Frank Jones, before whose door he stopped.

"Mr. Jones, why aint you never got married?" he asked, with a winning smile which could not possibly have given offense.

"Why, Abraham—I don't know, really. I suppose none of the girls wanted me."

"Then I got just the girl for you," said Abraham. "Such a fine girl, Mr. Jones, in Hobart. She's Miss Lisa Quentin. She lives you, Mr. Jones."

"What! Why—what do you mean, Abraham?" exclaimed the farmer sharply.

"It's all right," said the unperturbed Abraham. "All the minx says that at first. They're skittisher as the girls. No, she didn't tell me she loved you, Mr. Jones, but I read it in her eyes. You can get her—and then maybe you'll let me take the order for furnishing the home—yes?"

Left alone, Frank Jones began thinking over the old days of his wooing of Miss Lisa. Miss Quentin had certainly been one of the sweetest girls in the neighborhood. The middle ages must found himself recalling incidents that he had forgotten years before, things quite unrelated to the revolution of a substantial, hard headed farmer.

In the end he took the occasion to pay a visit to Miss Lisa, when he was being waited at the Hobart market. He dropped in for a pleasant chat, and thought he made an almost whatever in Abraham, he said that Miss Lisa was the spitpot of the peddler's arteens, as was evinced by her red cheeks and a sort of timidity in her manner not like her visitor.

When Jones left they felt like old friends again. "I shall come often," he said, taking her hand.

"You will always be welcome, Mr. Jones," answered Miss Lisa.

Nevertheless, when he had gone, she knew that Abraham had been speaking about her. She resolved firmly not to marry Frank Jones. When the peddler appeared the following week she was furious.

"How dared you mention my name to Mr. Jones?" she demanded.

"That's all right, lady. All the womans says that," answered the peddler. "It's going just the right way."

"Do you dare to suppose that I am going to let you marry me to Mr. Jones, just to give you a commission on the furniture? Why, I—hate him."

"All the womans says that, too, lady," answered Abraham, dodging before Miss Lisa's broom.

It was a week later when Frank paid his second visit. Perhaps he had seen the peddler in the interval, certainly he had done a lot of thinking, and the upshot of it was that he had come to the conclusion that life without Miss Lisa would be a sorry substitute for perpetual bliss. Yet, when he called, he only sat in silence a good part of the time, consuming a forbidding atmosphere about his hostess.

"May I make you some tea?" inquired Miss Lisa.

"Yiggs and waffers! Fine cups and saucers!" cried a voice at the door.

Both started and looked at each other guiltily. It was the peddler.

"It's that Abraham!" exclaimed Miss Lisa, looking charming as the deep red dyed her face. "I won't have him around here."

"But, Abraham, his pack on his back, was already at the door. He looked imperturbably upon the couple.

"I got some fine samples of rugs here, lady," he said. "Just the thing for a young couple starting in."

"What do you mean, Abraham?" shouted Mr. Jones, springing to his feet.

"What, aint you got it fixed yet?" demanded the peddler. "My, but you's a backy slow. No wonder you ain't married yet. Miss Lisa's been waiting for you ever since you left, Mr. Jones."

Abraham extracted something shiny from his pocket and put it in Mr. Jones' hand.

"Real diamond, he said. "Only fifty. Put it on her finger. Do it now!"

Suddenly Jones, as if hypnotized, moved toward Miss Lisa and took her hand in his.

"I won't! I won't!" exclaimed Miss Lisa, nearly in tears.

"Don't mind her," said Abraham. "That's what they all says. Put it on."

And Frank Jones did. What is more, he kissed Miss Lisa, to the amazement of the peddler. But Abraham was looking at the furniture catalogue that he had brought with him.

"Abraham, will you go on till never boy anything from you again?"

"All right, miss," returned the inexorable peddler. "And maybe when I marry people I let me take the order for furniture from your house."

But Abraham, his pack on his back, was already at the door. He looked imperturbably upon the couple.

"I got some fine samples of rugs here, lady," he said. "Just the thing for a young couple starting in."

"What do mean, Abraham?" shouted Mr. Jones, springing to his feet.

"What, aint you got it fixed yet?" demanded the peddler. "My, but you's a backy slow. No wonder you ain't married yet. Miss Lisa's been waiting for you ever since you left, Mr. Jones."

Abraham extracted something shiny from his pocket and put it in Mr. Jones' hand.

"Real diamond, he said. "Only fifty. Put it on her finger. Do it now!"

Suddenly Jones, as if hypnotized, moved toward Miss Lisa and took her hand in his.

"I won't! I won't!" exclaimed Miss Lisa, nearly in tears.

"Don't mind her," said Abraham. "That's what they all says. Put it on."

And Frank Jones did. What is more, he kissed Miss Lisa, to the amazement of the peddler. But Abraham was looking at the furniture catalogue that he had brought with him.

"Abraham, will you go on till never boy anything from you again?"

"All right, miss," returned the inexorable peddler. "And maybe when I marry people I let me take the order for furniture from your house."

The cause of Miss Lisa's trepidation may or may not have been known to Mr. Abraham. The fact was that the said Mr. Jones had been an old sweetheart of Miss Lisa's years before, one among a number, when she was still late belle. Since then they had met several times, but there had never been any thought of courtship.

It was the following day that Abraham renewed his proposition, this time to Mr. Frank Jones, before whose door he stopped.

"Mr. Jones, why aint you never got married?" he asked, with a winning smile which could not possibly have given offense.

"Why, Abraham—I don't know, really. I suppose none of the girls wanted me."

"Then I got just the girl for you," said Abraham. "Such a fine girl, Mr. Jones, in Hobart. She's Miss Lisa Quentin. She lives you, Mr. Jones."

"What, then—what do you mean, Abraham?" exclaimed the farmer sharply.

"It's all right," said the unperturbed Abraham. "All the minx says that at first. They're skittisher as the girls. No, she didn't tell me she loved you, Mr. Jones, but I read it in her eyes. You can get her—and then maybe you'll let me take the order for furnishing the home—yes?"

Left alone, Frank Jones began thinking over the old days of his wooing of Miss Lisa. Miss Quentin had certainly been one of the sweetest girls in the neighborhood. The middle ages must found himself recalling incidents that he had forgotten years before, things quite unrelated to the revolution of a substantial, hard headed farmer.

In the end he took the occasion to pay a visit to Miss Lisa, when he was being waited at the Hobart market. He dropped in for a pleasant chat, and thought he made an almost whatever in Abraham, he said that Miss Lisa was the spitpot of the peddler's arteens, as was evinced by her red cheeks and a sort of timidity in her manner not like her visitor.

When Jones left they felt like old friends again. "I shall come often," he said, taking her hand.

"You will always be welcome, Mr. Jones," answered Miss Lisa.

Nevertheless, when he had gone, she knew that Abraham had been speak-

The Sandman Story

By Miss F. A. Walker

SNOWBALL'S REVENGE.

Puff and Kit became very popular with all the kittens and cats in the neighborhood after they gave the lecture and very much talked of, and Snowball was not looked upon as quite their equal.

One day after he had been in the city with his master he heard a commotion in the barn, and he thought Puff and Kit must be giving another lecture, so he went very quietly to the barn door and looked in. All the cats and kittens were sitting around the barn, drinking tea, and one old Mrs. Tabby was saying to Puff: "It is a pity your brother Snowball does not care for the artistic things in life as you and Kit do. It must be very trying to have him go to town with his master instead of enjoying this brilliant gathering you have this afternoon at your tea."

"Yes," replied Puff. "Kit and I often speak of it, but Snowball does not care for social life at all. He is of rather a roving disposition, and he does not care for style, either."

"He seems to be very proud of his tie and collar," said another Mrs. Tabby.

"Oh, yes," replied Kit, "so he is, but he does not wear them with any style.

"He has not the grace or dignity which you or Puff possess," said another old Tabby.

Snowball listened with flashing eyes. "The wretches," he said, "after all I have done for Kit and Puff to think they would talk about me like this. I will show them whether I have style or not. I saw a dog on the street today wearing a red sweater. I'll get one the next time I go to town, and on Sunday I will wear it. I will make the old Tabbies and Puff and Kit sit up and take notice of me."

The next Sunday morning when all the kittens and Tabby cats were sitting on their front steps in the warm sunshine Snowball donned his red sweater. He stretched his neck to its full length so that his tie and collar might show to advantage. He slicked his coat and pricked up his ears, and then walked very slowly by the barn door, where Kit and Puff were doing in the sun, but he did not look at them.

Puff was in the middle of a yawn, and he stopped with wide-opened mouth. Never had he seen anyone look so stylish as Snowball in his red sweater. He tapped Kit on the head and awoke him, and they walked out of the barn and looked after Snowball's receding figure.

"Where did he get it?" asked Kit.

"I do not know," said Puff, "but he will have all the neighborhood talking about him, and he will be forgotten again."

They crept along to the gate and watched Snowball walk down the road. Out came the kittens and Tabbies and looked admiringly at Snowball, who bowed and purred to each one he met.

"Snowball's the most stylish cat around here," said one kitten.

"And his white fur with the red sweater makes him the handsomest cat I ever saw," said another. "I must watch for him when he comes back," said one old Tabby, "and invite him to dinner, for he will be the rage after this." "Yes," said another, "he is far more handsome than Kit or Puff. They never could carry off that style of red sweater."

Poor Puff and Kit watched Snowball as he was greeted on all sides and finally surrounded by an admiring crowd. They walked down the road, but no one noticed them. For all you were on Snowball and his red sweater, Kit and Puff went home and waited for Snowball to return, but it was very late before they saw him. Everybody was anxious to have him sit on their steps or in their yard, that they might be able to say that he had called upon them wearing the wonderful red sweater.

When Snowball reached home that evening Puff said: "You better keep a watch on the cow. If she sees that red coat of yours she will toss you so high you will never come to earth again; she does not like red."

"I am not at all afraid," said Snowball, "the cow always admired me, but if either of you should put this on and saw you, I won't answer for the consequences, for your figures would not show it off as mine does, and it would anger her to see you wear it." And Snowball walked away, leaving Kit and Puff wondering how they could regain their standing with their acquaintance.

PIGS WILL REPAY ATTENTION

Little Georgia Miss Gives Striking Demonstration of What Careful Feeding Will Accomplish.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A Georgia girl has recently given a striking demonstration of what a little care will accomplish in the raising of pigs. A sow in her neighborhood had eight pigs and could only nourish seven of them at one time. The eighth pig was therefore given to the little girl, who raised it by hand. She joined her country pig club as a Ham and Bacon member, and kept a close record, as the club regulations provide, of the feed given her pig, and of its weight. The pig was not a purebred. At nine months old the pig was killed. It weighed 205 pounds net when dressed as meat, and also yielded a 50-pound can of lard. The cost of producing this meat was less than five bushels of corn, as the pig was also fed on kitchen waste.

At the same time there were other pigs which had been left with the mother were killed. They averaged nearly 200 pounds net weight of meat. This is only one of the many instances in which the members of the pig clubs throughout the country are demonstrating to their neighbors how liberally the pig repays those who provide it with a reasonable amount of care and food.

MANY ERRORS IN SPELLING

Orthographic Oddities Brought to Light by Dr. Leonard P. Ayres in Few Excellent Spellers.

Seven out of every 100 third grade public school children in the United States cannot spell the word "has," according to a report just compiled by Dr. Leonard P. Ayres of the Russell Sage foundation on the special problems inherent in the teaching of spelling. Doctor Ayres' study also brought out many other orthographic oddities.

Doctor Ayres selected the 1,000 words that constitute 90 per cent of the language ordinarily used. This selection was made from various English authors, from four Sunday newspapers, and from the business and family correspondence of more than 2,000 adults.

Co-operating with the school superintendents in 84 cities of the United States, Doctor Ayres had the 1,000 words dictated to 8,000 pupils, an average of 1,400,000 spellings, secured from 1,000 public school pupils.

Nine words of most frequent use, viz., "the," "in," "to," "now," "man," "day," "long," "had," revealed that second-grade pupils, on an average, spelled correctly 94 per cent of these words. At the other extreme of the scale, of words "judgment," "recommend," and "village" were found to be spelled correctly by just 50 per cent of eighth grade pupils.

Doctor Ayres finds: "There are very few words which are misspelled by many medium ones, and very few excellent ones. Few words do not cause some trouble to some people. Many words constitute, with their repetitions, one-half of the words written. The child who masters the 1,000 words on the scale given will find his difficulties in nine-tenths of his writing."—New York Times.

A Boy's Idea.

Some historian has discovered that we owe the existence of the saltspun to the walls of an English baby. A little boy named Henry, the son of a blacksmith, had often to play nurse to his baby brother. He saw that when the baby cried it was usually because he was pricked by a pin. For a long time the boy nurse tried to bend the common pin so that it would be less likely to pierce the baby's fresh flesh and as his father, the blacksmith, pointed the job, he worked out the idea of saltspun grew in his own mind until it resulted in a contrivance that is in use to the world over.

Worst Habit of Boys.

One of the very worst habits in boyhood is the cigarette habit. It has been long recognized by all the judges of the courts who deal with young criminals, and especially the judges of police courts, before whom pass thousands of men every year who are addicted to intemperate habits. These judges know that in nearly every case the drunken sots who appear before them, a disgrace to their parents, themselves and the State, began as boys smoking cigarettes. One bad habit led to another. The nicotine and poison in the cigarette created an appetite for alcoholic drink.

"The Reason."

"Well, Tommy, I suppose you love your teacher?"

"No, sir."

"You ought not to talk that way. Why don't you love her?"

"We are quite intermpatible, sir," replied the precocious youth.

HANDICRAFT FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

By A. NEELY HALL and DOROTHY PERKINS

(Copyright, by A. Neely Hall.)

A HOME WORK-BENCH.

It will be worth your while to save up nickels and dimes for the material necessary to build the work-bench in Fig. 1, because with such a bench you can make many things that would not be possible otherwise.

Fig. 2 shows how the framework is constructed. The legs (A) are two by-fours two feet long, the top plates (B) are two-by-fours, the length of which will be determined by the width you decide to make the bench, the end cross rails (C) are one-by-fours of the same length as pieces B, the side cross rails (E) are one-by-fours, the length of which will be determined by the length you decide to make the bench, and the diagonal braces (D and F) are one-by-fours.

After sawing legs A and top plates B to the proper lengths, spike the plates to the top of the legs, and nail end rails C to the sides four inches above the bottom (Fig. 3.). Then cut diagonal braces D and nail one on each side of the legs, as in Fig. 3.

Connect the end frames with the side rails E (Fig. 2), and then with the diagonal braces F.

The bench top should have at least one two-inch plank in it, along the front. Back of this plank one inch board may be used to save on the cost of material. A strip of wood of the proper thickness should be nailed to plates B to raise the boards to the height of the plank. The side edges of the bench top should cross even with plates B.

When the top has been fastened to the framework, nail an apron (G, Fig. 4) to the front of the bench. Cut this out of an eight-inch board, of the length of the bench, and trim off each end on the diagonal as shown.

The bench-vise requires an iron bench-screw (Fig. 5). This is cost 50 cents at a hardware store. Cut the jaw (H, Fig. 7) out of a piece of oak by-stis 20 inches long, bore a hole through the center of one face six inches below the top, for the bench-screw to stick through a piece of the top as shown, and notch the lower corner for a stop-block. Make this block thick, three inches wide and 14 inches long.

Bore a hole through apron G and the left-hand bench leg, at exactly the same distance below the bench top (so that the hole in the jaw was bored below the top), then enlarge this hole, upon the inside of the leg, as much as is necessary for the iron threaded socket (Fig. 6) so that the threaded socket (Fig. 6) will fit in the hole with screws.

"Distinguished."

When a man just naturally looks "different" it's all right. But when a man gets himself up to look "different" he doesn't. He hoes the brand of the ordinary run of cuses.—Kansas City Star.

Courage of Cissapir.

A schoolboy's composition furnishes the following: "The courage of Ides Turca is explained by the fact that a man with more than one wife is more willing to face death than if he had only one."

HOME-MADE POTTERY.

First you must get the clay. Modeling clay can be purchased wherever artists' materials are sold.

You must have a small board to work upon, a pie tin on which to build, a knife, a short stick flat on one end and pointed on the other, and a ruler.

Begin the little jar in Fig. 1 with its base. Put a handful of clay on the board, put it out with your hand until it is inch thick, and smooth off the surface (Fig. 2). Then take a coffee cup, invert it upon the base, and with your knife trim away the clay outside of the rim (Fig. 3). To build up the walls, put a handful of clay on the work board, and smooth it out into a long strip ¼ inch thick. Then with knife and ruler trim off one edge of the piece, and cut a number of strips ½ inch wide (Fig. 4). Taking one strip, stand it on top of the base, and rub its edge into the base (Fig. 5). Continue building the walls by placing one strip upon another, joining each to the one beneath, and smoothing over the joints as you go, until the walls are as high as you want them to be. Fill uneven places with bits of clay, and smooth out rough places with your fingers, moistened with water.

When you have learned how to build with clay, you will be able to construct any of the articles shown in Figs. 6 to 17. To make the candlestick (Fig. 6), prepare a round base ½ inch thick (Fig. 7 and 8). Then put a lump of clay in the center, work it into the base, place another lump on top and work it into the lower portion (Fig. 9), and continue in this way until the candlestick is as high as you want it. Then smooth it down into the moist clay, twisting it around until it has made a deep enough socket for itself (Fig. 10).

When you must leave a piece unfinished, cover it with a wet cloth to keep the clay from hardening. Pottery that you buy is fired and then fired hard in a kiln, but we cannot use this process, and it is unnecessary. The clay will dry hard enough, and the only thing we must look after is warping. The article must be set in a place where it will not be jarred or disturbed while it is drying. A sow in her neighborhood had eight pigs and could only nourish seven of them at one time. The eighth pig was therefore given to the little girl, who raised it by hand. She joined her country pig club as a Ham and Bacon member, and kept a close record, as the club regulations provide, of the feed given her pig, and of its weight. The pig was not a purebred. At nine months old the pig was killed. It weighed 205 pounds net when dressed as meat, and also yielded a 50-pound can of lard. The cost of producing this meat was less than five bushels of corn, as the pig was also fed on kitchen waste.

At the same time there were other pigs which had been left with the mother were killed. They averaged nearly 200 pounds net weight of meat. This is only one of the many instances in which the members of the pig clubs throughout the country are demonstrating to their neighbors how liberally the pig repays those who provide it with a reasonable amount of care and food.

BUSINESS IN CANADA IS GOOD

Successful Crops and Big Yields Help the Railway.

The remarkable fields that are reported of the wheat crop of Western Canada for 1915 bear out the estimate of an average yield over the three western provinces of upward of 25 bushels per acre. There is no portion of that great west of 34,000 square miles in which the crop was not good and the yields abundant. An American farmer who was induced to place under cultivation land that he had been holding for five years for speculative purposes and higher prices, says that he made the price of the land out of this year's crop of oats. No doubt, others, too, who took the advice of the Department of the Interior to cultivate the unoccupied land, have done as well.

The yield of the great crop that Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta produced this year is best told in the language of the railways in the added care that it has been necessary to place in commission, the extra trains required to be run, the increased tonnages of the grain movement.

It is found that railway earnings continue to improve.

The C. P. R. earnings for the second week of October showed an increase of $162,000 over the week last year, total being only $316,000 below the gross earnings of the corresponding week of 1912, when the Western wheat crop movement was record breaking. The increase in C. P. R. earnings for the corresponding week of that year was only $154,000 in excess of that of the increase reported this year. The explanation seems to be the fact that, from the past two weeks has taxed the resources of the Canadian roads to the utmost, before, despite their increased facilities. The C. P. R. is handling 2,000 cars a day in excess of its capacity. The G. T. R. and the C. N. R. are also making new shipment records. The other day the W. Grant Morden, of the Canada Steamships Company, the largest forwarder of the Canadian fleet on the Upper Lakes, brought down a cargo of 476,212 bushels, a new record for Canadian shipping. Records are "going by the board" in all directions this fall, due to Canada's record crop. The largest Canadian wheat movement ever known is reported for the period up to October 15th, when since shipments of the new crop began in August, 4,265,79[illegible] bushels have been reloaded for England, France and Italy. This is over half as much as was shipped by American wheat from the same port in the same period. And, be it remembered, Montreal, not New York, is the main export gateway for Canadian wheat. New York gets the overflow in connection with Montreal.—Advertisement.

Robert Lansing, Secretary of State

By Edward B. Clark

Mrs. Robert Lansing

SOMETHING more than a score of years ago James G. Blaine resigned his position as secretary of state in the cabinet of President Harrison. He was succeeded by Gen. John W. Foster. A few months ago William J. Bryan resigned his position as secretary of state in the cabinet of President Wilson. He was succeeded by Robert Lansing. These two resignations of fact are put together because it may be justified by the human interest which seems to exist in the fact that John W. Foster is the father-in-law of Robert Lansing.

It is probable that no two men were more different in temperament and in manifestations thereof ever existed than William J. Bryan and his successor in office, Robert Lansing. Mr. Bryan was more or less inclined to be half fellow well met with men. Mr. Lansing has little of the hail fellow well met in him, but nevertheless he is approachable, genial and almost without question the best listener that the state department has had for a great many years.

Now it is said frequently that the man who is a good listener is more apt to get results than the man who is, we shall not say a good, but a great talker. Those who know the present secretary of state say that there is no chance of connecting one of his cars with the other. This simply is their way of expressing the fact that nothing that goes into one of Mr. Lansing's ears finds exit from the other. He holds fast what he hears and later he acts on his knowledge or refuses to act on it as seems better to his understanding of the case.

Ordinarily speaking, persons like to hear stories about men in high positions. It is probably no exaggeration to say that there are a thousand stories about Mr. Bryan, about Mr. Knox, about Mr. Root, and about one or another of the predecessors in office of the present incumbent to one about the present incumbent himself. When one says stories, of course, he means human interest and humorous stories. Mr. Lansing does not lend himself readily to the exploitation of fun making. He is a grave man, a receptive man and therefore not at all an exhaustive man. He can be humorous, however, is keen and he enjoys a good story well told and enjoys it with an evident, if quiet, showing of appreciation.

The kind of story they tell about Mr. Lansing when a story is demanded is in character something like that of the man himself, grave and dignified and yet possessing a quality which make up the more or less substantial story with a substratum of humor.

For instance, not long ago two ambassadors representing foreign countries, and one high official of the United States government, expressed a desire for an audience with Mr. Lansing on a certain Thursday evening. Mr. Lansing said that he would be happy to see the gentlemen at almost any other time, "but on Thursday evening I am going to a play."

Now, Robert Lansing is a Presbyterian, and a good one. It took real courage for a secretary of state, who is supposed to be ready at any hours of the day or night to listen to the plaintiveness of the weaker powers, to say in effect, "No, state matters must wait until the prayer meeting."

When Mr. Bryan was secretary of state he saw the newspaper men frequently, and his intercourse with them was of a kind that was easy sort because the Nebraska gentleman was and is a newspaper man himself. The correspondents, however, did not get any extraordinary amount of news out of Mr. Bryan despite his affability. Mr. Lansing holds regular business meetings with the correspondents. There are few stories of his questioners. Usually he is wearing the black cutaway of statesmanship. You feel instinctively that he is a man to be on the kind which shrewd intuition assumes would naturally seek as a counselor. Indeed, his title which he has hitherto borne in the state department fits him like a glove.

In the paragraph which is quoted something is said about the secretary of state being a handsome man. Some Washington residents declare that he is the handsomest man in the cabinet. Others do not agree to this, but all admit that the secretary's way of carrying himself is all that it should be. It is perhaps probable that Mr. Lansing knows that he carries himself well. At any rate he seems to be responsible for his carriage, while his tailor is responsible in considerable measure for making the most of himself by providing the best-dressed man in public life in Washington.

It may be asked who is, or, rather, who was, Robert Lansing? While the reader may be able to answer the question, it is probable that the secretary of state was comparatively unknown until he came into prominence in connection with our delicate dealings with Mexico and with the other neighbors of the United States, recently have been in trouble among themselves or within themselves, and have been directly and indirectly causing trouble to the United States.

Robert Lansing was born in a small city, Watertown, in northern New York, only a few miles from the St. Lawrence river, from the waters of which it is probable that as a boy he sailed a sloop, a pointed bow and laid the foundation of his love for the sport which Isaac Walton made famous. He matured in the state legislature, counselor one year ago last March, succeeding John Bassett Moore. For thirty years, that is since he was twenty-one years of age, Mr. Lansing has been studying and practicing international law. He was often selected in behalf of the United States with a great many arbitration cases. He was the government's associate counsel in the fur seal arbitration twenty-two years ago, and later he represented the government before the Bering sea claims commission. He was counsel for the government in the Alaska boundary dispute and he has served Uncle Sam in China, Mexico, Venezuela, and at The Hague in various arbitration matters.

It is said that Robert Lansing slipped easily and gracefully into the big chair in the cabinet room which stands at the right hand of the bigger chair which is occupied by Woodrow Wilson. A good many men of note have occupied the chair. When a man ceases to be secretary of state history invariably makes an estimate of him and of his services. What will the verdict be concerning Robert Lansing?

One thing is certain, Mr. Lansing entered upon his great office duties at a time when it is possible for a man to win his spurs or to lose them, and that quickly. There are heavy burdens on the shoulders of this present incumbent of high cabinet office. When the corner stone of the Pan-American building was laid Theodore Roosevelt, then president of the United States, delivered an address in which he said that there had been many great secretaries of state, but that there had been none greater than Elihu Root.

At the laying of some corner stone or at the ceremonies attending some other memorable occasion will it be Woodrow Wilson's part to rise to his feet and say, "There have been many great secretaries of state, but none greater than Robert Lansing?"

In writing this sketch one very important matter came pretty near being overlooked. Robert Lansing, secretary of state, is a poet. Some people say that he is "a writer of exquisite verse." Poetry is pretty verse is either near poetry or no kin to poetry. Mr. Lansing does not claim to be a great poet. It is probable that he writes poetry as a diversion. At any rate, it is generally conceded that he is a pretty fair poet, and that he also is much more than a pretty fair painter.

So when the American people have a secretary of state who can make other nations sit up and take notice, who can fish, who can play bass with the best well, who can paint, who can write poetry, and, what is better, exceedingly forceful prose, who can do all this and who can do it so well as to be satisfied with the man who has taken upon himself a larger part of the burdens of state at a time when these burdens are heavy?

A RACK are a few contrivances for the kitchen and pantry which will be appreciated by mother if made by her handy boy. Nothing better could be selected for her Christmas gift.

The tool rack shown in Fig. 1 is most convenient when hung directly over the kitchen worktable. The length of the book strip will be determined by the space in which it is to hang, and by the number of forks, spoons and other tools which it will be required to hold.

The appearance of the rack will be improved by planing a bevel on the face edges of the book strip and the end blocks, as in the illustration. Use brass screws or galvanized nails for hooks, and screw or screweye into the top edge of each end block to hang the rack by.

The bottle rack in Fig 2 will hold your mother's bottles of extract, catsup, sauces and dressings, and eliminate the possibility of upsetting bottles when reaching for the one wanted.

Narrow strips should be used for the division strips of the rack, to save space and make the rack light in weight. Latha placed sweet on all sides will do for the side and center strips, also for the cross strips. The ends must be wider, three inches wide.

The swinging shelf shown in Fig. 4 is an excellent provision for the sugar scoop, as it makes it possible to swing these out from between the pantry shelves, then back into place after using without lifting them.

Fig. 5 shows how the swinging bracket is made of a strip two inches wide and ten inches long (A), with a block two inches wide and six inches long nailed to each side of it at one end (B), and two to the top of this bracket a cake tin is screwed or nailed which is set in the crock. Hinge the end of the bracket (B) to a to one end of the shelf supports, or else set in an upright piece between two shelves to screw the brace to. Use a one dimensed 7 brace for this bracket.

In the same way that the swinging shelf eliminates the lifting of the sugar scoop the platform shown in Fig. 6 saves the lifting of the scrub pail from place to place while scrubbing, as it is provided with castors on the platform.

Fig. 7 shows how the castors are screwed to the platform. Two strips are nailed to the edges, forming a rim that prevents the pail from sliding off.

Either paint or shellac each article after assembling it, and if you have done your work carefully, mother will have occasion to be proud of it.

"Needles" upon the front cover with ink or water colors.

Fig 2 shows a book-marker made of one and one-fourth yards of No. 7 white satin or grosgrain ribbon. Cut the ribbon into two pieces, one piece measuring 12 inches and the other 24 inches, and pull them half way through a little brass ring such as is used in curtain rods. Fasten the ends in place with a few stitches. To complete the marker, letter the following upon the ribbons with black ink or water colors, placing one line of the stanza on each ribbon end:

"Not mine to tell
If the book is good;
But I keep my place
As a marker should."

The trapezoid-shaped book-marker shown in Fig. 3 is cut from a piece of white writing paper seven inches square. Fold the square in half, diagonally, and cut along the folded line. Then take one-half and fold it in half again. The dotted line in Fig. 4 shows the manner to fold. Punch holes through the folded piece near one open end (these holes are indicated on the unfolded piece), and with narrow ribbon sew the open edges together, and tie the ribbon ends in a bow. Cut a picture from a magazine and paste it upon the front side. Letter a few lines over the corner of the page you wish to mark.

The pin case shown in Fig. 8 requires two pieces of cardboard each

[illegible] inches long, one one and one-half inches wide. Cover each piece with satin silk, turning over the edges and fastening them in place with stitches. To complete the marker, letter the following upon the ribb

Grand Haven Special: The fishing industry of Grand Haven is flourishing, an unusual season being experienced. One plant is smoking from 5,000 to 10,000 pounds of fish daily. The local catch not being sufficient, large quantities are being shipped in from northern shipping points, and there is an occasional shipment from Buffalo. These smoked white fish go out in 20-pound baskets by express to all parts of the United States. About 100 men are now engaged in the industry, and the extent of its growth will only be measured by the available supply of fish of suitable size for the smoked fish market. It is stated that nowhere in the country has the art of smoking fish been attained as it has among the Holland fishermen of Grand Haven.

One of the prettiest sights that nature ever presented to human vision was that of last Saturday morning. Friday's sun set with a heavy, misty fog, and while it covered the land scape a clear, cold night and early morning transformed the leafless trees into forms of shimmering silver, which, when the rising sun, constituted a picture of rare beauty.

The tar and gravel roof of the new Hathaway block was completed Saturday night, and the men are now working under cover. The front elevation, with the terra cotta trimming is finished and ready for the immense area of plate glass. Work on the interior will now be rushed and architect Hathaway is confident that the building will be ready for occupancy by January first. We shall then give a detailed description of this elegant structure.

A visitor on the ship was Miss Hazel Schaumann, a junior in the Walker high school. She declares that upon her graduation she will be at least second mate on a Christmas trip.

THE RICHARDI AFFAIR

In publishing Mr. Richardi's communication last week it was in a spirit of fairness to him in a controversy that is, in the end bound to uncover discreditable procedure somewhere.

Communications from the Bellaire gentleman to the taxpayers of Charlevoix will do him little good if the character of his defense is to be judged by that of last week. It is so pregnant with error as to be painfully amusing.

In the original deal with Mr. Richardi it was not Charlevoix that was the "sucker after light." Richardi was the proposition to the full extent of his persuasive powers, with Martindale as the "willing" assistant at this end.

To put the matter pla... Charlevoix is heart sick of the whole Bellaire deal in light deal, and will get out from under it as soon as it can.

DEATH OF JOHN NICHOLLS

The Foremost and Best Beloved Citizen of Charlevoix Passes Away

Just as we approach the hour of closing the columns of this issue the sad but not unexpected news comes to us of the death of Hon. John Nicholls at his home in this city. The end came peacefully at four o'clock Wednesday morning.

John Nicholls was born in Kingsbridge, England, 86 years ago last June. In 1850, having attained his majority, he came to this country, locating first at Whitewater, Walworth Co., Wis., soon after that changing his residence to Trempeleau, in the same state, where, for several years he worked at his trade as a carpenter and joiner.

His sterling character and broad intelligence soon won the recognition of his fellow citizens, and in 1861 he was elected for two terms to the office of register and clerk of Trempeleau county. In 1867 his ability and faithfulness won still further recognition when he was elected to the lower house of the Wisconsin legislature, declining re-election.

In 1874 he came to Charlevoix as manager of the lumbering interests of the Whitewater Manufacturing Co., of which concern he acquired the sole ownership in 1876, and which he developed into the present Charlevoix Lumber Co., of which corporation he was president at the time of his death. He was also the president of the Charlevoix State Bank.

Deceased leaves the following children, his wife having pre-deceased him several years ago: Harry, (the only son); Mrs. Bessie Mason, of California; Mrs. A. F. Bridge, Mrs. R. W. Paddock and Mrs. D. F. Meech, a stepdaughter, whom Mr. Nicholls has always recognized as a blood-daughter in all respects.

In the highest and most unequivocal sense of the term, Mr. Nicholls was the "Grand Old Man" of Charlevoix. Indeed, he had no rival in the esteem and affection of this community. His sterling integrity in business affairs; the kindliness and courtesy of his bearing; the sincerity of his attitude toward all with whom he came in contact, marked him as conspicuous in every quality that "gave the world the assurance of a Man." Much could be said of this noble character which the short time at our disposal prevents. Suffice it to say, we have lost one whose place, in this generation, cannot be filled.

The funeral will be from the Congregational church at ten o'clock Saturday morning.

Bank Announcement

We are requested to state that the death of President Nicholls, of the County Bank does not in any way disturb bank affairs, as the partnership contract provides that the estate of a deceased member shall continue as an asset.

School Commissioner's Column

May L. Stewart, Commissioner

Received—twelve reports from the State Geologist telling of twelve schools just what to do to be standard.

The school had six little windows, But three they noticed one day, And now it has a wall of light To the left and east, they say.

It's wonderous light and cosy! 'Twas done for the children's sake, But now they don't dare whisper For the lessons keeps awake.

Eighty-four per cent of the schools in this country are one-room country schools. Let us improve our share of that eighty-four per cent.

County Institute at Charlevoix Feb. 17-18. Supt. J. C. Warriner, of Saginaw, has been appointed conductor. Dr. Bryan, of Colgate University, has been secured for the first day and Prof. Karpinski, of the University of Michigan, for the second day.

The Stanley school is putting in the Palmer method of penmanship.

Three points for the health of your children: Correct seating, correct lighting and correct ventilating. These three things means a "Standard School."

The Tainter school has just finished plastering. Social money is at hand with which to buy a drinking fountain. Two splendid movements in the interests.

If two new windows cost $5 each, and 10 quarts of buff and cream wall tint are sold at 35c per quart, how much would Mary's father lose by voting down the more light idea and paying $10 to an eye-specialist for Mary, $2.75 to the physician for examination and pills for Mary's migraine, and $33.00 to the doctor when Johnny had his epileptic fits?

A general test in Cheboygan county proved that 64 per cent of the children had defective vision in one form or another. Causes and conditions are much the same in our county.

The type-writer, granted by the board of supervisors, has been put into time in the commissioner's office, working fine.

Boyne, Cedar Valley and Advance have used up their first booklets of monthly certificates of award.

The attendance record in Walloon Lake has kept above 95 per cent.

The second Reading Circle Class was organized in Boyne Falls, Saturday, Dec. 5th. A splendid start toward professional training. A wide awake get-together. The teachers should come whether they have their books or not.

"Preparedness" in the school room means prevention of sickness and a possibility of mental growth.

At the present rate, one man of every four will die of consumption. Would your boy be that one? A new era must dawn, then. Let fresh air into the school room and draw off the foul, carbon dioxide laden air.

This is a snoozy, wheezy time of year. What is the cause of your cold? Foul air?

Two Standard Plates arrived from the state department this week, and are awaiting the notices of the respective school boards that they have met the state requirements in lighting, seating and ventilating.

Preparedness for war in Michigan is preparedness to enter the regiments for waging war upon tuberculosis. Are you ready?

Red Cross seals for sale everywhere. Part of the state wide campaign.

Wanted: Two up-to-date, experienced teachers. With the commissioner educate—adjustate—ventilate.

HELP YOUR LIVER—IT PAYS

When your liver gets torpid and your stomach acts queer, take Dr. Kirk's New Life Pills and you will find yourself feeling better. HENRY FORD A FREE LANCE

Government Has No Interest in Ford Making a Fool of Himself

Several European nations, neutrals as well as belligerents, having inquired of the United States concerning the status of the peace party which is to sail in the steamship chartered by Henry Ford, to each, Secretary Lansing has replied that the American government, not only has no connection with the expedition, but assumes no responsibility for any activities or negotiations on the part of those engaged in the movement.

The fact that Mr. Ford had conferred with President Wilson before launching his movement to end the European war gave some of the ambassadors and ministers the impression that the United States might have some connection. It became known that since publication of the plans of the peace party the state department has been receiving inquiries most of them from an informal nature, through the embassies and legations of the European powers. Secretary Lansing has promptly explained that the party would carry no credentials from the state department and did not differ from any other body of Americans traveling in Europe.

Applications for passports by members of the expedition have been subjected to the closest scrutiny by the department and passports have been granted only for travel in neutral countries. In several instances passports were refused on account of improperly prepared applications or because the applicants were not American citizens.

And so, Mr. Ford will be permitted to spend his money as he chooses. The government has no objection to the millionaire exploiting the Ford automobile under the guise of the peace propaganda.

Go it, Henry.

LOAF LOCATES DEAD BOY

Woman Uses Old Superstition to Find Body in River, and it Turns the Trick.

Portland, Ore.—Following an ancient superstition in hope of finding the body of her drowned nephew, Mrs. Elizabeth Price threw a loaf of bread with a bit of quicksilver and a dime in its heart into the Willamette river. The loaf floated about for a short time and came to rest. Within ten minutes Andrew Elliott, who had gone to help, found the lad's body in a few feet of water directly under the bread. Hugh Brady, city grapler, had sought the body for five days.

MAN TAKES HORSE'S PLACE

Little Thing Like Nag Falling Dead in the Road No Bother to Sanford.

Columbus, Ind.—William Sanford heard there was work in the Shelbyville running factory. He hitched his horse to a spring wagon, took his wife in the seat beside him, whistled to his dog and started out. Twelve miles from Columbus the horse fell dead.

Sanford pulled the carcass to one side of the road, got into the shafts himself and, with his wife and dog walking along for encouragement, he pulled the wagon back to Columbus.

Apples Are Whoppers.

Atchison, Kan.—Twenty-four apples to the bushel is the enormous kind of fruit raised this year by R. K. Browning, a farmer near here. Twelve of the apples, which are of the Wolf River variety, on exhibition in a local bank, nicely fill a half-bushel measure.

CONCERNING TREE TRIMMING

EDITOR OF THE SENTINEL:

Dear Sir: I have read your article on tree trimming, and I beg to differ with you. The farmers are not beginning to learn that tree trimming by the telephone companies are a benefit instead of a damage. And I also disagree with you that if fruit trees need trimming, that shade trees surely do. Fruit trees need trimming to let the sun into them so there will not be so many small mealey apples, but big rosy fellows, but on the contrary, the more dense a shade tree is the more attractive it is.

Go with me and look at the trees from Tom Russell's to the railroad crossing, about one-half mile, look at the trees as nature made them, and the ones that the telephone company's artists mutilated (not trimmed.) I counted twenty-six in that short distance that were more or less mutilated, some of them their beauty spoiled forever.

Follow the telephone lines where you will, and you will find that wherever there is a tree in their way it is slashed, some of those beautiful trees with big holes cut through one side of them, spoiling the appearance of them forever. Others with the top cut away off. I can take you to a tree across from the Hilton farm that is an eyesore instead of a thing of beauty—others entirely dead.

We are proud of "Charlevoix The Beautiful," and are never done singing it praises, and how much more beautiful it would be in a few years if every farmer would plant a row of trees along the road and around their buildings. And also clean out around the fences, leaving anything that would grow into a shade tree, leaving them not less than three or four rods apart.

There are a good many beautiful farm homes around Charlevoix, and in every case trees are the most attractive part of the surroundings. I will mention one, the Hilton farm, the trees that Mr. Hilton planted over forty years ago, taking I am sure, not more than a day or two, are a monument to his memory. And here let me say, do not tap your trees for a paltry quart or two of syrup, for you will kill them sooner or later.

We dedicate one day each year to tree planting, and leave it to the district school teacher. Often an inexperienced young lady and a few small children, and most of them do themselves credit, and put to shame the big husky farmer and his boys.

I wish something could be said or done that would induce every farmer to plant trees along the roads. The whole trouble is we don't see immediate results, we have to wait fifteen or twenty years, and we are not likely to see the benefit. We toil all our lives to leave our children money, or some property, to be divided by some lawyer, after we have died and gone somewhere, but will not spend a day or two, or even an hour or two each year to beautify our community so that future generations will rise up and call us blessed, knowing that we are only remembered by what we have done.

I hope that other farmers will discuss this subject, and I am sure our editors will give space in their papers, as they are our best boosters, and are always at it.

Very truly yours,
ISAAC MILLS.

Elk Rapids Progress: The sawmill, one of the early landmarks of the village, is being razed, and the timber and lumber in it is being sawed into stove-length and sold for kindling. The first mill on the site of the present one was built by Dexter & Noble in 1855—sixty years ago. In 1860 the first one gave place to a new one with capacity for handling five times as many logs each year as the first one. Billions of feet of lumber have been sawed by the old mill, millions of dollars have been received from its manufactured products.

Petoskey News: Another civil war veteran passed away Thursday in the death of William Herrin, aged North Bay resident. Mr. Herrin had for many years made his home with his daughter, Mrs. Rollo Long, and it was there that he died early Thursday afternoon. He was seventy-five years of age. He served his country as a member of Company K, Sixty-fifth Illinois infantry and after the Civil war resided at Horton's Bay until his wife died. The funeral arrangements will be made Friday. [Mr. Herrin will be remembered by the older residents of Charlevoix having been a resident of Hayes for many years.]

Petoskey News: The Blackmer Rotary Pump company, of this city, is today forced to turn down a large order for war munitions, coming through their New York office, from representatives of the allies. The order no doubt was for shrapnel, of which the warring armies of Europe are just now using an amount almost unheard of before this time. The Blackmer factory is so rushed with orders for their pumps that they have no time to even think of making munitions of any kind for anybody. A part of their output of pumps is now being taken by the allies and they are building additional room, installing additional machines and taking on more expert men to keep abreast of their work.

SYNOPSIS.

Canalet, on the pioneer Kaiser Pres, homeward bound from Australia, sees the man who has ruined his life, and who thinks himself in fault and finds that Hilton Toye is innocent. He shows him, knows Canalet and shows Canalet Marsden, only daughter of the Chief Justice.

It was a sorry sample of his talk. Hilton Toye did not usually mix the ready metaphors that nevertheless had to satisfy an inner critic of some austerity, before they were allowed to leave the mouth. He was drunk now, in his strange excitement, word and tone alike were on the level of the stage Americans. It was not less than extraordinary.

"You don't mean"—Canalet seemed to be swallowing—"about Henry Craven?"

"Yep."

"You don't mean to say he—dead?"

"Last Wednesday night!" Toye looked at his paper. "No, I guess I'm wrong. It must be Wednesday week, day, but he only passed away Sunday morning."

Canalet still sat staring at him—there was not room for two of them on the deck—but into his heavy stare there came a gleam of leaden wisdom. "This was Thursday morning," he said, "so I didn't dream of it when it happened, after all."

"You dreamed you saw him lying dead, and so he was," said Toye. "The funniest been yet! I don't know but that seems to me just about the neatest answer thing to seeing the crime perpetrated in a vision."

"Crime!" cried Canalet. "What crime?"

"Murder sir!" said Hilton Toye, (stupid, brutal, bloody-murder). Here's the paper; better read it for yourself. I'm glad he wasn't a friend of yours, or mine either; but it's a bad end even for your worst enemy.

The paper fluttered in Canalet's clutch as it had done in Toyes; but that was as natural as his puzzled frown over the cryptic allusions of a journal that had dealt fully with the ascertainable facts in previous issues. Some few emerged between the lines Henry Craven had received his fatal injuries on the Wednesday of the previous week; no, it was he who had been in his library, at or about half past seven in the evening; but how a crime, which was apparently a profound mystery, had been timed to within a minute of its commission did not appear among the latest particulars. No arrest had been made. No clue was mentioned, beyond the statement that the police were still searching for a definite instrument with which it was evidently assumed that the deed had been committed. There was in fact a close description of an unusual weapon, a special constable's very special truncheon, it had long as a shoemaker's awl, fly on the library wall, from which it was missing, as was the very imprint of a silver shield, mounted on the thick end of the weapon, was stated to have been conserved on the scalp of the fractured skull. But that was a little bit of special reporting typical of the enterprising sheet that Toye had procured. The inquest, merely opened on the Monday had been adjourned to the day of issue.

"We must get hold of an evening paper," said Canalet. "Fancy his own famous truncheon! He had it on—he said and inscribed himself, so that it shouldn't be forgotten he was found dead in his own chair at Trafalgar Square. That was the man all over!"

His voice and manner achieved the excessive indifference which the English upper class affects when it has any excess of feeling. Toye also was himself again, his alert mind working heavily in death in his weak eyes.

"I wonder if it was a murder?" he speculated. "I bet it wasn't a deliberate murder."

"What else would it have been?"

"Kind of manslaughter. Deliberate murderers don't trust to chance weapons lying on their victims' walls."

"You forget," said Canalet, "that he was robbed as well."

"Do they claim that?" said Hilton Toye. "I guess I skipped some. Where does it say anything about his being robbed?"

"Here!" Canalet had scanned the paper eagerly; his finger resented upon the place. "The police," he read out, in some sort of triumph, "have been furnished with a full description of the missing watch and trinkets and the latter articles believed to have been taken from the pockets of the deceased." What's that but robbery?"

"You're dead right," said Toye. "I missed that somehow. Yet who in thunder tracks a man down to rob and murder him in his own house? But when you've bribed a man, because you couldn't keep your hands off him, you might deliberately do all the rest to save it seem like the work of thieves."

He on Toye looked a judge of deliberation as he measured his irreflutable words. It seemed scarcely more. Canalet could not tear his blue eyes from the penetrating pale that met them with a somewhat twinkle and enlightened gusto, quite uncomforta bly suggestive at such a moment.

"You aren't a detective, by any chance, are you?" cried Canalet, with clumsy humor.

"No, sir. But I've often thought I wouldn't mind being one," said Toye, stretching. "I rather fancy I might do something at it. If things don't go my way in your old country, and they put up a big enough reward, why, here's a man I know and a place I know, and I might have a mind to try my hand."

They went ashore together, and to the same hotel at Southampton for the night. Midnight found the chance pair with their legs under the same heavy Victorian mahogany, devouring cold beef, ham and pickles as phlegmatically as commercial travelers who had never been off the island in their lives. Yet Canalet was less depressed than he had been before landing; the old English ale in a pewter tankard was stimulating; a few of those anecdotes and piquant comparisons in which his companion was at its best. It was at its worst on general questions, or on concrete topics not introduced by himself; and into this category, perhaps not unnaturally, fell such further particulars of the Thames Valley mystery as were to be found in an evening paper at the inn. They included a fragmentary report of the adjourned inquest, and the actual offer of such a reward, by the dead man's firm, for the apprehension of his murderer, as made Toye's eyes glisten in his sagacious head.

But Canalet, though he had skimmed the many-headed column before sitting down to supper, flatly declined to discuss the tragedy his first night ashore.

CHAPTER III.

In the Train.

Discussion was inevitable on the way up to town next morning. The two strange friends, pinioned opposite each other in the first-class smoker, traveled inland simultaneously accressed in a copious report of the previous day's proceedings at the coroner's court.

The medical evidence was valuable only as tracing the fatal blow to some such weapon as the missing truncheon; the barrister's evidence established that the dinner hour was seven thirty; that, not five minutes before, he had seen his master come downstairs and enter the library, where, at seven forty-five, on going to ask if he had heard the gong, he had obtained no answer but found the door locked on the inside; that he had then hastened round by the garden, and through the French window, to discover the deceased gentleman lying in his blood.

The head gardener, who lived in the lodge, had sworn to having seen a bareheaded man rush out his window and out of the gates about the same hour, as he knew by the sounding of the gong up at the house; they often heard it at the lodge, in warm weather when the windows were open. And the gardener swore that he himself had heard it on that occasion.

The footman appeared to have been less positive as to the time of a telephone call he had answered, thought it was between four and five, he remembered the conversation very well. The gentleman had asked whether Mr. Craven was at home, and when he was out motoring, asked when he would be back, told he couldn't say, but before dinner some time, and what name should be given, whereupon the gentleman had rung off without answering. The footman thought he was a gentleman, from his voice. Apparently the police had not yet succeeded in tracing the call.

"Is it a difficult thing to do?" asked Canalet, touching on this last point early in the discussion, which even he showed no wish to avoid this morning. He had dropped his paper, to which Toye had already dropped his, and was gazing at the flying English fields since a pathetic resignation, the style of dress which custom has dictated to poor class.

There is no aping of the rich in their attire. Whether it be the fear of lèse majesté or the fear of ridicule that which the far-distant from her sensorium wears, as in temple or plate, she takes her dainty way, or the pretty frock or dell, she—and the poor woman of the moon, or the miler of the petty shopkeeper, casts no envious glance—but so, that would not be true!

Picturesque and Demure Party Gown

The sweet charm of youth is most fittingly expressed in this pretty dance frock of dotted swiss. It makes no pretension to cleverness or originality, and needs no excuse for lacking them. It is graceful and beautiful and might be copied with effect in taffeta, silk, muslin, point d'esprit, net, or chiffon. It is an American inspiration, embodying points that we like to emphasize to the party frocks for young girls.

The skirt is rather full, and slashed about the bottom. The slashes are bound with ribbon, which may be in a light color. A ruching hemmed at the edges and gathered on two alluring threads is fastened on the skirt, midway of its length.

A soft underbodice, with elbow sleeves, is made of chiffon and finished with a wide V-shaped opening at the front and back of the neck. A soft lace edging is sewed to the edge of this opening, and the sleeves are finished with a ruching made like that on the skirt.

The overdiaper is fulled on the shoulders and draped in surplice effect, with long arm-eyes. It slips easily over the underbodice, and a ruching, with three shirrings, forms a belt. It fastens at the left side under two chiffon roses, and two silver roses are set on the left shoulder.

Gay dance frocks, combining several light-colored nets, are made with ribbon-bound flounces or with goldenrod contrasting in color. A pretty model has a foundation skirt of white net with flounces of the same material, a ruffle of white net bound with narrow white satin ribbon. Above this is a flounce of light blue bound with blue ribbon. A flounce of pink overlays the blue, and one of pale yellow finishes the series. Three groups of flounces, with the colors arranged in this order, cover the skirt, and the waist employs the colored nets as a drapery over the white net in an underbodice.

The waist is made of colored nets has a short and widely flaring skirt in which rose color and black and ashtuffle are used with white. The different colors are set about the waist and extend to the bottom of the skirt in godets, with colors alternating. The bodice is draped, and a rose and gray rich brocaded ribbon completes the design. Its colors carry out the wonderful color scheme in the gown.

Besides the use of several colors in one gown, designers of dance frocks have achieved some lovely flowerlike effects by outlining three shades of one color in silk gowns. A coral-colored frock has a full short skirt with wide ruchings at the bottom in two deeper shades of coral. Ribbons figure conspicuously in the newest models and skirts are pointed or scalloped or slashed about the bottom, with narrow ribbon bindings that help set off the lace, of the dancer to the best possible advantage.

ATTIRE OF MEXICAN WOMEN

Poorer Class Accept Without Protest Style of Dress Which Custom Has Dictated to Their Class.

As to the women of peons, their dress is generally somber hued and modest. Its scarlet blanket covers them, but a dice ribbon, or shawl, which is generally placed over the head in lieu of a hat.

The women of the poorer classes accept, with what to the foreigner seems

Designed to adorn the corsage of the afternoon or evening gown, to nestle in the close-fitting contours of the waist in the guise of elegance and coiled or to the ruff, the corsage bouquet is blooming in the midst of increasing favor. In truth, it is creeping over but rarely deserves the name of a bouquet. Single flowers, or a flower and bud, made of ribbon or velvet, or of delicate foliage, or large millinery flowers with ribbon in the same color as their foliage, bound about the stems, make up the big majority of these exquisite accessories.

The dark colors that are favored this season, and the furore for furs, make it possible for the corsage flower to appear at its best. In street and evening clothes they form exactly the right background for it. Also the corsage bouquet is as much an adjunct with evening dress as natural flowers are.

The most "early corsage" or "vanity flower," is shown in the group of blossoms pictured here. Violets, pansies, roses, made of ribbon set in millinery foliage, and a conventional dahlia, with mahogany brown and rose foliage. The fourth flower is not meant for the corsage, but for use on the dressing table. It is a beautiful receptacle for one of the small fine lotion vanities, for each of those Dou-ere is more than it seems, and has another good reason, besides that of being beautiful, for being concerned in the belongings of fair women. In the heart of each is a small box of French powder in the form of a tiny cake. The little fat powder puff fits in the box and is hidden by the petals or stamens of the flower.

These vanity flowers are captivating and very convenient. They make fine holiday gifts.

New Flowered Ribbons.

The new ribbons are lovely, some flowered, some striped, some plain with picot edge. Others satin show the edge of gold or silver foliage, the trend of fashion for all things made of gold or silver continues, showing two colors, and one side of satin, the other of moire or faille. Evening gowns are trimmed with ribbon, tattered and perky bows are made of them, negligees are bound with ribbon. Plaid ribbon in inch width trims the hats, tall bloomers of georgette crepe or net, and forms a low and band to hold the high collar in position. A similar band and bow holds the sleeves in at the wrist.

To Keep Shirtwaists Fresh.

This is the way I keep my shirtwaists fresh and minus wrinkles. Take a yard or thirteen of tape, and sew both ends together, then hang it on a hook in the clothes chest. Pin up your shirtwaists by the two shoulder seams at the top of the sleeves, bring them together so that the front of the shirtwaists are on the outside, and put on the ribbon. The little pin holes will either be in the seams or in the fullness of the sleeves, and won't show. One tape will accommodate five shirtwaists, at least, when a particular waist is wanted it can be taken from the tape, and the rest left as is, as necessary in the case of the shirtwaist not worn, tomorrow, the waist wanted is at the very bottom.—Good Housekeeping.

THE THANKSGIVING DINNER.

Every homekeeper delights in serving some novelty of dish or decoration for her Thanksgiving table. Each year in the budget has its favorite or old ones with a new dress. Turkeys of papermache, or of cardboard, filled with Marshmallow bonbons, Marshmallow gobblers, browned in crumbs, may be used as cake ornaments or as favors on candy boxes. Some original touch which has been thought out by the hostess herself will mean much, for original ideas are things which take the thought, anyone can do a little money may buy pretty things, but she who works out of her own supply adds a thing fetching is fully appreciated by her friends.

A bouquet of yellow flowers, like the small chrysanthemum, grown in our gardens, may be taken up a few days and kept for Thanksgiving. The Roman hyacinth is another flower that may be grown for Thanksgiving.

When the price of a turkey is too much for the family purse to afford, try some substitutes. They cannot take the place of the Thanksgiving bird, which we all enjoy, but when expense must be considered these dishes will be most satisfactory.

Braised Beef Tongue—Wash the tongue well and put it into a kettle of fresh cold water, bring the water to a boil and let it simmer until the tongue is tender. Remove the skin carefully and lay the tongue in a pan surrounded by chopped carrots, celery, an onion and the liquor in which the tongue was cooked. Cover closely and bake an hour. Take out the tongue and put on a platter. Rub the vegetables through a sieve and add to the gravy. Season with salt, Worcestershire sauce and pepper.

A leg of pork, stuffed with a highly seasoned sage dressing and roasted, makes a fine dish. Add a little cider to the meat while basting, serve with tart, baked apples.

AUTUMN MEATS.

Our first turkeys cost only the poorder and shot to bring them down, but the girls, in their pretty aprons, look other things than pretty. Yet a cry of "Poor dear!" she breathed sadly. "She looks so cold and starvedlike, and she hasn't been wanted for a week. Some folks cannot be trusted with children, wicked, cruel things they are. Where did you find the child, policeman?"

"Find the child, woman!" snarled the policeman angrily. "I didn't find her at all. Make my own kid!"

How He Saw the Louvre.

A French literary man fell in with one of the new order of American commercial men the other night and asked him if he had seen the sights of Paris.

"Yes" he said, "but I find that the police have closed most of the sights."

"Oh, no," said his literary friend, "the real sights of Paris, the monuments, the great works, as—the Pantheon, Notre Dame, the Invalides, the Madeleine and the Louvre."

"Ah, yes, I have seen the Louvre thoroughly."

"Thoroughly!" said the French homme de lettres in surprise, recalling the labyrinthine windings of the Louvre collection, "and how long did it take you?"

"Fully an hour," was the reply, which has left the Frenchman puzzled ever since

SEASONABLE DAINTIES.

Green peppers are so common and may be grown in any summer garden that it seems as if we might serve them often and learn to appreciate them for one of our most appetizing vegetables.

Peppers Filled With Cheese.—Take a cupful and a fourth of cream cheese, with a teaspoonful of salt, a teaspoonful of onion juice, a wash of red pepper, thicken with cracker crumbs and fill the peppers, bake a light brown and serve with tomato sauce.

Salsify Soup.—Scrape a dozen salsify roots and cut them in thin slices, drop into boiling water and cook for an hour or until tender. Just before serving add an ounce of shredded codfish, two tablespoonfuls of butter, a pint of milk and a half cupful of cream. Season to taste and serve piping hot.

Salad of Lemon Jelly.—Soak two tablespoonfuls of gelatin in a teacupful of cold water; then dissolve in two cupfuls of boiling water. Add a cupful of sugar, a half cupful of lemon juice, one green pepper cut in shreds, a third of a cupful of celery cut in slices, a fourth of a cupful of almond meats, sprinkled. Wines and liquors lessen gelatin, so it is time to add the vegetables and nuts. Mold in individual cups, and serve on a bed of lettuce with mayonnaise dressing.

Cocoa Dessert.—Bake in gem pans little spiced fruit cakes, and when cooled split them and place in three slices and put them together with sweetened whipped cream. Served on a pretty plate over with a paper doily there or of be no doubt of a dish.

Don't idly dream! There is no time for it in the morning.
No time to drone and loiter on the way,
Work is worth each day in exchange for pay.
What, did you deign to waken, will not stay.

GOOD THINGS FOR THE TABLE.

Bananas are always in the market, and this dish is worth the trouble in making. Line a deep dish thoroughly with slices of the banana pulp, also the juice of a lemon, strained, and sweetened to the other fruit juice. Chill, then stir in a cupful of cream whipped, and the juice of half a lemon. Put the mixture into a ring mold. When unmolded fill the center with whipped cream garnished with thinly sliced bananas.

Grape Sherbet—This is another dish that may be made any time of the year. Take four cupfuls of water with two cupfuls of sugar for 30 minutes, add the juice of two lemons and two oranges, and one cupful of grape juice. Soften one and a half tablespoonfuls of gelatin in a cupful of water; add to the cider mixture, cool and strain into a freezer. Freeze and serve in sherbet cups with a spoonful of whipped cream on top.

Date Cookies.—Cream one cupful of butter, add two cupfuls of brown sugar, add a teaspoonful of salt, bake soda, add a little minced onion and parsley and a tablespoonful of sweet milk, add one and one-half pounds of dates, cut in small pieces, add two tablespoonfuls of sour milk, add a teaspoonful of cinnamon, allspice, and cloves, between four and five cupfuls of flour. Add a cupful and a half of chopped dates, mixed with some flour, roll out and cut with a wooden cutter. Bake in moderate oven.

Raisin Fritters—Mix together a cupful of flour, a teaspoonful of cream and flour, add a half cupful of sugar, a fourth of a teaspoonful of salt, and a quarter cupfuls of milk and the beaten yolks of three eggs, cook in a hot butter 15 minutes, then add a half cupful of raisins and pour into a buttered dish to cool. Then cut on a board and cut in squares, dip in egg crumbs and try in hot fat. Serve with a hard sauce or with a lemon sauce, if preferred.

Tomato Rolled, placed on buttered toast, sprinkle with grated cheese, then placed in the oven long enough to melt the cheese is an appetizing dish to serve for lunch or supper.

Spoil Lives of Weak Men Only.

"The man whose life can be "ruined" by a woman is the weakest of men. You do yourself great injustice when you think that a woman depends upon that one particular girl. It does not. Many a man does life worth living because a Christian girl does not know enough to carry him.

We wonder sometimes have heard of Walt Whitman if it had not been for a case of disappointed love.

"Out of this I have written these songs," said Whitman.

Great Men.

The search after great men is the dream of the young and the despair of manhood. We travel into foreign parts to find their worse—if possible, to get a glimpse of them. . . . I count him a great man who inhabits a higher sphere of thought, into which other men rise with labor and with difficulty. He has but to open his door, and let in things in a true light and in large relations; while those who make political corrections, and keep a vigilant eye on many sources of error. But the great man must be related to us. I cannot tell what I may do when I feel a strong sense that there are persons who, by their character and actions, answer questions which I have not skill to put. One man answers some questions; another some of his contemporaries put, and is insulted.—Emerson.

PRANK PLAYED BY HURRICANE

New Orleans Clothier's Stock Was Swept Out of His Store into the Street.

Although the angry wind carried through space a veritable footlinde of cloths, slates and bits of broken glass a fringe of venturesome men stood within the scant protection afforded by the sheds on the river side of St. Charles street and with necks at a dangerous angle gazed up at the great tall chimney on the lower side of the Masonic temple during the hurricane the other afternoon.

It seemed awaiting to and fro as though to the accompaniment of the wind's melancholy hum, and such cries as "It's going to fall now" and "Get ready to dodge the bricks!" went up from the expectant crowd.

The batteries of the storm not trained their envious guns on the original target of the stately temple. Splendid windows of ancient pattern yielded their fancy glass as tribute to the gale.

The swaying chimney was about to give up its fight for existence. The watching crowds saw it bend, straight as, hence said and then fall with a resounding crash on the roof of the building occupied by a clothing store next door to the temple.

The avalanche of bricks tore a great hole through the skylight and clattered down into the store. And then the opening, filled now and a trifle, let in the mad wind from above and there swirled cascading through the first floor shirts, coats, trousers and all sorts of articles of men's attire.

The wind for a moment showed a festive mood and picked up the clothing store, whirled it up and down St. Charles street, dragged it over the slippery asphalt, and deposited most of it on the shaking roofs of neighboring buildings.

The waters in the buildings along St. Charles street were shattered by the wind and the sidewalkers in the side streets were considerably damaged.—New Orleans Times-Picayune.

Honor Japanese Explorer.

The Japanese people are paying tribute to their late countrymen, the Rev. Kiyai Kawaguchi, who has just returned from a seven years' exploration in the innermost regions of Tibet. Almost a score of years ago Doctor Kawaguchi formed the project of recovering to the world the hidden treasures of primitive Buddhism from the land of the Llamas, away in the alcoves of the world's roof. He succeeded, but he had to come home abandoning the object of his expedition. Later after a long study of the Tibetan language, he made his way through mountain and forest and overcoming many hardships finally succeeded in entering Tibet three years after his departure from Japan. His wanderings in the interior were mostly in the disguise of a traveling physician. After studying the Tibetan religion and conferring with the Llamas, he was given copies of the Sanskrit Buddhist scriptures and returned to Japan.

Squaring All Hands.

"The quadruple alliance, trying to square Greece, trying to square Bulgaria and Servia, trying to fact, to square everybody, reminds me of Gottlieb Eichorn."

Ernest Eichorn, the German consul to Savannah, laughed heartily and remarked:

"I met Gottlieb Muller one night with a big bundle of meat under one arm and a big bundle of meat under the other, a bag of flour strung on his shoulder and a toy horse dragging behind him on a string.

"'Hello,' I said, 'you are moving.'

"'No, no,' said Gottlieb. 'I'm on my way to see my girl. I'm caught for her. The meat's for the dog. The flour is for the cat. The toy horse is for the little brother. I've got to square all hands, you know.'"—Washington Star.

Couldn't Digest Dynamite.

Three prize heifers belonging to Cornelia Warren, proprietor of the Cedar Hill farm, Waverly Oaks road, Waltham, exhibed at a tasty stick of dynamite, and died a few minutes later. Veterinary surgeons were called, but were three heifers more emphatically dead.

The explosions were reported. The young cows painfully chewed the dynamite, apparently relishing the flavor. One fled in its tracks in the pasture and the other two succumbed to a barn after a night of bitter rumination.

Miss Warren recently purchased the Ridge Hill farm, adjoining her property, and workmen were blasting tree stumps in the field. It is supposed the heifers dug up some of the dynamite and went to it. Just what happens to a cow when it eats dynamite is not in all the veterinary books, but what does happen happened.—Boston Dispatch Philadelphia Record.

Swiss Hotels Hurt by War.

The Swiss hotel industry is suffering greatly from the war, with a consequent bad effect on the country at large. Statistics prepared for the national exposition at Berne place the amount of money annually put in circulation by tourists in Switzerland at approximately 200 million francs. Of this sum about $1,000,000 represents receipts from hotel coupons, $400,000 increased telegraph and telephone receipts, while customs receipts are likewise much augmented during the tourist season. Further, the national railways derive $5,000,000 to $4,000,000 from tourist traffic annually. In 1912—which was taken as an average year—there were 3,555,000 tourist visitors in Switzerland, employing 48,000 people, whose salaries exceeded $6,000,000, while the amount of capital invested in the hotel industry reached the sum of $237,000,000.

A bright rainbow in the darkness was an unusual phenomenon observed at Harrisburg, Ore., about seven o'clock at night. The full moon shone through the clouds in the eastern sky while a shower of rain fell just west of Harrisburg.

Bumper Grain Crops

Good Markets—High Prices

Prizes Awarded to Western Canada for Wheat, Oats, Barley, Alfalfa and Grasses

The winnings of Western Canada at the Soil Products Exposition at Denver were easily made. The list comprised Wheat, Oats, Barley and Grasses, the most important being the prizes for Wheat and Oats said sweep stake on Alfalfa.

No less important than the splendid qualities of Western Canada's wheat and other grains, is the excellence of the cattle fed and fattened on the grasses of that country. A recent shipment of cattle to Chicago topped the market in that city for quality and price.

Western Canada produced in 1915 one-third as much wheat as all of the United States, or over 300,000,000 bushels.

Canada in proportion to population has a greater exportable surplus of wheat than any other country in the world, and at present prices you can figure what this means to the farmer. Government statistics show that the cultivation of wheat has been so much more profitable than the raising of cattle, that the Canadian Government has decided to discourage the export of cattle, and other great attractions. There is no war tax on land and no conscription.

URGES CAUTION IN TAKING UP FOX FARMING

United States Department of Agriculture Gives Valuable Information on Subject.

SLUMP IN PRICE OF FURS

Former Rates Not Based on Fur Value of Animals, But on Breeding Possibilities—Choice of Location Is of Prime Importance.

Washington, D. C.—Those thinking of engaging in fox farming as a source of profit should consider carefully the contents of the data given by the expense of equipping a farm, and would do well to weigh carefully the conservative statement as to the profits from this industry, contained in United States Department of Agriculture bulletin No. 261, "The Domestication of the Silver Fox."

The bulletin points out that the prices of fox skins of breeding animals have fallen considerably since July, 1914, and states that the prices running into thousands of dollars formerly paid for live silver foxes were based not on the fur value of the animals, but on their possibilities as breeding animals, in an industry in which there was great speculative excitement. On the "fine business of fox breeding will be on a basis more stable than that at present when the value of breeding animals depends in addition to the value of their pelts in the open market, the price of which has fallen from prior to 1910 when realized mainly from the sale of pelts since they have been derived almost entirely from the sale of breeding stock for breeding purposes. There has been a recent sharp decline in the price of breeding stock.

Location is Important.

The choice of location of a fox farm is an important matter. The land must be cheap, commercial feed must be grown in the region, and the climate must be favorable to the domestication of fur bearers. The climate of the middle and southern states is not well suited to this industry, as it is very difficult to keep low prices commanded by furs from these areas. The rate of increase in these areas is considered with considerable doubt, and the cost of raising one cannot pay the exorbitant prices asked for breeding purposes some times bring and expect to raise fur pelts to be sold at prices one expect to raise furs of a fine quality from inferior stock. Use even a superior strain of breeding stock and pelts, a favorable location, a love for animals and an ordinary amount of ability, may engage in black or silver fox farming with a good prospect of success. Success, of course, a high price for pelts is assumed. Values of animals and pelts were very high a few years ago, when the industry was being launched, but are now on a much lower basis. There is no comparable profit actually in the business or investing their money in corporations or companies organized for farming should investigate thoroughly all phases of the business.

The records show that 133 silver fox skins of all grades sold in 1914 at a London auction sale realized an average value of only $115 each.

How to Get "Silvers."

The silver fox is simply a color phase of the common red fox. The "silver fox" as commonly used means "silver fox" as distinguished from the dark phases of the common red fox. These are called silver, silver gray, silver black, or black, and it is not generally known if the gray, or true fox, the fur of which is of comparatively little value. The red, the typical cross fox, the silver, and the black fox all interbreed and when one occurs occasional examples of the others may be expected. This fact can be used, as the bulletin points out, to develop silvers by cross breeding, and selective breeding to intensifying the silver color. Breeding to produce non-sexual animals was to produce fox pelts, that is considered.

The most valuable skins are those in which the entire pelage is dark at the base and covered with pure white. The black skins recently have fallen below silvers because furriers find that the red and black silver fox can be dyed whitever the red fores lose in the wild state but will produce superior fur only in regions where the fox naturally produces a superior fur. A study of the biological survey show that such conditions occur only north of the southern boundary of the Canadian zone. This boundary, as shown by a map in the bulletin, crosses the states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota and South Dakota, and extends southward along the mountains in New York, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and in all the states of the high mountain region and westward. South of the forested regions of the northern tier of states and western Oregon, however, the Canadian zone, although sufficiently cold, is too dry and sunny for the production of first-class fur in the transition zone, a region less cold, producing a fair quality, or for may be raised, but the best are produced only in more northern latitudes.

How to Start Farm.

To raise silver foxes calls for a pair of foxes which will cost from $150 to $250 each for the common others, up to several thousand dollars each for the best silvers. The yards in which they are kept must have high and strong wire-net or board fences with an overhanging at the top to prevent the foxes from crawling over. These fences either have to be sunk in the ground or the fence wire has to be extended as a mat on the ground to prevent the animals from digging out. The cost of yards ran from $100 to $150 each, which includes the making of the special dens needed for the animals. The equipment is described in detail in the bulletin. The total investment for a fox farm are such ground, wooded land in a sparsely settled region, a good breeding stock, equipment, and a fox farm, which is not subject to outside disturbance. Young ranch must have good drainage and must be partially shaded by a young growth of deciduous trees. Each pair of foxes should have a runway of about 2,500 square feet, and proximate should be made for separating them. One reason for properly equipping the yards and locating them away from outside interference is the fact that the vixen is very nervous about her cubs and frequently mismanages, kills them in attempts to hide them from imaginary dangers. Seclusion is an important feature because foxes do not tame readily and become frightened at the least change of persons in charge, like the nervous doe, and consequently has a decided effect on them.

Thrive on Varied Diet.

Foxes require some special attention, certain skill in breeding, and great care in feeding. They thrive on a varied diet, including meat, bread, milk, eggs, and poultry, or scraps, but they are easily injured, especially when young, by improper food. It costs from $1.25 to $2.50 for food annually, depending on whether they are fed and whether grain and vegetables are raised on the farm. The food annual expense, and a pair of foxes will vary with the locality and value of equipment, etc. On some ranches it has been estimated as follows:

Food for 2 adult foxes	$ [illegible]
Food for 2 young foxes	[illegible]
Depreciation of yards	[illegible]
Total	[illegible]

Interest is not included in this table because it is considered charge for interest on the original cost of the foxes.

The young are born in April or May, the average litter containing four cubs, but as early not of the litter is raised to maturity. Each year, the annual increase of breeding females has not averaged above 100 per cent.

AGED MAN REPAYS KINDNESS

Missouri Girl's Reward Was One-Fourth of Zinc Mine Which Netted $15,000.

Columbus, Mo.—Miss Grethen Dettschmeider, a university of Certhage, Mo., has sold for $15,000 a one-fourth interest in a zinc mine which she received from J. A. Langston, seventy-five, a wealthy resident of Springfield, Mo., because she was kind to him and entertained him while at a summer resort last year in Colorado.

Miss Dettschmeidy and Langston became fast friends during their stay in Colorado, and when she returned home he sent her a deed for the interest in the mine near Commerce, Okla.

She began receiving dividends on her interest in the mine last March and was getting $100 a week when she sold. She says "you never can tell," she says, "when the prick of sine is going down or the ore deposit is going to go 'blind.'"

PREACHER PAID IN EGGS

Circuit Rider's Story Told at Conference of Methodist Church Causes Some Surprise.

St. Louis.—The hardships of a Methodist circuit rider were brought forcibly to the attention of the city ministers attending the St. Louis conference of the Methodist episcopal church, when one country preacher reported that in the last two months he had received half of a hog and a great many eggs, but no money.

He had sent twelve dozen eggs to the district superintendent, he said.

Another circuit rider said he had received $19 in two months, and a third that he had received no money, but that his parishioners had promised to buy him a horse before winter and had entertained him liberally in their homes.

HEIR TO GOULD MILLIONS

John Doe No. 194, alias Austin McCleary, as he was called when he was a homeless waif, is now romping around Londhurst, at Irvington-on-Hudson, the estate of Mr. and Mrs. Finley J. Shepard, now known as Finley Jay Shepard, Jr., heir to the Gould millions. Mr. Shepard and his wife, who was Miss Helen Miller Gould, recently appeared before Surrogate William A. Brewster of Westchester county at White Plains and formally adopted the four-year-old boy who was found on the steps of St. Patrick's Cathedral by a policeman, near midnight of September 12, 1914. The boy was taken to the Children's society, from where he was transferred to St. Christopher's home at Dobbs Ferry. Here the child attracted the attention of Mrs. Shepard, who visited the institution in the interests of the Big Sister movement. She was attracted by his hair and eyes, and his affection was demonstrative, and this attraction finally led to the boy's adoption.

SHE WAS AFRAID TO EAT

Greek Girl Worried Sick on Trip to Coast to Meet Her Husband-to-Be.

Sacramento, Cal.—Unable to speak English and fearing to make it known, she had money, last harm befall her, Miss Vasiliki, nineteen years old, travelled alone from her home in Greece to Sacramento to meet her husband-to-be. Almost starved during the four days of her journey from New York city, through 21 states.

Ignorance of the customs of the country and thinking that her journey would end within an hour or so, she did not eat on the entire trip, because of her fear to make it known that she had over $100 in her possession.

Almost completely exhausted, she staggered into the arms of the Y. W. C. A. guide. Through an interpreter her story was learned. Her lover, James Kalios, has been located at Mount Shasta county, and the wedding will take place as soon as she has fully recovered from her experience of four days without eating.

First United States Treasurer.

Alexander Hamilton was the first secretary of the treasury (1789-94). Michael Hillegas was the first United States treasurer. Hillegas was appointed to the office July 29, 1775, when he and George Clymer were chosen together in the formation of what was the germ of the treasury department. Hillegas served alone through practically his entire term, however, as Clymer soon resigned to take a seat in congress to congress. Hillegas term expired September 11, 1789, and he was succeeded by Samuel Meredith. Both men were from Pennsylvania. The treasury department was formally organized by act of September 2, 1789, but, strictly speaking, this was merely a reorganization, for the department under various names had been in existence since 1775.

WAR UPON PAIN!

Pain is a visitor to every home and usually it comes quite unexpectedly. But you are prepared for every emergency if you keep a bottle of Sloan's Liniment handy. It is the greatest pain killer ever discovered. Simply lay on the skin—no rubbing required—it drives the pain away. It is really wonderful.

Marvin H. Hunter, Berkeley, Calif., writes: "Last Saturday, after traveling around the Panama Exposition with my feet, I came home with my neck so stiff that I couldn't turn my head without pain. Liniment I never used before, but the first application of Sloan's Liniment gave me immediate relief and almost disappeared four hours after the second application. I was as good as new."

Found Plungers' Oil Supply.

It was known to the English admiralty that German submarines operating in the North sea were obtaining oil from some point of the Dutch coast. For a long time the most careful search failed to disclose the source of this supply. Every ship going out of port was minutely examined, but nothing was discovered.

The oil supply remained a mystery until one day a ship, which had come in, delivered its cargo and was about to go out again into the North sea was observed to carry on its decks more cable than seemed necessary. In fact, the whole deck of the ship was decked with coiled rope. It occurred to one of the English customs officers that this type of ship could have no use for so much cable. An investigation was made. It was found that the great brass on the deck were merely ropes wrapped round metal drums. The drums were filled with oil.—Melville Davisson Post, in the Saturday Evening Post.

DIRECTING ARTILLERY FIRE.

KING VICTOR EMMANUEL OF ITALY

VICTOR EMMANUEL III, the scholar and student among present-day monarchs, the sovereign of quiet family life, when the call to war sounded, became at once the first soldier among Italian soldiers, says the Milwaukee Sentinel. Was a monarch of sentiment more complete than at any time in a generation the nation rallied around the king as the bearer of the national flag. Socialists, liberals and republicans not only forgot their special doctrines and creeds, but vied with one another in becoming more loyalist than the monarchical followers themselves.

A first natural tendency was to exaggerate, with a wealth of detail more or less important, the simplicity and democratic character of the king's life at the front. A little of this, however, goes a long way and the Italian press has been prompt in putting a stop to the multiplying of little homely tales which are liable to carry with them an element of irritation.

A few letters from soldiers to their families suffice to give all the information of this kind about the king's daily life that is considered important to be known, as an instinctive upon them might naturally lead to the inference that in this form of existency is comprised the monarch's entire activities with the army. Such a letter is the following, from Private Francesco Menegotto, addressed to his father:

"I recently found myself near the king, in an observatory which I had helped to build. As agile as a hare he moved around from one corner to another. I assure you that he is exceedingly brave. He eats lunch with us and divides his portion of ham and cheese with us and afterward gave us four Havana cigars and spoke with us as if he had been himself a simple soldier, asking us many questions." This private failed to note in his letter the fact that he was one of a company who had distinguished themselves in a brilliant action, which was the personal in the day's military operations and that if he and his companions had been signally honored by the king, it was not because the latter mingles on all occasions more or less familiarly with his privates, but as recompense and encouragement for duty well performed.

The king himself is a soldier and is consulted by General Cadorna, the chief of staff, on every movement of importance and regarding the daily rise of existence, but he leaves to the commanders the performance of their various functions, and the outside cold, in a mistaken zeal of exaggerated loyalty, by some correspondents regarding the actual direction of artillery fire or infantry movements, like the king himself are protested against by all serious persons as defeating their purpose, besides being literally incorrect.

The press of Italy today dwells only on such incidents as may be considered symbolic, such as the event narrated in a letter by Soldier Franco Tumiotti when he wrote:

The King's Presence Cures.

"Of much influence on the minds of our soldiers is the presence of our beloved king, and in this regard I wish to tell you the incident that happened to a sergeant of artillery named Vincenzo Sanicra, a native of Vallisinga. This poor fellow after fighting for a long time, was severely wounded in the arm and was found by the ambulance corps in an unconscious condition. When he recovered his senses we observed with distress that he had become dumb and that he had lost the power of speech.

"It happened that at that moment our sovereign was in the neighborhood and, learning of the sad case, he hastened with his customary paternal solicitude to the bedside of the injured man. So great was the emotion experienced by the soldier at the sight of the king that speech suddenly returned to him and he was free from the nervous crisis that had been brought on by the sudden shock. He had hardly finding that he was wounded and raised fulltiny into the hands of the enemy as a prisoner.

"The first cry that issued from his lips was, 'Long live Italy! Long live our beloved king!' The sovereign, touched by the words, patted the soldier on the head and said: 'My brave boy, you are a true Italian.'"

Victor Emmanuel comes well by his martial qualities. Scion of the royal dynasty of Savoy and grandson of that doughty warrior, King Victor Emmanuel II, he was born in Naples on November 11, 1869, and bore the title of prince of Naples till his accession to the throne on July 29, 1900. Married in Rome on October 24, 1896, to Princess Helen of Montenegro, he became the father of four children—Princess Yolanda, born in 1901; Princess Mafalda, born in 1902; Princess Giovanna, born in 1907, and Prince Umberto, born in September 15, 1904, and Princess Giovanna, born in 1907.

The then prince of Naples entered the Italian army in 1897 as sublieutenant; he became colonel in 1900, major general two years later, lieutenant general in 1904 and general in command of the forces at Naples in 1907.

King Victor Emmanuel is honorary doctor of laws of the universities of Oxford and Pennsylvania, honorary commander in several foreign armies, a Knight of the Garter and an authority on numismatics. A volume published by him on this subject was recently crowned by the Institute of France.

An exceptionally happy incident, which has made its due impression on a people of such artistic tastes as the Italians, was the recent discovery, or, rather, rediscovery, of a war lyric by one of Italy's great poets, which is being adopted by popular acclaim as the national anthem.

When Victor Emmanuel of Sardinia had undertaken the redemption of Italian provinces, over half a century ago, Giosue Carducci had composed a noble poem, with the title "To the King—A National Song." So some strange fate it was neglected and then forgotten.

Its every line is today appropriate to the work of redemption of Italian provinces undertaken by Victor Emmanuel III.

War Fixes the Nation's Attention.

The king's name should not be handled about, in the declaration of an Italian writer made in the Tribuna. The marvels of activity, of courage, of abnegation, of heroic and smiling fearlessness shown by King Victor Emmanuel, says this writer, marvels constantly renewed and constantly increasing to heights unsurpassed by others, have insinuated into the pure air one breathes and the pure sky one contemplates for the calming of fears and the exaltation of the spirit. It is impossible to succeed in giving adequate account of these and it is dangerous to weave a crown of anecdotes.

Some might be led to form a mental picture of the king through an anecdote which should not and cannot be regarded otherwise than as a symbol.

Let us how reverently, be says, let us not try to build up images that would only be inferiorities, that would sound as profanations. Let us keep in our heart with regard to the king a religious sense, a mystic feeling.

In a correspondence from the front a noted French writer, Mr. Jean Carrere, after describing the king's life in the field, dwells upon the degree to which Victor Emmanuel has become popular with his army and his people.

"Before the war, he says, Victor Emmanuel was profoundly respected by all, admired by those who had the honor to approach him, beloved by those around him, but, perhaps, in the precise and broader sense of the word, he was not absolutely popular. This he remarked, for reasons which are profoundly to the honor of the monarch. It seemed to be popular in the time of peace a sovereign must have certain external forms of exuberance, a certain quality for pomp and show and, if one may adopted a modern term, a certain quality for "bluff." All these were repugnant to the straightforward, sincere and to some extent democratic nature of the king of Italy. He would certainly never have consented to lend himself to any of those displays and theatricalities by which certain other sovereigns loved to put themselves in evidence.

Leads the Simple, Laborious Life.

In Italy, where all are so intimately simple, where domestic life is so intimately pleased his the first of the nation's nobles, to lead the simple, laborious life of a great bourgeois, he set the example of the domestic virtues, and yet these qualities, however commendable in themselves, had, so to say, the inconvenience of not being visible from near at hand and of making no sensational impression on the judgment of the crowd; which is always fond of a certain amount of the theatrical. Scarcely had the great upheaval of the war come to call forth from the depths of the popular soul all the great qualities that were latent in it, than Italy in its entirety drew itself up before its new destiny and then, all of a sudden, the people remarked to its king the most vital qualities of Italy itself and recognized in him their true leader.

This king, to whom the most captious critics could only reproach a certain want of military display, at once made the finest of all displays shine around him, namely, that of courage, of royal love for the people and the army, of the tenpidity in the presence of danger, of kindness for the woes of the humble. That civilizing prestige which gives a great sovereign the cause to irradiate around the truly noble souls, irradiates now around Victor Emmanuel. He has proved today that the best means of being a popular king in a great country is to show himself one deserving.

Private communications are not held directly with the king, as we have said, but through the intermediary of his staff.

On certain more important occasions Count Calderara, the president of the senate, has had an opportunity may be accorded the public to read an interesting letter addressed by Prime General Cadorna to the editor of the Idea Nazionale, who had written to announce the offer of 10,000 lire ($10,000), made by a Milan merchant, for distribution among the soldiers who may capture the first Austrian flags. The Italian commander wrote:

A Letter From the Chief.

"I have had Mr. Clerici's generous and patriotic offer communicated to the troops under my command. In my name and in theirs I beg you to express to the donor our gratitude for the munificent act, a new proof of the admirable rivalry in generosity that all classes, from the most conspicuous to the most humble, in supplying the army with a flow of affection and confidence, the army which, with Italy in its heart, offers every day with serene joy the example of the most elevated spirit of sacrifice. I am personally grateful to you for your noble and flattering sentiments and for your good wishes, which I return in the name of our brave soldiers.

"Signor Clerici could not have chosen a more worthy messenger than you, whose untiring work as a militant apostle contributed so much to strengthen the spirit of national awakening and vocation of rights, through which the dream, sighed for by our fathers, has at last been formed, by the force of arms and of national virtues, into a radiant reality."

Probably more than any other army today the Italians are spurred on by a battle cry, the word "Savoia," Savoy. It is the dynastic name of the royal house, and in uttering it the soldier thinks of his beloved king, of Vittorio Emanuele di Casa Savoia.

Loved to Put Himself in Evidence.

A famous Pontifical regiment, the Noble Guards, were drawn exclusively from the Roman aristocracy until about two years ago. At that time the pope sanctioned acceptance of recruits from any country, the only provision being that they prof as the Catholic religion.

FIRST TO BUILD TRENCHES

Romans Instituted System of Field Fortifications Which Are Used by the Armies Today.

The Romans, who were the first to make a real science and art of war, were responsible for one of the most fertile inventions in western Europe—the fortified frontier. This does not mean the ordinary fortified frontier as it was known up to 1914—a series of strong fortified camps with unfortrenched gaps between them. It was in semi-western Germany that the Romans built as a protection against the inroads of German barbarians, what was the prototype of the line of trenches which today runs from Switzerland to the North sea. And just as the German trenches in France and Belgium are to all intent and purposes the frontier of the German empire, so the Roman trenches—the limes Germanicus—were part of the frontier of the Roman empire.

The northern—known in ancient times as the Pfahlengraben or pallade ditch—ran from the east bank of the Rhine, near Bonn, across the Taunus mountains and the Main in a general southeasterly direction south to near Stuttgart. It consisted of an earthen wall with a ditch—the trench being, of course, on the outside and the wall being the position of the defenders. The wall was topped by a palisade, and at intervals there were towers—horgi—occupied by small bodies of troops, who patroled the intervening sections of wall. At longer intervals were stone redoubts—castella—where larger bodies of guards were stationed. One of the peculiarities of this frontier—which, in its details does not appear, of course, an artificial boundary through what at the time was a very sparsely settled country—was that a stretch of about fifty miles in length ran in a straight line due north. It is known that prior to its English and German writings as one of the ancient known boundaries on the American plan.

Near Bingen the Pfahlengraben meets the Teufelsmauer—the devil's wall—which was the name given in mediaval Germany to the Roman line of the limes Germanicus—a rampart of stone which extends a little south of east till it meets the Lauhbe at Hoegensburg. There were forts at intervals to strength this, and in the main it was apparently garrisoned much like the Pfahlengraben.

Mixed Vaccination.

"One of the most signal advances recently made in the prophylactic art of vaccine," says the Medical Record, "is Castellani's method of combined vaccination, which is now being used on an extensive scale in France and Italy."

Doctor Castellani has prepared ten combinations of vaccines, each containing the micro-organisms from three to six different diseases, and has found the following highly satisfactory results. The combinations are as follows.

(1) Typhoid, with two varieties of paratyphoid. (2) Typhoid with Malta fever. (3) Typhoid, two paratyphoids and Malta fever. (4) Typhoid, two paratyphoids and cholera. (5) Typhoid, two paratyphoids and four different varieties. (6) Typhoid, two paratyphoids and four different varieties. (7) Cholera with bubonic plague. (8) Cholera, typhoid and paratyphoids. (9) Cholera, bubonic plague, typhoid and two paratyphoids. (10) The same, with Malta fever.

In the Event of a Mistake.

Louis S. and Joe M. live within a square of each other, on North Jefferson avenue. Joe is a mischievous good boy, but Louis is what his parents call shrewd. Though the neighbors sometimes use a different name for it.

A few days ago the boys were speculating on the possibility of obtaining a dollar, and eventually made the proposition of it.

"If I had a dollar I'd buy 50 cents' worth for mother, a quarter's worth for dad and a quarter's worth for sister," said Joe.

Louis looked thoughtful.

"What would you do if you had a dollar, Louie?" questioned Joe.

"If I had a dollar, I'd have it first class counterfeit, then spend it—see?"

"Well?"

"Then into dimes, then nickels, then pennies—

"And in the meantime, if anybody made a mistake, it wouldn't be me," finished the—infinitesimal—Louis.

Why Hindu Port Avoids Japan.

A traveler returned from India to Japan, according to the East and West News, tells why Sir Rabindranath Tagore gave up his proposed visit to the land of the Rising Sun. First, he says, because the Hindu poet, like other poets, changes his mind frequently; second, because his tenants are suffering from want of food; third, because the Japanese are so afraid of Japan who absend Tagore's confidence, pretending to be an admirer of the poet's most refined works and all the while secretly addicted to London music hall songs. "He sings for hours in private," the poet is reported to have said, "and I am afraid he represents, or scorn, "what he calls 'Tipperary'!"

Mere Trifle.

"War anecdotes seem to be popular just now," remarked the public man.

"So they are," answered his sorrowful wife.

"Hum. Couldn't you credit a few anecdotes of that sort to me."

"It would be rather difficult, as you haven't been in Europe since the war started."

"What difference does that make? I've never been in Italy, but that doesn't prevent me from quoting Cicero in my political speeches."

Fiction Becomes Solid Fact.

The romancing of movies' scriptwriters comes out true once in a while in spite of everything, a case in point being the coal production of Spitzbergen, one of the most desolate islands of the Arctic ocean, where mines financed by American capital produced twenty 40,000 tons of coal last year.

CALLS FOR VOICE PERFECTION

Oratorio Singing Perhaps the Highest Form of Music That Is Known to the World.

"The singing of oratorio is the highest perfection of all, and few are granted the specialized gifts needed to exercise it to perfection," says an exchange. "For one really great woman oratorio singer we generally count two or three eminent operatic prima donnas. Oratorio supplies no fictitious aids of scenery, impersonation or story to bring the audience into sympathy with the singer. It is just music in its purest, holiest form, and the artists who can stand up with five hundred stringed instruments behind her and sing 'Let Thine Ayes' or 'O Rest in the Lord,' so as to lift every soul there into the courts of heaven, must have as one would think, learned her art down to earth. A voice such as is heard perhaps once or twice in a century, temperament balanced to equal virtue and simplicity."

HANDICRAFT FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

By A. NEELY HALL and DOROTHY PERKINS

(Copyright, by A. Neely Hall)

A SIGNAL LANTERN.

You boys can easily communicate with one another after dark by means of homemade signal lanterns similar to that shown in Fig. 1.

You will need a small box for the lantern. The dimensions are not important, but ten or twelve inches is about right for the depth, width and length. Fig. 2 shows the completed lantern, and Fig. 3 shows the box before it is put together.

One side of the box becomes the front of the lantern. In the center of the width of the front, a little above the center of the height, cut a slot one inch wide and three inches long, through which to flash the lantern light (Fig. 1 and 2); and make a shutter block (B, Figs. 3 and 5) by which to regulate the lengths of the flashes. Secure a couple of screw eyes into the top edge of the shutter, and a third screw into the center of the bottom edge, and loop a heavy rubber band through the upper pair of eyes, and tie a strong cord to the lower eye (Fig. 5). Then tie the free ends of the rubber bands to a pair of screw eyes screwed into the under side of the lantern, top, in the right position to come directly over the pair in the shutter when it is placed over slot A, and bore a hole through the bottom of the box for the cord attached to the shutter to pass through (Fig. 5). Then, by pulling the cord, the shutter can be opened so light will pass out of a small portion of the slot, for a "dot" of the code, or all the way open, for a "dash" of the code.

The lantern may be lighted either by a candle or a bicycle lamp. If you use a candle, tack a can cover to the lantern bottom for a holder, and tack another to the top to protect the wood from the candle flame. Bore holes through the top for ventilators.

The cover board C (Fig. 2 and 4) is hinged with three strips of leather or tape. Strip D (Fig. 2) provides a place for attaching the wooden button E.

The lantern is now ready for signaling.

The operating key is shown in Figs. 1 and 4. Cut it about eight inches long and of the shape of F (Fig. 4); then nail a block G to a box (Fig. 4), and screw the end of the key to this block. Tie the operating cord to the key, allowing just enough length of cord to reach from the shutter (Fig. 7) down the Morse alphabet code. Cut out and paste this diagram upon a piece of cardboard, and tack the cardboard to the box on which the key is mounted, so you can refer to it always before you. Practice will enable you to memorize it.

BERRY-BOX AND BASKET TOYS.

More toys than you would imagine can be made out of the little berry boxes and baskets.

The little cradle shown in Fig. 1 is made of a berry box with a basket hood. Open the side of the box that is to form the cradle, and fold down and out the doubled pieces (Fig. 2). Then set the box inside of the basket, with the opened side pieces against the basket sides, and sew securely to the basket.

Figure 3 shows the rockers (A) and the upright supports for attaching them (B). Make the rockers two inches longer than the width of the cradle, and cut a slot in the lower end of uprights B just wide enough to slip over the rockers. Figure 4 shows how the uprights should be stitched to the sides of the cradle.

The doll rocker in Fig. 4 is another of the many pieces of berry-box furniture that can be made. Remove one side of a box, and about one-third of each of the adjoining sides and the bottom, and use the remainder for the seat, back and arms of the chair, by selecting the doubled sides of the box for cutting, the upper parts of the rockers can be flipped over and fastened between the doubled pieces (Fig. 4). Cut the rockers by the pattern of Fig. 5, making them long enough to project about an inch in front and one inch behind.

Figure 6 shows a simple wagon made of a berry basket. You may fasten another basket over the end for a hood, if you like, and thus convert the wagon into a doll carriage. Get a pair of large ribbon spools for wheels (Fig. 7), and cut two disks the diameter of a pencil for axles, and a pair of spindles (A, Fig. 7) for connecting the axles to the basket. Make holes just large enough for the axles to fit in, cutting very carefully so as not to split the wood.

The castle in Fig. 8 may be built by any boy who has a spare supply of berry boxes will permit. The windows are cut out of the corners of the boxes, because there is less danger of splitting the wood by cutting them at the corners. Cut the windows in each box of the second tier, to lead out on the drawbridge. The drawbridge can be made either of pieces of a berry box or cardboard.

GOOD THINGS FOR THE TABLE.

This is the chestnut season, and there are many good things to be made with chestnuts.

Chestnut Stuffing.—Blanch a pound of chestnuts and boil until tender, then put through a sieve enough to make three or four cups. Add a cupful of bread crumbs, a little salt, pepper and seasoning, one and one-half tablespoonfuls of poultry dressing, enough of melted butter with salt, pepper, celery salt, sugar and onion to taste. Mix well and stuff poultry or game.

Southern Apple Pone.—Pare and core eleven tart apples and place in a pudding dish. Scald four cupfuls of milk, add a cupful of butter, salt, sugar, and cooking for several minutes. Add one teaspoonful of salt, one cupful each of molasses and suet, finely chopped; bake slowly two hours.

Soft Molasses Cookies.—Take two cupfuls of molasses, one cupful of sour milk, one-half cupful of butter, four and a half cupfuls of flour, one egg, one tablespoonful of ginger, two teaspoonfuls of soda, one teaspoonful each of cinnamon and cloves. Mix molasses and butter into a deep granite saucepan and let it come to a boil. Beat the egg and when the molasses has boiled, add the spices, the ginger and soda and take from the fire. Stir in the sour milk and the flour, then the salt and lastly the melted butter (in sheets or large pans and bake in a moderate oven. Ice sparingly, leaving space for the cookies to expand. Ice with quick icing, lard or roast drippings take the place of butter.

Apple Sandwiches.—Mix one-half cupful of sugar and the grated rind of half a lemon. Put a layer of cold boiled rice or bread crumbs in the bottom of a buttered dish, then a layer of chopped apple, a thin layer of currant jelly and a sprinkling of the lemon rind and sugar. Repeat until the dish is full. Pour over a half cupful of fruit juice or cold water. Cover and bake an hour in a moderate oven. Just before taking from the oven sprinkle with a meringue.

SEASONABLE DISHES.

This homely dish will appeal to the taste of those who like the old New England dishes.

Fish Hash With Bacon.—Take one-half pint of raw salt fish, five medium-sized potatoes, one-quarter of a pound of bacon and a quarter of a teaspoonful of pepper. Shred the fish and pack solidly in a cup. Put the peeled potatoes into a saucepan, cover with cold water and boil until tender. Cook until tender. Fry the bacon in a pan until crisp and brown. Mash the potatoes and fish after draining. Now put the hash into the pan with half of the bacon fat, cook slowly until brown, then turn out on a platter and garnish with the fried bacon.

Mock Venison.—Lay a saddle of mutton, say of about six or seven pounds, in a dish with two sliced onions, pepper, salt, bay leaf, allspice, clove and a few crushed juniper berries. These last are the flavor that gives the meat a game taste. Cover the dish with other vinegar and let stand in a covered dish for four days. Then lard and roast slowly with a little water in the pan.

Danish Stuffing for Turkey.—Soak a dozen and a half prunes over night and boil them until tender. Remove from their juice and stuff the breast of the turkey with the prunes and, when three or four apples pared and quartered. Stuff the rest of the turkey with bread crumbs, carefully seasoned with salt, sweet marjoram, pepper and finely chopped onion, moistened with melted butter and some thick cream. Put the turkey into a moderate oven early and baste often. Make a gravy with the giblets chopped after cooking tender.

Orange Marmalade Icing.—Take a cupful of sugar and a quarter of a cupful of orange marmalade, moisten with boiling water until it is like a thin paste. Boil until it makes a soft ball when dropped in cold water. Beat until creamy, then spread on the cake.

MORE ABOUT TUNNY FISH.

For fear there may be yet a few who do not know this delightfully tasty fish, we feel it our duty to tell them that it is caught in the Pacific, we will repeat. It is a white meat fish, firm, but with a flavor much like chicken. It is also called the turkey of the sea.

A few new ways of serving this fish may be acceptable. Combine it with boiled rice, well seasoned, and made into flat cakes, then browned in fat. It is delicious to serve at any meal.

A small portion of the fish left from a previous meal may be combined with chopped cabbage, a little green pepper and a mayonnaise dressing for a salad.

Served right from the can, hot or cold, with lemon quarters as a garnish and rest, the fish is amply served without any other accompaniment.

Fish Omelet.—Beat four eggs until light, separating the whites and yolks, add four tablespoonfuls of cold water and a cupful of fish, mixed and light, with a fork. Turn into a hot omelet pan which has been buttered with a tablespoonful of butter and lift the edges while cooking, so that the center will be well cooked. Season with salt and pepper and roll out the omelet on to a hot platter. Serve at once.

Tunny on Toast.—Take a rich cream sauce, using two tablespoonfuls each of butter and flour and one cup of milk until smooth, then add a can of the flaked fish, stir and cook until hot, then add two slices of toasted bread for each which have been softened in hot milk.

Tunny may be served in a steamed loaf as one does salmon, combined with mashed potatoes, baked or fried, made into soup, chowder, salad, fritters, cutlets, in fact, any number of dishes which will occur to the cook.

Lemon Sauce.—Into a double boiler mix the juice of two lemons, three tablespoonfuls of butter, a dash of salt and a dash of pepper. When the butter and lemon juice are hot add the beaten yolks of two eggs; mix well and serve at once.

Mrs. A. G. Clemens, West Alexander, Pa., writes: I have used Dodd's Kidney Pills, also Diamond Dinner Pills. Before using them I had suffered for a number of years with backache, also tender spots on my kidneys and had at times black floating specks before my eyes. I also had lumbago and heart trouble. Since using this medicine I have been relieved of my suffering. It is agreeable to me for you to publish this letter. I am glad to have an opportunity to say to all who are suffering as I have done that I obtained relief by using Dodd's Kidney Pills and Diamond Dinner Pills.

SUDDEN DEATH

Caused by Disease of the Kidneys

The close connection which exists between the heart and the kidneys is well known nowadays. As soon as kidneys are diseased, arterial tension is increased and the heart functions are strained. When the kidneys no longer pour forth waste, toxic poisoning occurs, and the person dies and the cause is often given as heart disease, or disease of brain or lungs.

"Hearts and Flowers" is the next Wednesday feature which will be shown at the Majestic December 22. This five part photoplay is a touching story of the life and devotion of a faithful mother to a wayward son. Brought to poverty and want by the reckless spending of her money by a thoughtless son and yet forgiving all in pictured, giving us a glimpse of what real mother love is. Mrs. Thomas Whiffler supported by Beulah Poynter are the artists in this beautiful play.

A committee from the Charlevoix Women's Christian Temperance Union called upon Prosecuting Attorney Lewis last week and presented a petition signed by eighty-eight women, the officers and members of the W. C. T. U. The petition urged the enforcement of the state laws prohibiting the selling or giving of cigarettes to minors and forbidding minors or school boys in pool rooms. The prosecuting attorney assured the committee that the petition would be placed on file and that he would give the citizens the fullest cooperation in the enforcement of these laws.

Owing to circumstances which we could not control, we failed to speak of the recent lecture of John C. Wright before the Charlevoix Historical Society

"Michigan Indians, their manners, customs, legends and traditions," is a subject that is of special interest to the people of this section of the state, in fact the state in general, and we know of no person anywhere who is better qualified to speak or write on this subject than John C. Wright, not only by reason of his studious application to it, but because of the fact that he has been from his childhood a part of it. He comes to the rest-cup practically from the wigwam, with a rich store of knowledge, and the ability to interest his audiences.

JOHN NICHOLLS' FUNERAL

Never in the history of Charlevoix has there been a more spontaneous demonstration of popular esteem for a departed citizen than that shown at the obsequies of Hon. John Nicholls at the Congregational Church last Saturday morning.

The church was filled to overflowing. The sermon of Rev. Dr. Taggart was a most touching tribute to the character and achievements of our "grand old man."

A most significant feature of these last and offices was the fact that the pall-bearers were men who had been in the employ of Mr. Nicholls from twenty-three to forty-one years, and are still in the service of the establishment with which he was so long connected.

NEW DEER LAW WORKED OUT WELL

With the new one-deer law given a good trout in the season which closed November 30, Game Warden William R Oates is more than satisfied that the law is a good one, and insists that the next legislature should go still further and pass a buck deer law.

"The present law cuts down the deer kill to a minimum and takes out of deer hunting what little commercialism there was in it, but a buck law would reduce accidental deaths to a minimum," says Ma'or Oates. "This year, according to unofficial reports to me, there were nine people killed in Michigan.

"Although it is true that only two of these cases were of men who were shot in mistake for deer, the buck law would have eliminated those two. If the buck law is enacted I am sure that hunters will be compelled by law to wait until he sees the horns of a buck coming out of the woods, or if he has to be cautious while going through the woods, he will not be in the habit of shooting human beings for deer.

"The present law unjustionably holds down the hunters going into the northern woods to those who know some thing about hunting."

County Normal Notes

Sadie Blanchard gave some drill in number work to a few of the third graders in the training room one day last week.

The members of the normal class dramatized part of the story of "The Coming of Arthur." They enjoyed the excitement of being Knights of the King.

Phonic charts are being made by the normal students for future use under the instruction of Miss Whiting.

The members of the normal class are taking turns in reading "The Christmas Carol" to the Charlevoix class. They find this a great help in many ways.

Francis Price and Ruth Chellis spent the week end at their respective homes.

The normal students had the opportunity of helping in the Women's Christian Temperance Union program given in the Methodist church Sunday evening. They gave the song "The Flight is On," and with some of the high school girls represented the nineteen states that are already dry.

Wit Always Welcome.

Wit makes its own welcome and exists all distinction. No dignity, no learning, no force of character can make any stand against good wit. It is like ice, on which no dignity of form no majesty of carriage, can plead any immunity; they must walk gingerly according to the laws of ice, or down they must go, dignity and all—Emerson.

There the work already accomplished by the committees will be talked over and the work for the remainder of the winter will be outlined and started.

Petoskey News: The first wild black bear seen or heard of in Emmet county was shot Saturday by Warren Whitman, of Springvale township, and was brought to this city Monday afternoon and sold to a local meat market. Mr Wittman, who for nearly forty years has been a resident of Springvale and in that time killed many bears, says he started the bear about a mile from his farm, which is on section 25, of Springvale township. He immediately took the chase and says he followed the bear for nearly twenty miles, getting him at about two o'clock Saturday afternoon near what is known as Hamby, just south of Indian River.

Traverse City Record: Undersheriff Frank Lahymn left this afternoon for Charlevoix to bring back George Snyder, of this city, for having taken an automobile without the consent of the owner last summer. At the time that the incident was reported to the local police there was no clue to the guilty party, but eventually Chief Carson got in touch with a boy who admitted that he had helped Snyder take the car. Snyder had left the city and the authorities sent word to different sections of the state. This afternoon at one o'clock Chief Carson received a message from Sheriff Novak, of Charlevoix, stating that they had landed Snyder and asking whether he was still wanted here. Instructions were sent back to hold him. The affair was turned over to the sheriff's office and the undersheriff went to bring Snyder back.

DONS OF OXFORD WORK AS NAVVIES

Hasten Munitions to the Men on Battle Line.

DEBUTANTES GIVE HELP.

Professors, Tutors and Dignified Masters of Colleges Hoe Spuds, While Some of the Society Women Sort Crops into Grades—Proceeds of Sale Go to Hospitals.

Oxford, England—Prominent in Oxford's war work is Sir William Osler, the professor of medicine. He is in charge of the Red Cross hospitals established in the Examination Schools building.

One of the interests and a valuable assistant of Sir William's is Dr. W. C. Dunlop, a Russian scholar from New York city, who went to Servia on Red Cross work for six months last year. He is now working on the open air sleeping quarters for wounded in College gardens.

Professor Gilbert Murray, Professor W. J. Rooke, Professor F. Y. Edgeworth and Professor S. R. Marratt have engaged themselves at a nearby arsenal to take the places of the regular ordnance men and tool trucks and shift shells for three ten hour days a week.

There are fifty professors and 275 others, too old or otherwise unfit for military service, who form the women's corps organization, called, after one of its founders, Godiy's army.

"Gilbert Murray is a private in the ranks, and it's great to see him," said one of his fellow dons. "He was paired off with a corporation road mender, and a couple of him trundle forward cases of soap to trucks for Calais and the front. By the end of the day the pair got quite chummy, and when after each trip to the Calais Dickens, they soap the road mender would say, 'Steady on, mate, and easy does it.' Nothing doubted the famous translator of Euripides replied, 'Easy it is, mate.'"

The don went on to tell me that the professors, lecturers, clerks and others of sedentary habits had got over their first bashings of tender hands and aching backs, and that now do four times as much as an equal number of regulars in one of their ten hour days.

"Oh, they jolly well keep steaming all the time," he said. "Of course, they wouldn't be able to keep it up every day, but they are enthusiasts because they are volunteers."

Professors from high Tory Oxford are playing the part of navvies to aid in the munition work of Lilleal Lloyd-George, but it is only one example of the many at Oxford, where war is making several inroads of all classes.

Another is that of the wealthy lady who lent a piece of ground as a novel way of giving work to the unemployed and at the same time furnishing a crop of potatoes. The unemployed who were at the same time enlisted by age or physical health for military service got busy and planted potatoes. But by the time the crop ripe there were permanent jobs left vacant by war had fallen to their lot and the lady found herself with a crop of potatoes in the ground, but no unemployed to get them out.

She called for volunteers from her friends at the university, and the result was that professors, tutors and dignified masters of colleges left their libraries and went out to hoe spuds, while some of the debutantes busied themselves with sorting the crop into grades.

The crop was s'ortlied for sale. Many of the dons who had dug the potatoes took a personal interest in their ultimate destination, so that the lady cleared more than $100 for the military hospitals.

good food and no chance for dissipation. This combination means health and strength.

The French have had to dig themselves in, not merely to fight, but to live. Sometimes the shelters are dug in the earth, with a roof of logs and dirt and stone. More often an advantage of rounding slope is taken to convert into the billets, to borrow in like the woodchuck. Wherever an old gravel pit or quarry gives help the dugouts multiply. There are different levels, corridors, inner chambers to some of them warrens. I passed mile after mile of this earth housing, and now hobbling to point on all the time. Like industrious little woodchucks the French soldiers are making ready against another long winter in the trenches.

School Commissioner's Column

May L. Stewart, Commissioner

A Merry Christmas to you!

Every school has now been visited once, a few have been visited two or three times to date.

The commissioner was visiting schools in Hayes and Bay last week and was overjoyed to find that in this part of the county the old Baldwin readers were almost entirely a part of the dead past, the Redway and Hinman geographies were fast disappearing and the Milne arithmetics were dying a slow but natural death. The uniform texts of the directory were truly most prominent.

Christmas programs everywhere. Christmas trees, Christmas spirit, Christmas giving, Christmas living! Got the germ? It's a splendid contagion!

Maple Grove has two rows of splendid vegetable seeds and some of the best chosen pictures in the county,—a real, live school and possibly a "Standard" prospect.

The teacher of the Alton school gave out twenty-seven monthly certificates of award for November. Alton is figuring on the more light proposition. The state inspector advised a solid wall of light to the left. With these people the question is not "Shall we do this?" but "When shall we do this?"

Wallace, Burgess and the Hoppard schools are competing with splendid attendance records during the past month. Clarion is close in the race.

The Knop school has organized a sewing class.

The Pleasant Valley girls have organized a "Hand Work Circle."

Rock Elm "Standard School" workers have submitted their plans to the state department for approval. The electors mean business in this district.

During this season of the year a number of autumn skin diseases are quite prevalent. All school boards will do well to provide sanitary paper towels for their schools.

The Gill school, out from Clarion, is equipped with a new teacher's desk and receiving chair—some more social money wisely spent.

Three Bills will be ready for their "Standard Plate" early in the new year—a case where it pays to "dig down."

School officers' meeting January 6th. See notice in another column of this paper.

The president of the Marquette normal, Pres. Kaye, will conduct the Teachers Institute in February. Supt. Tyler, of Traverse City, has consented to be present.

The East Jordan Reading Circle will meet again January 8th, at 2 p. m., room 5, high school building. The work may be applied. Progressive teachers will be present.

Boyne City Reading Circle will organize December 19th in the English room of central building. Prospects look bright for a large attendance.

The old year is almost spent. A happy New Year to you!

Possibilities Are No More.

It used to be considered hugely humorous in the old Lome village to say of some bow-legged man that he could not stop a pig in an alley. But now such a bow-legged man so vastly out number swine that it is impossible to try the experiment in more than a comparatively few cases.

Differ as to Earth's Age.

Scientists differ greatly as to the earth's age, estimates varying from 20,000,000 to 150,000,000 years. One of the first estimates was that of John Phillips, who in 1860 based on a study of stratified rock his assertion that the figure lay somewhere "between 38,000,000 and 96,000,000 years."

SYNOPSIS.

—o—

Cassiet, on the steamer Kaiser Fritz, homeward bound from Australia, tries to win the heart of Hilton Toye, who is in love with Blanche, but has quitted her father and Cassiet is dead and finds that Hilton Toye, who shares his stateroom with him, knows Cayzan and also Blanche. Cassiet is a professional burglar and a master. He, the daily papers tell us, shot aboard at Southampton Toye reads that Cassiet is never mentioned and avoids Cassiet's friends second night aboard. Cassiet tells Toye of his detective work and the man he shot. Cassiet is the man Blanche's father, who has been released from prison.

Toye looked disconcerted and distressed, but at the same time frankly puzzled. He apologized none the less readily, with almost humorous conway and politeness, he ended by explaining himself in a single sentence, and that told more than the rest of his straightforward eloquence put together.

"If a man had done you down like that, wou'tn' you want to kill him the very moment you found out, Cassiet?"

The creature of impulse was off at a tangent. "I'd forgive him if he did it, too!" he exclaimed. "I'd move heaven and earth to make him, if he did or not guilty. Wouldn't you in my place?"

"I don't know," said Hilton Toye. "It depends on the place you're in. I guess—I don't know. And, don't know drilling into Carslake's skull like angels."

"I thought I told you," he explained impatiently. "We were in the office together—he was my partner—he wheedled at the business hours I was inclined to keep; let me down lighter in every way than I deserved. You may say it was part of his game. But I take people as I find them. And this, as I told you, Scruton was ten thousand times more sinned against than sinning."

"Are you sure? If you knew it at the time—"

"I didn't. I told you so in the last night."

"Well, I mustn't ask questions," said Hilton Toye, and began folding up his newspaper with even more than his usual deliberation.

"Oh, I'll tell you!" cried Cassiet ungraciously. "It's my own fault for telling you so much. It was in a letter from Scruton's partner that I heard the whole thing. I'd written to him—to ward the end—suggestion thinks. He managed to get an answer through that would never have passed the prison authorities. And—and that's why I came home just when I did," concluded Cassiet: "that's why I didn't wait till after shearing. He's been through about enough, and I've had more luck than I deserved. I meant to take him back with me, to keep the books on our station. If you want to know!" The brusk voice trembled.

Toye let his newspaper slide to the floor. "But that was fine!" he exclaimed aloud. "That's as fine an action as I've heard of in a long time."

"If it comes off," said Cassiet in a gloomy voice.

"Don't you worry. It'll come off. Is he out yet, for aught I know? I mean, do you know Blanche?"

"Rather!" "Yes—since you press it," he wrote to tell me that he was coming out even sooner than he expected."

"Then he was coming out for me," said Hilton Toye. "I guess I'm not running for that stakes."

CHAPTER IV.

Down the River.

At Waterloo the two men parted, with a fair exchange of fitting sarcasms, on the part of Cassiet, false. And yet Cassiet found himself emphatically unable to make any plans at all for the next few days; also he seemed in two minds now about a Jersey street been previously mentioned as his immediate destination; and his step was decidedly slighter as he went off in the direction of the lodging-house, to make sure of some train or other that he might have to take before the day was out.

In the event he did not take that train or any other; for the mere miracle of the new traffic, the new smell of the horseless streets, and the newer joys of the newest of new taxicabs, all worked together and so swiftly upon Cassiet's organism that he had a little colloquy with his smart young driver instead of paying him in Jermyn Street. He nearly did pay him off, and spoke something more than his usual impulsively, as either a liar or a fool with no sense of time or space.

"But that's as quick as the train, my good fellow!" remonstrated Cassiet.

"Quicker!" said the smart young fellow, without dipping his cigarette, "if you were going to take a hansom instead."

The very man, and especially the manners that made or marred him, was entirely new to Cassiet as a product of the old country. But he had come from the bush, and he felt as though he had never been away, where there but for the smell of petrol and the cry of the motor-horn from end to end of those testing gullies of bricks and mortar.

He had accompanied his banker just as far as the bureau of the Jermyn Street hotel. Any way he liked, and he would be back some time before midnight; that was his card. They could enter his name for themselves. He departed, pipe in mouth, open kiffe in one hand, pipe tobacco in the other; and remarks were passed in Jermyn Street as the taxi bounced out west in bellast.

But indeed it was too fine a morning to waste another minute indoors, even to change one's clothes, if Cassiet had possessed any better than the ones he wore and did not rather glory in his rude attire. He was simply and comfortably drunk with the delight of being back. He had never dreamed of its getting into his head like this; at the time he did not realize that it had. That was the beginning of his best. He knew well enough what he was doing and seeing, but inwardly he was illicit blind. Yesterday was left behind and forgotten like the Albert Memorial, and tomorrow was still as distant as the sea, if there were such things as to-morrow and the sea.

Meanwhile what with drinks of darling life, what a noble autumn fancy in the air, how cool in the shadows, how warm in the sun; what a sparkling old river it was to be sure, and yet, if those were the first of the autumn tints on the trees in Castle Street.

There were a funeral, on its way to the Marylebone Road, and Cassiet felt a callous speed. Cassiet dust had time to tear off his great soft hat. It was Blanche's the first time he had seen it since his own father's; no wonder his radiance suffered a brief eclipse. But in another moment he was out on Harley Street.

The others all wanted me to live near them," she continued, "but as no two of them are in the same county I would have meant a caravan. Besides, I wasn't going to be transplanted at my age. Here one has every body one ever knew; except those who escape by emigrating, simply at every turn on a bicycle. There's more golf and tennis than I can find time to play; and I still keep the old boat in the old boat-house at Littleford, because it hasn't let or sold yet. I'm sorry to say."

"So I saw as I passed," said Cassiet. "That hit me hard."

"The place being empty hits me hard, too, I think, when I come down to it. I'm sorry I ever left it, and I'm nearer the truth than the ordinary casualty thinks, or the stream of exile would not be so overflowed upon the shore. Because, in spite of custom, the inference is that he has retired to live in the country on the proceeds.

"Pidda!" she cried. "But you're not altered enough. Sweep, I'm disappointed in you. Where's your beard?"

"It's in all of the other places. I always meant to," he explained, "before the end of the voyage. I wasn't going to land like a wild man of the woods, you know!"

"Weren't you! I call it mean."

Her scrutiny became severe, but softened again at the sight of his clutched wide-awake and curiously inarticulate, shapeless suit.

"You may well look!" he cried, delighted that she should. "They're awful old duds, I know, but you would think them a wonder if you saw where they came from—"

"I'm sorry to interrupt," said Blanche, laughing, "but there's your taxi ticking up twopence every quarter of an hour, and I can't let it go on without warning you. Where have you come from?"

He told her with a grin, was roundly reminded for his extravagance, but branded it out by giving the smart young man a sovereign before her eyes. After that, she said he had better come in before the neighbors came out and mobbed him for a millionaire. And he followed her indoors and upstairs, into a little new den crowded with some of the big old furniture he could remember in a very different setting. But if the room was small it had a balcony that was hardly any smaller, on top of that unlovely imposing porch; and out there, overlooking the fine grounds opposite, were basket chairs and a table, hot with the Indian summer sun.

"I hope you are not shocked at my abode," said Blanche. "I'm afraid I can't help it if you are. It's just big enough for Martha and me; you remember old Martha, don't you? You'll have to come and see her, but she'll be horribly disappointed about your beard."

Coming through the room, stopping in the mirrors and a bookcase (filling a wall each) as old friends, Cassiet had described a photograph of himself with that appendage. He had threatened to take the beastly thing off, and Blanche had told him he had better not. But it did not occur to Cassiet that it was the photograph to which Hilton Toye had referred, or that Toye must have been in this very room, and, if so, that he must have had forgotten the man's existence, at least in so far as it associated itself with Blanche Macnair.

"The others all wanted me to live near them," she continued, "but as no two of them are in the same county I would have meant a caravan. Besides, I wasn't going to be transplanted at my age. Here one has every body one ever knew; except those who escape by emigrating, simply at every turn on a bicycle. There's more golf and tennis than I can find time to play; and I still keep the old boat in the old boat-house at Littleford, because it hasn't let or sold yet. I'm sorry to say."

Because, in spite of custom, the inference is that he has retired to live in the country on the proceeds.

"Bless my soul!" he thought to himself, "what a pretty, sweet, old-fashioned girl she was! Why, I'd written to him—to the end of time—I'd have had an answer in half an hour! Why, I'd have had my father and Cayzan by dead and done that little Toye, who shares his stateroom with him, known Cayzan and also Blanche Macnair, and—and—Blanche herself, maybe. Yes, the daily papers come aboard at Southampton. Toye reads that Cayzan is never mentioned and avoids Cassiet's friends second night aboard. Cassiet tells Toye of his detective work and the man he shot. Cassiet is the man Blanche's father, who has been released from prison.

INCOME OF A STREET BEGGAR

Curious Resident on Opposite Side of Thoroughfare Places Contributions at $1,000 Yearly.

There was a certain Hartlemere who was wont to take his seat at the side of a crowded city street, with a well-bred dog at the side sitting on a mat provided by his master, to protect his hindquarters from the cold stone. The dog held a tin money box attached to his collar. The man had a few lead pencils which he pretended were for sale.

The man simply sat, and the money rolled in. A curious resident on the opposite side of the street, long lengthy observations, and then drew up a calculation based on the assumption that one cent was given every time a contribution was made, though frequently silver and sometimes a quarter was seen to descend into the tin, and taking into consideration the average number of absences in a given time due to lucid intervals, the probable income amounted to about $1,000 a year.

The estimate may not be very exact, but it is nearer the truth than the ordinary casualty thinks, or the stream of exile would not be so overflowed upon the shore. Because, in spite of custom, the inference is that he has retired to live in the country on the proceeds.

Equally Useless.

Ralph without works is about as useless as a watch without wheels.

Pile Fabrics for Midwinter Suits

A novel pile fabric, of high luster and great suppleness, appears in the pink picture hat. It has made it possible to vary the expression of the mode in velvet and fur and has thereby been received and worked much consideration. The surface is broken by stripes or blocks of other forms, made by the direction of the pile and not by color contrasts or by shades of one color. The management of the surface in this way produces very certain effects, and the material is suited to the handsomest of gowns and wraps.

In the suit pictured the skirt has a moderate fare with the direction of the stripes cleverly managed to emphasize it. The front and back seams are on a diagonal of the goods, and there is little fullness about the waist line. It is longer than the average suit-skirt, and is finished with a band of fur.

The designer of this model has attended to the management of stripes in the coat with the same care that is evidenced in the skirt. In the body and sleeves the stripes are vertical, but in the flaring peplum they run around the figure with a slant toward the bottom of the skirt toward the back.

The waist line is defined by a narrow belt of the material with overplaying tabs at the back fastened down with small crochet buttons. The sleeves are finished with a band and cuff, and the band edged with fur which extends over the hand and opens at the outer side. The standing collar of velvet, edged with fur, is as wide as it is possible to wear it.

The manufacturers of velvets and other pile fabrics have been working to the end of making them as light in weight as it is possible to weave them. After arriving at last weight and suppleness they have created novelties by departing from plain surfaces. These novelties eliminate the need for trimmings or ornament to a very great degree. But their richness is matched by that of fur.

During the present season hand-some plaids have appeared in velvets, presenting three colors sparingly used on dark grounds, or two-toned checks. These are made up with chiffon in the bodices and very little ornament, the fabric presenting variety enough without trimming.

FAMOUS DERBY RACES

EXTRAORDINARY INCIDENTS AT WORLD-FAMOUS TRACK.

Ambition of Every Sportsman Interested Enough to Be Win Great Contest—Lord Rosebery's Sore Disappointment.

Since S. Arnull rode Diomed to victory in the English Derby in 1780 some extraordinary incidents have occurred in connection with this world-famous race, to which princes and peers have sacrificed fortunes with out success, says a writer in London Answers.

Time was when the house of commons was wont to adjourn on Derby day, so that our jaded legislators could run down and bask in the bracing which blew o' Epsom Downs. Again, when the great Crimean war was raging, parliament ordered that no result of the race should be included in general orders.

From time immemorial the Derby has been marked by incidents. On three occasions, for example, horses starting at the forlorn odds of 100 to 1 against have cleared the cheapest prize. Seidlan, in 1894; Signorinetta two years later, and Abqueer, two years ago, were their names, and their performances recall others which stand out, one unmentioned in turf history for all time.

In 1913, one remembers, the race was doubly memorable. There was the heroic spirit of Captain Cheveley, who sacrificed her life in a vain attempt to stop the horse, whilst, as a kind of atonement, came the unprecedented success of the Duke of Cleveland's filly, Sunstar, who, in the hands of the Tetrarch, the quietly-colored horse with the rocking-horse head, whom such great things were expected.

Whenever the great Epsom carnival comes round, sportsmen, young and old, remember the Rosebery incident when Hermit, starting at 43 to 1 against, owing to a mishap to his jockey, Mr. Jem Mr. Henry Chaplin, mounting him a fortune. Daley, the jockey who brought the Chaplin colors home, received a present of £3,000 from the owner, and the Hermit went a long way toward ruining the plunging magnate of Hastings.

As for the horse, what could be more tragic than the action of that famous sportsman, Lord George Bentinck? Lord George, after spending a lifetime in attempting to win the Derby, said all his heroism in disgust for a lump sum of £10,000 down, and retired from the turf with his ambition ungratified.

Included in the sold racers was Surplice, who, ironically enough, carried off the Derby in 1846. Rosebery was also won the St. Leger, and a few days later Lord George Bentinck was found dead on his estate at Welbeck.

When Sir Joseph Ewer, the blue ribbon for the duke of Westminster, the winner was immediately protested to, the allegation being that he was not the horse stated, but a substitute had been the two horses been changed when foals. There was a tremendous amount of excitement, as fabulous sums were at stake, but after interrogating everyone connected from the stable to the stewards, the authorities decided in favor of Bend Or. The latter afterwards proved a very successful sire of the sire of the celebrated Ormonde.

Chance for Ugly Men.

There's all kinds of hope for the man in the back row—those whose facial scenery is not attractively arranged. A whole lucky lottery ticket is the way chorus declare they just love an ugly man, and—and—everybody else, I think, but is always well called. It is their opinion that the brain of a man is not worth a cent if it is stored in the vest pocket of a mosquito. And they say it is generally true that always: "Go right through the world's history and you will find that the ugly men—the men who have done things—were ugly. Women admire them because they are big and strong, both physically and mentally, and it is a distinct feminine quality to love and crave for him—the man who is strong. Now, many women who have secret admiration for this or that prize fighter because of his physique and strength and I know lots of them who make no bones about being crazy about the men that football-heros." So it's all settled. And it will be worse than useless for "pretty" men to entertain any fond matrimonial hopes where this hearty contingent is concerned.—New York Times.

Prescribes Sousa Party.

The doctors are prescribing some new medicine for those who are unable to woo Morphicus, says the New York Sun. One doctor prescribed a tonic to take an allnight ride in a Pullman, while another prescribed a sousa party for his patient. The other day when a patient told his physician that he wakened up every morning at two and could not sleep after that hour, he was ordered to get an alarm clock. "Set the alarm for 10 minutes before two," said the doctor, "and when it strikes, get up and take a walk. Do not go to bed again until you feel sleepy." In other instances, nor take a nap. The next day set the alarm at a quarter past two. You will sleep until it wakens you. Get up as before and take an other walk. The third night you can venture to set your alarm at three, and take a walk. If you are sleepy by that time you will be a more different man than any I have had heretofore." The patient tried it, but the second night he was held up and ordered he got on the cars that helped him to catch up in his sleep.

Polite Substitution.

Three Days Holiday

By HAROLD CARTER

(Copyright, 1919, by W. G. Chapman.)

At half-past twelve Dunham, just home from the office, looked about his little uptown flat. The flat was empty, and it seemed to inspire in him a good deal of interest.

"The living room was empty. The dining room was empty, though his wife had left a substantial cold lunch for him before she went away. His wife's room was empty and stripped of her belongings. In fact, Dora Dunham had gone away for a three-days' vacation without her husband.

Dunham sneered, but it was a merry sneer without a trace of vindictiveness about it.

"I guess!" he said, aloud. "Dora goes away and leaves me a bachelor, she leaves me the privileges of a bachelor as well."

Dunham looked the sort of young man who might have made any woman happy. Yet he seemed in a hurry to get away from his home. He set his lunch, packed his suitcase, left the apartment and took a ticket for Atlantic City.

At thirty many men have a good deal of the boy left, in their system. Dunham, the fifteen-hundred-a-year clerk, seemed to have shaken off the cares of business and the responsibilities of married life at the same time. Before his wife had gone and left him alone it had been understood that the financial stringency made a vacation for both impossible that year. Mentally each had resented the right to a three days' outing. They had spoken of this with about the same tone, and had agreed to try the holiday separately.

The train stopped at the station. Dunham walked toward the boardwalk, flying his bag. He had no sooner registered than he made his way along the board-walk, and beyond it, to the edge of the summer settlement.

His heart was beating faster than normally. He knew that somebody expected him. In point of fact, he had received and answered a letter. When a man has the memory of several impassioned love letters, and the letter is waiting for three days—well!

The girl in blue was waiting for him at the edge of the rocks, just where she had promised to be. As he approached she looked up with a little smile. For a moment both were too embarrassed to speak.

"So you came!" she said, after a pause.

"Yes," he answered, taking his seat upon the pebbly beach at the foot of the rocks. "Why shouldn't I come, when you expect?"

"And your wife has gone?" asked the girl gently.

He nodded. "She left this morning."

There was a pause. The girl played idly with her parasol. Then—

"You have been married two years, Will?" she asked.

"Yes. And you about the same length of time. Oh, my dear, if we had known how we cared for each other!"

"Care," said the girl, turning to him. "Will I will confess that I care for you more than for any man on earth. I would ask nothing dearer than to spend the rest of my days with you."

"And your husband?"

"Oh, he is absorbed in his affairs. He is a man of millions—what is the worth of a wife to him?"

"And my wife," answered Dunham, "is shallow, worldly, and frivolous."

"Will! What are you saying?"

"I should not have said that," he admitted contrite. "I would not have said it to anybody but you. But to think that we have two clear days together! Where are you staying?"

"Here."

"I am there, too. I went there in the hope that you would be there. Did you have any trouble in getting away?"

"Not a particle," replied the girl, with a trace of cleverness in her tone. "I told my husband that I was going away for three days. He said nothing except to ask me how much I required. That is like him; he sees only everything in terms of money."

"Well, money's a pretty good thing to have," said Dunham. "And now, dearest, I have a proposal to make. Since this meeting is to be a remained at the days before we part, forgotten that we—we were married, let us forget that we—we were married, let us forget that we—we were married—and—and—anything to others, and be engaged again, as we used to be."

"But it's so—so horribly sentimental, Will!"

"But isn't that what we came here for?"

"Yes," she agreed. She placed her arms around his neck. "Oh, Will, if only if we had never married—others, I mean!"

The two days passed like a happy dream. They spent the whole time together, at the hotel, on the board-walk, at the pierce of amusement. They boated together, swam, joined in the crowd of merrymakers. But as the third evening approached the shadow of the past seemed to fall across them.

They were silent as they sat together by the sea that night.

"Tomorrow it all ends, Will," sighed the girl.

"Yes," he answered. "Tomorrow we go back. I to my wife—"

"And I to my husband. Oh, Will, if we could spend three days together like this every year?"

"Another silence. Then—

"Will, did you mean it when you said that your wife is shallow, worldly and emotionless?"

"No," he confessed. "I love her for what she is. I want to devote my life to her, to try to make her happy. But you—is your husband really a man absorbed in his business interests? Does he care for you? How could he help caring?"

"He cares," the girl admitted. "I was speaking falsely, dear. He loves me. And so, we have our duties toward these two."

"Yes," he agreed.

The last five minutes were gone. They rose and sauntered back toward the hotel. The shadows fell across the trance, where nobody was, they exchanged a swift and furtive embrace.

"I shall not see you before you go!" he whispered.

"No, dear. I think that would be best. We have taken a last farewell with these memories to sweeten them, and without the pain of a new parting."

"You are right, Will," she answered, "Good-night, dear," she added, softly.

The next morning Will Dunham left Atlantic City. He left his suitcase at the office and did not go to the board-walk, and leaves as he left later. He that wrestling with us sometimes on nerves and sharpen our skill. Our antagonist is our helper.—Burke.

The train quickly abides with him alone who, in the silent hour of inward reflection, can commune with his own heart, and in the stillness of heart.—Wordsworth.

A Fairyland of Nature

TUMBLED CASTLES.

THE Black Hills of south and north Dakota and Wyoming, which are in fact mountains rising from the great plains to an elevation of 7,000 or more feet above sea level, are similar in form, on a small, low island, surrounded by a vast shallow sea. This sea extended as far west as the Rocky mountains, which were in the highlands rising above it, writes Fred E. Michaels in Atlanta Saturday Globe.

The average traveler today, much less the bandits and Indians who have in recent years infested this elevated region, would probably, according to their various nationalities, smile grimly or shake his head in astonishment that this portion of the country, now so arid and barren, was once fertile and later a vast tropical swamp, among whose rank and luxuriant vegetation lived dinosaurs and huge reptiles, and on the shores of which roamed giant herbivorous animals, which were in turn preyed upon by the terrible flesh-eating monsters of the early world. Such, however, is the fact as attested by the vast quantities of petrified bones which have been found imbedded in the rocks and many of which are now mounted in attitudes in various museums of the country.

Following this age of sea and swamp the whole region was uplifted thousands of feet by the dynamic forces from within the earth; the hills became mountains and the floor of the ancient sea, long since turned to stone, became a lofty plateau. The rivers began their slow work of cutting, carving and dissecting this plateau into a region of wonderful beauty. Her concern is with recall years ago, the Black Hills appeared as "the Big Bad Lands," where nature has chiseled the soft rocks into thousands of strange or curious shapes. The lower portion of the region, from which visit the Bad Lands are as innumerable rivers, from small streams to large rivers, which in warm weather cut deep into the old ocean bed—are dotted and adorned with—carving it into most startling shapes and forms. There is no end to the variety, a kaleidoscopic change from every different viewpoint. The Bad Lands are a region of unmitigated desolation, which fed upon the luxuriant growth of almost tropical vegetation which which the Bad Lands were at one time clothed, would have made the largest rhinoceros of the present age look like a suckling pig. This antediluvian monster was 12 feet long and stood nine feet high. Other monsters were the Oredon and the pentacrinum, while a great cat or panther-tiger preyed upon the herb eaters of the time. "Be home c' hundreds of these animals have been found embedded in the rock strata of the Bad Lands. The region has ever been renowned as a veritable storehouse of skeletons and specimens of these prehistoric animals which lived hundreds of centuries before the epoch of the great man.

The church tower of a certain village in the hands of the enemy proved very annoying to a German regiment of the French trenches. He addressed himself to his task, and having taken careful aim, succeeded eventually in leveling the tower by a well-directed shot. Congratulations followed, to which the gunner replied:

Perfection—The False and the True

By REV. L. W. CONNELL
Superintendent of Mun. Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

"Perfection, though I had already attained, either were already perfect. Let us therefore as many as be perfect be thus minded."—Phil. 3:15, 16.

This text makes it clear that there is a sense in which Christians can not be perfect and another sense in which they may be perfect.

The apostle states clearly that he has not already attained, neither is already perfect, or as the Revised Version reads, "already perfected." The verse preceding speaks of the resurrection of the dead, so that his disavowal evidently has to do with the perfection which will come in the future. It may seem to some unnecessary that a man should disavow this final perfection since he is evidently not yet raised from the dead; but the human mind is capable of very strange things, and this same apostle Paul speaks of some in his day who taught that the resurrection is past already. On some such basis, it seems, that teacher arose who declared that even now we may reach that state which belongs to the resurrection state. The apostle is clearly against such a doctrine.

Bishop Moule, one of the most sainted by men the modern church has produced, in commenting upon this passage, says: "As far as I can observation goes, such views (i. e. of perfection) are not unusually entertained by those who hold them, by a certain oblivion to personal shortcomings and inconsistencies, by an obscuration of consciousness, and of conscience, more or less marked, towards the sinfulness of ordinary, everyday violations of the law of holiness in respect of measure, humiliations of mind, long suffering, sympathy, and other quiet graces."

Indeed, the saints of all the ages walts with Paul in declaring that they are not already perfect. The apostles, after suffering many things for Christ's sake so that he bore in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus, writes of himself as "chief of sinners." John Bunyan although he spent twelve years in Bedford jail for his Lord, calls his life story "Grace Abounding to the Chief of Sinners." When John Wesley thought he was dying, he reviewed his labors of sixty years, but wrote of himself as one who had "no any hope of salvation; he could only repeat the sentiment of the hymn,

"I the chief of sinners am,
But Jesus died for me."

The same spirit was manifested by Christians of later days. Not in serious illness, that if he got well he would have many things to prove. Dr. A. J. Gordon was a man of such saintly character that his very face gave evidence of the indwelling light. A servant girl who met him at the door one day told her mistress that he who did not know his name, but he had the face of an angel. Yet when he came to his last hours, he expressions of unworthiness and of absolute dependence upon the mercy and grace of God were so affecting that his family could not bear to remain in the room. These men all agree in saying "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect."

But the other portion of our text speaks of a sense in which we may be perfect. The context shows that the apostle is using the figure of a running a race. He has not yet attained the prize, but forgetting the things which are behind and reaching forth unto those which are before, he presses toward the mark. In this attitude to which the word "perfect" is applied. The man has laid aside the weights and the easily besetting sin; he is not content with what he has attained, but forgetting that which he has attained, he presses with neck stretched forth and every muscle strained, to the goal. It will be seen at once that this sort of perfection is very important and is in no sense a finality. It only prepares us to be made perfect in the day of Christ's coming. Nevertheless we are bound by the grace of Christ to fulfill this ideal and so, to put him to shame.

Two soldiers are involved in the exhortation to be "thus minded." First of all if we feel like the apostle, we will have the lowly estimate of our selves of which we have spoken, the feeling that we have not attained. Very far from Christ-like perfection is pride; on the contrary, humility is its very essence. Again, if we are perfect in the sense of which the apostle speaks, we will simulate him in pressing forward for the prize of final glory. This is the very opposite of complacency as to our attainment. It is said that Thorwaldsen once wept because he was satisfied with a statue he had made. "Alas," he said, "I shall never improve now, for I have reached my ideal. How ought they to be accused who, because they have come to Christ and are Christ with some consistency, are satisfied! Life manifests itself by growth and to be what we are, growing may well examine himself to see whether he be in the faith. We know that if he be in the faith we can to assure us that "if in anything ye be otherwise minded, God will reveal even this unto you." May he give us grace to walk in this light.

Prayer is not overcoming God's reluctance to bless, it is being hold of his best willingness.—Archbishop Trench.

SAYS WOMEN FAIL IN DUTY

Writer Is of Opinion They Do Not Realize Their Full Responsibility as Purchasing Agents.

Woman's responsibility as purchaser does not end with her own satisfaction, her own economy, nor does it remain within her own home. Upon this subject Ida Tarbell says, writing of conditions in the United States, "Women argue that her work has no relation to the state. Her failure to see the relation costs this country heavily. Her concern is with retail prices. Her business is to buy intelligently, she follows and studies every fluctuation of price in groceries, she knows whether she is receiving the proper quality and quantity; and yet so poorly have women discharged their obligations that dealers for years have been able to manipulate prices practically to please themselves, and as for quality and quantity, which is law, the American woman has chained the soft rocks into thousands of strange or curious shapes. The cloudbursts of spring and summer which visit the Bad Lands create innumerable rivers, from small rills to raging torrents, and these waters cut deep into the old ocean bed—carving it into most startling shapes and forms. There is no end to the variety, a kaleidoscopic change from every different viewpoint. The Bad Lands are a region of unmitigated desolation, which fed upon the luxuriant growth of almost tropical vegetation which which the Bad Lands were at one time clothed, would have made the largest rhinoceros of the present age look like a suckling pig. The Pawnee Indian country, including the old Oklahoma triangle, in the center of which is Jennings, was opened to settlement along with the old Cherokee strip in September, 1893, just twenty-two years ago. A number of the towns within the strip have just been celebrating the event of their twenty-second birthday with appropriate ceremonies.

The strip extended westward from the western boundary of the Cherokee nation, about thirty miles east of Jennings, to the Colorado and New Mexico border, including at one time, it is said, the famous No Man's Land, which was divided into the counties of Cimarron, Texas and Beaver.

The story of how Jennings was homesteaded and named is interesting. Therefore, at this time, when the twenty-second birthday of the town has just been observed.

Jenning's conceived the idea, when announcement of the strip's opening reached him, that if he could get his daughter should make the race for a quarter section of land, which the family would homestead.

The race for homes when the Cherokee strip was opened to settlement will go down in the history of the sooners, as the greatest horse race that was ever pulled off under the sanction of the federal government.

There were several thousand choice quarter section farms at the prairie and men came from all sections of the United States to make the race and win a claim if possible. The swiftest and most seasoned horses were entered whenever there was obtainable, for all the riders knew that by the sooners land claims with the best horses stood the farms be won.

Among the riders was Jenny Pawnee girl, and she proved her ability as a horsewoman.

Dressed in men's clothing, with high-heeled boots and spurs, she entered the race and won a claim a tract of valley land in Jennings, one of the prettiest natural spots in the entire Jennings country.

Having won the claim, the family evidently did not care for it, for forty long days and nights of it had been sold to John Simmons and the other 40 acres had been given for a town site on condition that the new town be named Jennings. The family left for this section of the country, and in less than a year it was reported that Jennings was living in Old Mexico.

CHRISTIAN SCIENTISTS

REPLY VIGOROUSLY TO THE RECENT SERMON OF REV. MR. VINYARD

700 Union Trust Bldg.,
Detroit, Mich., Dec. 10, 1915.

Editor Sentinel,
Charlevoix, Mich.

DEAR SIR:—

In the interest of the Christian Scientists of Charlevoix and for the benefit of any who may have been misled by a sermon recently preached in your city on the subject of Christian Science, will you kindly allow space for some corrections thereto? It would be impossible to adequately cover the entire subject of Christian Science in an article of this kind nor will any endeavor be made to do so. But the sermon in question was so full of misrepresentations and falsehoods thoroughly in every particular to convey the correct understanding of the subject that justice demands some reply.

The citizens of Charlevoix should not be misled into believing that this self appointed critic of Christian Science has given to the world anything new or novel along the line of religious intolerance. If the gentleman cared to take the time to investigate, which evidently he has not seen fit to do even regarding a subject which he volunteers to elucidate, he will find that Christian Science has been the object of similar attacks and persecutions from its inciptency, and that throughout the short span of its existence it has accomplished a growth and maintained a position among the religions of the world never before experienced in religious history. Every indignity and injustice that evil minds and a perverted purpose could conceive has been used against Christian Science and today there is hardly a spot on the civilized globe that does not bear witness to this Truth and to such some degree enjoying the blessings of the religion of Jesus Christ through the healing of the sick and the casting out of sin.

Christian Scientists endeavor to follow the examples of Jesus in every particular and they find nowhere throughout the Bible or in the teachings of Jesus anything that would permit them to criticize, malign or misrepresent the religious convictions of their fellowmen, or that would permit the pitiful example of bigotry and religious intolerance exhibited by this critic.

In the first place, Christian Science has stimulated the reading of the Bible and has created a desire for a more complete and demonstrable understanding of the holy book to a degree far beyond that of any other contemporaneous religious movement, and it can safely be asserted that no case of religionists are today as earnest and honest and "borough students of the Bible as are Christian Scientists. Furthermore, their study of the Bible is teaching them that Jesus meant exactly what he said when he advised all who believe on him to do the works that he did. Because the critic fails to understand how Jesus healed the sick and therefore fails to understand how everyone who believes on him can do likewise should he hold up to ridicule those who are attempting to follow the example of the Nazarene to the way of his appointing?

The gentleman has much to say in his sermon about "science" and the relation of matter thereto, but I imagine it will be a difficult task for him to explain from his point of view the passage of the Israelites through the Red Sea, how Elijah provided the meal and the cruse of oil for the widow of Zarephath, how the three Hebrew young men emerged unscathed from the fiery furnace, how Jesus turned the water into wine, fed the multitudes with the loaves and fishes, healed the sick, raised the dead, overcame the grave and finally all materiality for himself. Christian Scientists believe that these are examples of spiritual power due to a correct understanding of God and His creation and that it is as necessary today for mortals to be able to follow these examples before they can obtain the Kingdom of Heaven as it was in the time of Jesus. The early church for three hundred years or more after the time of Jesus was noted for its healing work. The disciples established the churches on the foundation of the healing of sickness and sin as taught by Jesus and there is no authority throughout the entire Scriptures for the abandonment of these exponents of the understanding of the Christ. Gross materialism, the usurpation of pure spirituality by convenient creeds and dogmas and the erroneous teachings of ecclesiasticism are the causes of this wide deflection from the true path pointed out to us by the Master.

The critic consumed considerable time and effort in ridiculing the understanding which Christian Scientists have of God and he proceeds to state that he moreover God to be in the shape of a man with all the mortal attributes, because the Bible speaks of God in certain places in a manner which, to the unenlightened, might make Him appear as humanly circumscribed. But the Bible taken throughout, interpreted spiritually, is its teachings as to what God is, leaves no question on this point which should cause the gentleman confusion. Because the Bible says "The arm of the Lord is not shortened that it cannot save" it should not mean to the gentleman that God has arms as conceived of by mortals, and because the Bible says "He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust" the gentleman must not get the idea that God, in this instance, has taken the shape of a fowl or bird with feathers. Jesus said that God is Spirit and that is what Christian Science says. John said "He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love." The latter might be a particularly good passage for the critic to dwell upon. Inasmuch as the gentleman has found so much fault with Christian Science idea of God, permit me to quote from the Westminster Confession of Faith, which constitutes part of his religious creed:

"There is one living and true God, who is infinite in being and perfection, a most pure spirit, invisible without body, parts, or passions, immutable, immense, eternal, incomprehensible, almighty, most wise, most holy, most free, most absolute, most loving, gracious, long suffering, abundant in goodness and truth, forgiving iniquity, transgression and sin."

Could anyone describe a more impersonal and Spiritual God?

In reference to the gentleman's uncomplimentary allusions to Mrs. Eddy, it should be borne in mind that at the age when most people consider life's work accomplished this God-fearing woman took up this work for humanity and almost up to her last hours carried on this work of ministering love, merciful Truth in a manner and with a permanency that all mankind might be blessed thereby. No other person in the history of Christendom since the time of Jesus has accomplished as much for the sick and the sin sick world as this one woman in those years of her life which we have been accustomed to "allow" for the ending of the accomplishments of Christian Science speak for themselves and vouchsafe to her a reward which the critic nor any other can never take from her.

If the gentleman has any doubt that it is a Christian's duty to heal sickness and eventually to overcome death without material means and as Jesus directed let him familiarize himself with the Bible. The Bible is the sole authority for Christian Science, the two are indissolubly connected, and any attempt to disprove the one must be an attempt to disprove the other. The best test for any religion, and one which it would behoove our critic to consider if he intends to continue his endeavors in behalf of suffering humanity, is that of "works." "Faith without works is dead" says James, and while Christian Scientists by no claim to having achieved that degree of understanding to which they are striving, yet they do affirm that as the result of the practice of Christian Science mankind has been given a remedial agency for all its life far surpassing anything the world has seen since the time of Jesus and that they are, in a degree, following the advice of the Master found in the 10th chapter of Matthew where he says "As ye go, preach, saying, The Kingdom of heaven is at hand; heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils."

Pertaining to the teachings of Christian Science concerning Jesus and the Christ the critic has grossly erred. On page 332 of Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures Mrs. Eddy says: "Jesus was the son of a virgin. He was appointed to speak God's word and to appear to mortals in such a form of humanity as they could understand as well as perceive. Mary's conception of him was spiritual, for only purity could reflect Truth and Love, which were plainly incarnate in the good and pure Christ Jesus." and further on she says: "Christ expresses God's spiritual, eternal nature."

Christian Science has been one of the most potent agencies against sin the world has ever known because it teaches, as Jesus taught, that sin brings suffering. It teaches that every transgression of sin in the mind of any individual must be finally conquered before that state of consciousness can be reached explained by Jesus as the Kingdom of Heaven." This final overcoming of all sin Christian Science teaches can be accomplished only through momentary watchfulness constant prayer, self immolation and the understanding that sinful conditions and sin are not created by God, and are not God-sent and therefore have no reality in Truth.

The statement in the gentleman's sermon that "Mrs. Eddy taught to her students that women today can be mothers of children as the virgin Mary" is made from whole cloth and there is nothing in any of Mrs. Eddy's works, in the life of Mrs. Eddy or in the lives of any Christian Scientists that could lead one to such a preposterous conclusion. and the statement that there are now living certain Christian Scientists with children so conceived and brought forth is a fabrication of the direst type.

A committee of Christian Scientists called on the gentleman to ascertain the facts about the cases of death under Christian Science treatment in this community which he referred to in his sermon. He refused to give the names of those to whom reference was made and the Christian Scientists of Charlevoix know of no such cases.

Much the gentleman has said in his sermon is too ridiculous or too palpably beside the facts to require notice. Christian Scientists take pleasure in making it possible for all who are honestly interested in learning of this Truth to obtain all the information necessary from authentic sources. The prohibition made by the local organization in the way of free reading rooms for the benefit of the public where Christian Science literature and the Bible may be read, most public libraries are amply supplied with this literature and the Public Library at Charlevoix is no exception. If any of your readers are interested enough to seek truth, for themselves the true teachings of Christian Science, the opportunities in Charlevoix are ample and a thorough study of the Christian Science textbook, together with the Bible is earnestly recommended.

Yours truly,
W. D. KILPATRICK.

MINISTER OF NANCY HANKS

Man Who Preached Funeral Sermon for Lincoln's Mother Buried in Neglected Graveyard.

Bedford, Ind.—The body of a minister who preached the funeral sermon of Nancy Hanks, mother of Abraham Lincoln, is buried in Lawrence county in a little neglected country grave yard. Several miles west of this city and Mitchell is a little gravestone almost hidden by the weeds that bears the inscription, "David Elkins, 2 R. C., Mil. War 1812."

The Lincoln family moved from Kentucky to Spencer county, Ind., in 1816. A year later the mother died, and to those days it was a difficult matter to get a minister at the time of a death, and the funeral services were often preached later at a convenient time.

A few days after the death of his mother, young Lincoln wrote to Mr. Elkins, who was a neighbor of the family in Kentucky, requesting him to come and preach his mother's funeral sermon. Mr. Elkins started on horback for the Lincoln home to comply with the request of Lincoln. The minister traveled nearly 100 miles. Lincoln, becoming impatient, started to meet Mr. Elkins and then met on the road, returning to the Lincoln home together.

BISHOP TO GIVE UP LEGACY

Surrenders $11,000 When Heirs of Testators File Caveat Against Probate of Will.

Trenton, N. J.—John Butterhof, ninety-two years old, died recently at Egg Harbor City, he left a will in which he gave only small sums to relatives and gave the bulk of the estate, valued at $11,000, to Bishop James A. McFaul of the Roman Catholic diocese of Trenton.

The three sons and daughters of Mr. Butterhof filed a caveat against the probate of the will, asserting that their father was incompetent.

When this matter was called to Bishop McFaul's attention he directed his attorneys to see that the residue of the estate, instead of going to him, shall be divided among the protesting children.

Sharing in Prosperity.

No man may expect to get his part of prosperity unless he is interpreting and goes out and "digs" for it. The public owes no man a living.—Tipton Daily Times.

WAR UPON PAIN!

Pain is a visitor to every home and usually it comes quite unexpectedly. But you are prepared for every emergency if you keep a small bottle of Sloan's Liniment handy. It is the greatest pain killer ever discovered. Simply laid on the skin—no rubbing required—it drives the pain away. It is really wonderful.

Marvin H. Sonter, Berkeley, Cal., writes: "Last Saturday, after tramping around the Panama Exposition with wet feet, I came home with my neck so stiff that I could not turn. I applied Sloan's Liniment freely and went to bed. To my surprise, next morning the stiffness had almost disappeared four hours after the second application. I was as good as new."

THE EARNING POSSIBILITIES OF A TEN DOLLAR BILL

In The Ford Motor Car Company it has returned		$25,000.00
" Joy Improvement Company	"	10,000.00
" Weinhard Mantle Company	"	5,000.00
" National Cash Register Co.	"	4,267.00
" Diamond Rubber Company	"	1,472.00
" Fisk Rubber Company	"	1,360.00
" Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.	"	1,250.00

The stock in the above companies went begging when it was first offered—investors could not believe the profits and management predicted. The above enormous profits made by the shrewd investors with the courage to back a young business and a new idea, are not likely to be duplicated by present stock offerings. You have such an OPPORTUNITY in this offering.

THE WEALTH we offer is a real and an accomplished fact—our Company, if we did not increase our manufacturing facilities and working capital one cent, still could pay 80 percent on the investment offered in this advertisement. This we are now earning—this is an accomplished fact.

The proceeds from the sale of our stock will enable us to increase our output at least fourfold and with the economies this increased production will effect, we will then be earning about 200 percent on this investment.

THIS IS THE SMALL INVESTORS' OPPORTUNITY

By a special arrangement, we are enabled to offer one thousand investors this EXTRAORDINARY proposition:

Mail us ten dollars ($10.00), no more and no less, and we will mail you a Certificate for Forty (40) shares of the Treasury Stock of our Company, Fully Paid and Forever Non-Assessable, and descriptive literature of our company and its business.

This offer is made only to the first one thousand investors who answer this advertisement. First come, first served. If you are too late or if you send any more or less than ten dollars, your money will be returned by the next mail.

This offer is made to secure the co-operation of one thousand small stockholders in launching the sale of Double Service Tires and in prevent large financial interests from securing control.

The Double Service Tire and Rubber Company is incorporated under the stringent laws of the State of Ohio at $200,000.00, divided into 200,000 shares of a par value of $1.00 per share, all common, Fully Paid and Non-Assessable. Every share of stock and every stockholder being absolutely on an equal and even basis, all sharing alike in all earnings of the Company.

This is an established and going business and one which is at present earning net dividends equal to 80 percent on its entire capitalization, and with future dividend possibilities so big and so alluring that they seem almost unbelievable.

The history of practically any one of Akron's famous rubber tire companies reads more like a fairy tale than business facts. Early investors have made fortunes almost unbelievable and are still making them. The growth and success of the Double Service Tire and Rubber Company bid fair to add another chapter to this never-ending story of the fortunes made through the popularity of the automobile.

OUR GUARANTEE—YOUR PROTECTION

The fact that this Company is now earning at the rate of 80 percent on its entire capitalization, with less than one-third of its facilities, is a positive guarantee of your 80 percent and proof of the still larger earnings you will receive when their production facilities have been increased.

Your protection is made still more secure by the fact that after you have received our literature and your stock, you may return the same any time within ten days of its receipt by you and receive your money back in full if you are not entirely satisfied with your investment. This gives you ten days in which to investigate and to assure yourself that this is not a chance, but the best and largest little investment you ever made. Could anything be more fair and square? Wasever an investment offered so attractive and so sure?

Just tear off and fill out this coupon and attach a ten-dollar bill to it, or a check, or a Money Order, and mail it to-day. REMEMBER, this offer is made only to the first one thousand who answer this advertisement.

THE DOUBLE SERVICE TIRE & RUBBER CO.,
Akron, Ohio.

I hereby accept your offer as made in the above advertisement, and am enclosing ten dollars, for which please send me Stock Certificate for Forty (40) shares of Stock of your Company, Fully Paid and Non-Assessable, with descriptive literature regarding the same, with the understanding that if I am not entirely satisfied with my investment, you will return my money in full any time within ten days of my receipt of my Stock Certificate and literature.

JUDGE WILLIS BROWN IN THE TOILS

FAMOUS "BOY CITY" PROMOTER IN CHICAGO JAIL CHARGED WITH CONFIDENCE GAME

There are a good many people in Charlevoix and elsewhere who yet nurse a financial sore spot in memory of the Boy City project that is therefore an exhibition resulted in a collapse of the "philanthropic" enterprise fathered by "Judge" Willis Brown. Now the smooth hypocrite is in the Chicago jail awaiting trial for another swindling scheme. We take the following from the Chicago Tribune of last week Wednesday:

Former Judge Willis Brown of Salt Lake City was arrested yesterday in the Hotel Sherman by Detectives Sergts. Loftus and Moran on a warrant accusing him of operating a confidence game. Orville A. Thompson of 1228 Roscoe St. a railway mail clerk, says Mr. Brown swindled him out of $100 in an investment in a motion picture scheme.

Mr. Brown, who was for a number of years judge of the Juvenile court of Salt Lake City, was booked on the charge at the detective bureau. Attempts were being made last night to locate Mrs. Mr. Brown was unable to explain the cause of his arrest.

"I believe it is in connection with a $100 investment which I made for Thompson" he said at the detective bureau.

Mr. Brown is well known in legal circles in Utah and the west. From 1907 to 1912 he was Judge of the Juvenile court, and he is the author of a number of books on that branch of the law. He also assisted in formulating some of the recent laws of Utah along that line.

He has been staying in Chicago only two days and was on his way to his home when the warrant was served.

Mr. Brown is 45 years old and the founder of the Parental school farm system of Gary, Ind. Of recent years he has been touring the country giving lectures and inspecting penal institutions, upon which he is compiling a treatise.

To the police at the bureau he told of what he believed was responsible for the charge. Thompson, he said, and his father, formerly a pastor of North Chicago, were friends, and several months ago he, while on a visit here, renewed the acquaintanceship of his father's friend.

In explaining the investment made by Thompson, the former judge said:

"He asked me to allow me to make a small investment because of his friendship with my father. I accordingly, said he, sold him $300 worth of my personal stock in the company, which was at the time in the zenith of its prosperity. He did not have the full amount and I accepted $100 of it, the remainder to be paid in monthly installments.

"There was no intention to defraud; he asked to be allowed the shares and then violated his part of the contract by making no further payment other than the first one, for which I gave him a receipt."

The company he further explained, is being handled by Thompson.

Thompson, Mr. Brown said, became interested through him in a motion picture concern, the Youth's Welfare films, in which he also was concerned, and made an investment of $300, paying $100 in cash. The company, which was to produce pictures especially for young people serving as the moral and mental development, did not materialize. Mr. Brown said he believed his arrest was because of this. He said he will be given a hearing in the South Clark street court today.

Concerning his present work, Mr. Brown said: "Recently returned from New York where I went through the penal institutions, and on Friday I visited Gov. Dunne and also went through the Joliet penitentiary."

Thompson refused to discuss the transaction in the street directly, but made a number of allegations and also said that he had been "flimflammed."

Thompson was reached by telephone. He said "there are others who have been swindled, too."

He said that he had been promised an agency for the new film company in the vicinity of Chicago, and was also to get a return on his investment, neither of which he has gotten so far, he said.

Thompson promised surprises in the hearing of the case today.

"My testimony will make good newspaper reading" he said. He also intimated that Brown would also be power that Judge Brown's only interest in Chicago at present was to interest persons in the scheme.

DEATH OF WILLIAM COOPER

Died at his home in this city Saturday night last, William Cooper, after a long and painful illness, aged 63 years.

Mr. Cooper was born in England. At the age of two years he was brought to Canada by his parents, coming over in a sailing ship, the passage covering a period of three months. His boyhood and young manhood was spent in the Dominion, coming to Michigan and locating in Washtenaw county in 1864. Later he removed to Kent county.

In 1880 he came north, buying the Marion farm, where he lived until about eight years ago, when he sold the farm and came to this city, where he continued to reside up to the time of his death.

Mrs. Cooper died several years ago. The following children survive him: Oliver A., and W. H., of this city; E. N. of Big Rapids; Mrs. A. C. Fessenden, of Bion, Mich.; Mrs. Ada Beaman and Miss Minnie of this city.

Mr. Cooper was always held in high esteem by his neighbors in Dotson, and although quiet and retiring in his habits, was universally respected in this community. We have known him for more than thirty years, and have never heard anything but good words concerning him. His integrity was above question and his character irreproachable.

GATHERING IN THE FOXES

They tell us that Reynard is having a hard time of it on Beaver and adjacent islands to save their pelts.

Dr. Newman and Mr. Dice, of this city, shot five ahead of the hounds last week, and local trappers are bringing in quite a number.

Pelts are worth from six to nine dollars. All the islands of the Beaver group are infested with foxes, and there is great sport in hunting them.

ALL YEAR ROUND

ANNUAL REPORT COAST GUARD SERVICE RECOMMENDS STATIONS OPEN TWELVE MONTHS

Continuous service all the year round is urged in the annual report of the United States coastguard. Responding to the earnest solicitations of the maritime interests and the public press of the country, Congress by the act of Aug. 3, 1914, authorized the extension of the seasonal activity of certain life stations are open and manned) to include May and August. The active season was, at the time defined began on Aug. 1 and ended on May 31 succeeding. This is the latest act regulating the opening and closing of coastguard stations, and is the law at this time.

Since the introduction of motor-propelled boats, however, conditions have so changed along the eastern seaboard as to fix the beginning of the active season to include the entire year. It is evident that decisive action to that end will have to be taken in order that the coastguard may be in position to extend its full protection to this class of navigation traffic.

The organization of the coastguard under the act of Jan. 28, 1915, has progressed satisfactorily, and at this time, less than six months after the passage of the act, there is every evidence that this long-recommended and much-needed legislation is accomplishing the object sought, namely, the enhanced efficiency of the life-saving function of the government by the rehabilitation of the personnel concerned.

A board of competent officers selected from the former life-saving service and revenue cutter service has been steadily engaged revising the regulations of those two services and combining them in accordance with law into new regulations for the coastguard. As entirely as each chapter of the regulations is completed it is promulgated to the service at large in the form of a general order. The coastguard being a part of the military forces of the government, the military system of the former revenue-cutter service has been utilized as a basis for the organization of the coastguard. This has necessitated many changes in matters affecting the status and discipline of that portion of the coastguard which was formerly the life-saving service, and the transferred personnel of that service have already adapted themselves to the new conditions.

A committee representing the navy and coastguard has been at work to recommend such interdepartmental regulations and agreements as may be necessary in order to make the coastguard most effective as an adjunct to the navy for the national defense, as contemplated by existing law.

The transfer of the personnel of the former life-saving service to the coastguard was accomplished by issuing appointments as commissioned officers, warrant officers and petty officers to the district superintendents, keepers and No. 1 surfmen, respectively, and regularly enlisting the surfmen. It is believed that the service must be maintained at a higher standard if the men were assured of unbroken employment throughout the year.

"NED" BACON NEW MICHIGAN SCOUT COM'R

GRAND RAPIDS MAN TO PUSH THE ORGANIZATION OF GROUPS THROUGH OUT STATE

Here is another Charlevoix boy who has made good. "Ned" Bacon was raised to manhood in Charlevoix, and our Charlevoix readers will read the following with interest. It is from the Grand Rapids Press:

"In connection with the launching of the local Boy Scout campaign announcement is made that Edward C. Bacon of this city, for many years a writer of stories for boys, using the pen name "Captain Ned," has been appointed special field Scout commissioner for Michigan. He will begin his duties at once.

Mr. Bacon's task will consist of pushing organization of local Scout groups in the various towns and cities of the state. Many cities have never been organized and in some cases the organization requires more attention to maintain efficiency than has been possible heretofore. On the basis of the roaring campaign in Grand Rapids it is believed a new enthusiasm for the Scout idea will be kindled all over the state.

Judson F. Freeman, national field Scout commissioner for the middle west, made the announcement of Mr. Bacon's appointment as coming from the national headquarters, so that the Michigan officer will be Mr. Freeman's assistant. His appointment was indorsed with the signature of a great many of the leading business men and bankers of the state.

Mr. Bacon is a Michigan man, having had his residence here most of the time for twenty-five years while he has spent as a writer of books and stories for boys with the occupation of a traveling salesman for a Chicago house. Good Neighbors

"Could you lend me your scissors dear? I want to take out some of the window scenery."

The man addressed, next door neighbor, Robert Mason, nodded simply. He was the owner of the house into which Perle Pelham and his wife had just moved. Pelham had paid a liberal rent for the place. The nonchalant manner of his landlord displeased him. The latter simply filled the article asked for over the low dividing fence, bowed and turned away.

"Humph!" commented Pelham, almost irritably, as he entered the house.

"What is the matter, dear?" inquired Mrs. Pelham, leaving unpleasant in his manner and voice.

"Nothing, I think, of ours. Asked him just now if him are a stepladder to get at the screens and he acted as if he grudged even a decent word.

"Oh, you misjudge him, Karle, indeed you do!" Mrs. Pelham hastened to say. "I feel so sorry for him—all the town does. I hear his life is a terrible one. TOURISTS' CAMP

IT APPEARS strange that the greatest of American prehistoric ruins, since now included in the Mesa Verde National park in southwestern Colorado, should have escaped discovery until 1888. Years before, innumerable ancient ruins left in several other states by the ancestors of the Pueblo Indians had been described and pictured. They had been the subject of popular lectures; they had been treated in books of science and books of travel; they had become a familiar American species. Even the ruins in the Mancos canyon in Colorado were explored as early as 1874. W. H. Jackson, who led the government party, found there many small dwellings twelve down by the weather. The next year he was followed by Prof. W. H. Holmes, later chief of the bureau of American ethnology, who drew attention to the remarkable stone towers so characteristic of the region.

Holmes's illustrations attracted little attention because of their inferiority to the better-known ruins of Arizona and New Mexico. Had silence of the explorers followed up the side canyon of the Mancos they would have then discovered ruins which are, in the words of Baron Gosse Nordenskiold, the talented Swedish explorer, "so magnificent that they surpass anything of the kind known in the United States."

Monument of Bygone Ages.

Baron Nordenskiold thus describes in his book, "The Cliff Dwellers of the Mesa Verde," the discovery of the wonderful dwellings in this side canyon of the Mancos:

"The honor of the discovery of these remarkable ruins belongs to Richard and Alfred Wetherill of Mancos. The family owns large herds of cattle, which wander about on the Mesa Verde. The care of these herds often calls for long rides on the mesa and in its labyrinth of canyons. During these long excursions rules, the one more magnificent than the other, have been discovered. The two latest were found by Richard Wetherill and Charley Mason one December day while, as they say, riding parallel through the pinyon wood on the mesa in search of a stray herd. They had dismounted and had taken the reins on the edge of a deep canyon. In the opposite cliff, sheltered by a huge massive vault of rock, there lay before their astonished eyes a whole town, with towers and walls, rising out of a heap of ruins. This grand monument of bygone ages seemed to them well deserving of the name of the Cliff Palace. Not far from this place, but in a different canyon, they discovered, on the same day, another very large cliff dwelling. To this they gave the name of Spruce Tree House, from a great spruce that jutted forth from the ruins.

"During the course of years Richard and Alfred Wetherill have explored the mesa and its canyons in all directions. They have thus gained a more thorough knowledge of its ruins than anyone. Together with their brothers, John, Clayton and Wynn, they have also carried out excavations during which a number of extremely interesting finds have been made."

Like Great Museum of Antiquities.

Spruce Tree house has a distinct likeness to a gigantic hotel built in a cave with a crescent-shaped roof, the floor of the cave being fifty feet above the floor of the canyon and the roof eighty feet high. Its total length is 216 feet, and its greatest width eighty-nine feet.

In places were rooms originally three stories in height, the final story at present having no roof except the top of the cave, but most of the rooms now to be seen are on the first floor, although in some places a second story is still standing. There have been traced 114 separate rooms in this great structure, besides dark subterranean ceremonial chambers, known as kivas. It has been estimated that the building had a population of about 250 natives.

Cliff palace, the second of these important ruins, is nearly three times the size of Spruce Tree House and has over 200 rooms. It was repaired in 1909 and now presents a very respectable appearance to the visitor. Spruce Tree House, it is in a cave, the roof of which arches about seventy-five feet above it, and is located in Cliff canyon, the floor of which is several hundred feet above the level of the canyon. It is approached by means of steps cut in the rock, and ladders.

Deep under the debris which covered the lower entrances of Cliff palace the excavators found the ancient entrance to the building, which leads by a gradual slope to the center of the village.

Castle is Most Wonderful.

Only recently there has been discovered, across the canyon from Cliff palace, the most remarkable of these remarkable ruins—a cut-and-polished stone citadel, already known as the "castle."

The stone edifice is built in the shape of an enormous "D." The vertical line of the "D" measures 152 feet, while the curved wall measures 295 feet, a mammoth affair covering nearly a city block. The architecture is perfect, the stones are polished to marble smoothness and every stone joins its neighbor with exactness.

The walls are hollow and filled with rooms, from which doors open into the main court. The top no doors have been found through this outer wall, and it is supposed that entrance either was made from the top by way of ladder, through a tunnel down under the walls.

Inclosed in the walls are circular stone rooms, called kivas, supposed to have been meeting places for the men. Probably twenty such rooms are included in the main court.

Pottery of exceedingly beautiful design and workmanship has been found in the interior of the walls. The fine prints of the women, who evidently laid the stones, are in the clay between the stones.

Even in Germany.

I had been in the country on business for three days and had not seen an up-to-date newspaper in all that time. My mind had been in the war and gone in the meantime was as you may imagine, somewhat lazy. My wife was at the house on a visit. I rushed up to her. "What news, my boss?" I cried. "What news?"

"Oh, darling," said she, "what do you think? Skirts are being worn shorter than ever."

Wisdom of the Wise.

Rhymer—I seem to be troubled with a bad memory of late.

Sparer—Losing your mind, eh?

Rhymer—No, not exactly, but often my best thoughts fail to return.

Sparer—Oh, is that all? I used to have the same trouble until I got into the habit of inclosing a stamped envelope with all my manuscript.

Holding Out on Sundays.

I don't know how it is in your church, common-sense Deacon Bert Brown, but I know that in mine if every member gave one-tenth of all he made to the Lord we could hire the finest preacher in New York city and build a church building 13 stories high and have have money enough left to save a whole army of heathens.—Kansas City Star.

AMID DIN OF BATTLE

PIPER'S MUSIC AROUSED INTEREST OF CORRESPONDENT.

American Ambulance Drivers Give Vivid Description of Scenes They Witnessed in Land Where Death Is Common.

These vivid sketches of battle scenes are given in letters written by Stephen Bonsal and W. R. Berry, who are attached to the American Volunteer Motor Ambulance corps, which has lost 6,000 wounded men in the few days of the main allied drive in France last September. The letters were received by Eliot Norton, of 2 Hector street, this city. Richard Norton writes:

"Still another picture that rises in my mind as I write is of one cloudy morning when, after a very tiring night, I was sitting on the caisson watching a rather heavy bombardment go by and suddenly through the din rose the sweet clear notes of a shepherd's pipe. It was the same reed pipe I have heard so often on the hills of Greece and Asia Minor, and the tune sweetly and age-old shepherd music telling of Pan and the nymphs and the splashed grottos where Youth lies buried. The piper was an ordinary pipe-pipe, a simple fantastic, and blood-stained Greek with knapsack on back, rifle slung over his shoulder, and his cap tilted forward down to the valley of death a few hundred yards beyond."

Mr. Berry pictures the stream of wounded.

"I can not name I shall not forget," he says. "There was a white chalk road between black pine forests with it, moving towards us, two, two groups of shuffling men, a blood-red band and a gray band, with their heads down to pass between them, but opposite, they seem to stop and raise them pass.

"Not one side moved a muddy, blood-stained company, where blue-red figures dropped to saddles, or clung with the gray figures to stretchers and leather; I saw a broken sword and empty scabbard, bandages, and even glazed with fatigue that stared from dead-white faces on the other passed a second company, muddy and blood-stained like the first, but there were gray-clad figures staggering in step, the stronger with their arms around their comrades, with the ribbon of the iron cross, and I saw again eyes glazed with fatigue and stared from dead-white faces.

"So passed us by a remnant of the Hunan regiment, and a group of German prisoners. Victors and vanquished—with only the white road between them."—New York Evening Post.

Those "Shade" Cartoons.

The property room of the cartoonist is a source of great activity these days. Mars, the war god, has been brought out and dusted, and his face touched up to look more fearsome than ever. At the war shades of the past have been, so to speak, dusted, and death, Prankenstein, Mars and the devil has been very busy. Kaiser Wilhelm, Nelson, Bismarck, King Edward, Julius Caesar, the ret-ghost of Hamlet's father, have been dusted, while the poetic shade of Napoleon, through many calls in service by the world's cartoonists, has become so well a mere shadow.—Cartoons Magazine.

Animals Natural Swimmers.

One of the swiftest swimming animals is the squirrel. A sportsman on one occasion, having at hand a squirrel born in captivity, which had never seen water, tossed it into a lake. The two groups of skulking men, a blood-red band and a gray band, with their heads down to pass between them, but opposite, they seem to stop and raise them pass.

Foreign Children Are Healthier.

The death rate among children born in New York city of native American parents is higher than among children of foreign parents, according to a report by Dr. William H. Guilfoy, registrar of the health department. Children of native white parents, the report says, die at the rate of 44 males and 35 females out of every 1,000 before attaining the age of five years. The death rate for infants under one month, and negro, is 73 males and 65 females. Children of foreign-born parents show a mortality during the five years of 35 males and 31 females. The lowest mortality rate is given in the records to Russian-born mothers. The birth rate among foreign-born mothers is almost three times greater than among native mothers.—New York Times.

OREGON HAS GREEN PETUNIA

By one of nature's curious "accidents" a green petunia has been evolved at the state fair grounds, which is attracting attention of florists. Discovery of the floral freak was made by Professor Peck of the Oregon Agricultural college.

So far as Professor Peck knows, no petunia of this color has ever been grown and he intends to preserve slips from the plant in order to grow a full bed of this peculiar flower next year. In the riot of purple, red, pink, white and other shades of petunias by the grounds, the green petunia is almost lost, but close investigation will show the observer the blossom scattered among their more brilliant neighbors.

How the green petunia originated is not one of nature's secrets, but Professor Peck says that it may have sprung either from seedling stock, or, as he is more inclined to believe, by a bad variation from the Pride of Portland or Irrigon variety. These two varieties were planted in the beds where the green petunia has been evolved at the state fair grounds, which is attracting attention of florists. Discovery of the floral freak was made by Professor Peck of the Oregon Agricultural college.

LUCK OF THE HORSESHOE

Popular Superstition Has Been Traced to an English Demon of Thirteenth Century.

Why is the horseshoe considered a sign of good luck? There is nothing beautiful or pretty about a horse's castoff iron shoe, and no doubt not one horseshoe believer in a million can tell why he treasures it.

The origin of the superstition can be traced back to the thirteenth century.

"The monk Gervaise of Tilbury informs us that at that time there was a kind of demon in England which appeared as a horse running on three legs and with sparkling eyes, breathing out flames of fire, and it was a sign that a conflagration would follow wherever it trod.

Hence, as giving a sinister warning, this mysterious horse was regarded as a friendly spirit, and the animal in general was believed to be a benefactor to mankind.

A horse tooth carried in the pocket prevented tooth ache; it was a sign of good luck to find a horseshoe, and one was placed under the pillow of a child to cure the ague, or instead of a bullet, to prevent it catching fire. This led to its general adoption as a protective symbol.—Stray Stories.

New Idea in Eyeglasses.

In an effort to devise a means of mounting eyeglasses so as to avoid the skin irritation sometimes caused by the bows resting around the ears and the bridge pinching the nose, a Nebraska inventor has patented an odd idea for suspending the lenses before the eyes. While the arrangement cannot be called an attractive one as far as appearances are concerned, it may benefit certain persons who are compelled to wear glasses constantly and find the ordinary mountings objectionable. Large lenses, each having a straight wire bow inside so as to fit close to the nose, are secured at the top to an adjustable yoke. The terminals of this are fixed in a headgear, or cap. In this manner the weight of the glasses is supported above the nose, the lenses merely hanging in front of the eyes.

Dubious Praise.

"I stand on my record," said the candidate, pompously.

"Whoever shooted a member of the opposition.

"How now, my brother?"

"If you can do that you are as surefooted as a mountain goat and as light as thistledown."

Boundary Finally Settled.

The old boundary dispute between Massachusetts and Ohio, which was begun before Michigan became a state, was never settled until the last summer when a new line of bandsmen grabbed land and agitated as she whispered breathlessly:

"Let us at once, Earle!"

"Why, what is the matter?" inquired her better half drowsily.

"Burglars!" shuddered Mrs. Pelham. "Oh, do be careful! I've been over half an hour lying awake and listening to suspicious sounds.

"The wind, I suppose."

"No! I thought so at first, but found I was mistaken," continued Mrs. Pelham in a timorous voice. "First I heard the front door rattle. Then someone tried the side window. Then there was a window lifted in the parlor. Oh I am sure someone is up there! Now Earle—do you not hear?"

"You're right, Rachel," assented Mr. Pelham, after a moment of intense listening.

There was no doubting the fact that the floor overhead creaked as burglars footsteps crossed it. Then there was a scraping sound, as of someone pulling a trunk or box over the boards. Then a breaking sound.

Mr. Pelham got out of bed, dressed, and lighting a lamp got a revolver from a bureau drawer. His wife followed his example by throwing on a dress. She was close behind him as they crept up the attic stairs.

"Oh, be careful!" she implored whispeingly, as they reached the top of the stairs, and a low, vague crooning sound reached their hearing from beyond the threshold of the attic door.

"Hold the lamp!" directed her husband. "When I pull the door open suddenly lift it so I can see where to fire."

Mr. Pelham gave the door a quick pull. With a trembling hand his wife lifted and extended the lamp.

"Don't—don't shoot!" almost screamed Mrs. Pelham. "It's a girl—a woman!"

The flickering lamp fell across a young woman, who, sitting softly to herself and taking dress after dress from a trunk she had opened, she turned toward the intruders in a surprised way.

"Visitors," she observed in a soft, plaintive tone. "You will have to excuse me till I get ready to go down and meet my guests. I have just arrived home. Some wicked people stole me from my husband and I escaped—"

"Oh, Earle!" gasped Mrs. Pelham, turnin at her husband's side, "don't you understand? It's that poor lady next door they mistook as dead. Oh, quick! quick! run for her husband. She has found home at last—and see, that open window. She must have reached it with the stepladder."

Mr. Pelham, terribly excited, hurried away. Mrs. Pelham advanced to the side of the woman, whose garments were nearly in rags.

"Pick out your dress, dear," she said soothingly. "Your husband will be here soon."

"The strangers in the house!" became the other suspiciously.

"Oh, we are just guests," assured Mrs. Pelham. "You will find everything in order below."

"Was a stepladder used for Robert Mason when his neighbor advised him of the strange arrival of the night. He reclaimed himself as he realized the situation. As he neared the attic, with a rush of delight he heard the low, sweet voice:

"Pick out! Pick out! Pick out!"

"Is it—is it—these wicked men who stole me away from you—"

"Come entirely out of our life, my darling," assured Mason. "Come to your own rooms and get ready to join your kind relatives at a little lunch, to be prepared, and made a sign to the Pelhams, who retired.

Half an hour later Mr. Mason led his wife, neatly dressed and looking calm and happy, into the rooms below. That quick-witted Mrs. Pelham had spread out a small reception. In the letter the program of "visitors" was carried out, and in the eyes of the poor wanderer all could trace a slow but sure returning of reason.

"You will have to keep up the pretense of going over to the next house till I can arrange otherwise," whispered Mr. Mason to Mr. Pelham.

"Oh, you mustn't disturb your wife with anything," answered Mrs. Pelham. "And besides—we like the little house best."

Famously good people, the Pelhams shared the glad, grateful joy of their landlord, as the days went on and Mrs. Mason came back into the full possession of reason and health.

this recital. "I will be more charitable in my judgments after this."

In Pelham's mind was linked with Mason personally in routing the old house of the Pelhams, a family long known as an asset. After the death of the parents of his wife, the last of the line passed into the old home. Now he was renting it furnished and had taken up more limited quarters in the adjoining cottage, which he occupied.

Mrs. Mason was not lost moved in. Mrs. Pelham was busy all day long getting the interior in order. Her husband had taken a leave of the throughs, removed the screens, tidied up the garden and fed rabbits, and he felt pretty well wearied with their unusual labor.

"Has the lady called on you yet, Earle?" Mrs. Pelham remarked. "I wish we had taken the one Mr. Mason occupies."

"I don't know that we could get it," observed her husband. "I should think was doing to sell both places if he could and leave the town. The asset stions of this old house, where his unfortunate wife was born, must be very painful to him.

Robert Mason had given up his wife as dead. In trying to locate her after her escape from the sanitarium the searcher had discovered several clues that led them to believe that the fugitive had wandered into the swamp district. That was a dangerous and interminable swamp spot, and three days after the disappearance of Mrs. Mason a fire had swept the greater portion of it. There was every reason to believe that Mrs. Mason had perished

In a distressing feature of her fate was the fact that the physician in charge of the sanitarium had entertained great hopes of her eventual recovery. She had been improving for some weeks prior to her escape.

It was about midnight when Mr. Pelham, sleepily asleep, was awakened from his slumbers by a quick nudge from his wife. Her voice was tremulous and agitated as she whispered breathlessly:

"Let us at once, Earle!"

"Why, what is the matter?" inquired her better half drowsily.

"Burglars!" shuddered Mrs. Pelham. "Oh, do be careful! I've been over half an hour lying awake and listening to suspicious sounds.

HANDICRAFT FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

A TOY VILLA.

The suggestion in Fig. 1 for a villa beside a lake can be elaborated upon by adding cottages, summer houses, paths and roadways. If you wish First find a dishpan, washtub, or other receptacle to hold water for the lake; this is a hole several feet away from a corner of the yard. Then between the lake and the corner, pile up earth to form hills.

The log house is built of straight sticks cut from branches. Figure 2 shows it completed, and Fig. 3 shows how the walls are built. Notch the stick logs an inch from each end, on two sides (Fig. 4), and place the sticks so the notched ends will come over one another (Fig. 3). Where there is a window or doorway, use shorter sticks, and bind together the ends next to the openings with string (Fig. 3). The stick logs between each doorway and windows (Fig. 2) are tied at both ends with string.

There must be a windmill, and Fig. 5 shows one that is easily built. Make a paper pinwheel (C, Fig. 5) by cutting a six-inch square of paper from corner to corner (Fig. 7), then cutting along the creases from the corners to within an inch of the center, and then turning over one-half of each corner and fastening with a pin through the corners and center (D). A stick into the ground (A, Fig. 5), pivot a short stick on its top (B, Fig. 5), and to one end of this short stick drive the center pin of the pinwheel, and to the other end tack a cardboard tail (E). Four sticks driven into the ground several inches from the base of stick A, with their tops tied near the top of A, will complete the windmill.

Figure 9 shows a hand pump, and Fig. 10 shows how it is made of a clothespin (A), and a short peg (B) fastened in its slot for a spout, and a short stick (C) pivoted with a small nail in the spindle. Put carrots through a meat chopper, then cook in boiling water until tender, and use as a bed for the end of the cooking. Drain and add butter, a dash of cayenne and a little parsley. Place this with a roast of any kind and see how your family will enjoy the dish.

Put cauliflo to be used on the dinner table into the oven for half an hour to brown. Serve with hot gravy.

Cut a pound of beans into two or three slices, and boil together in 1000 and now pickerel, a very respectable appearance to the visitor, the Spruce Tree house, it is in a cave, the roof of which arches about seventy-five feet above it, and is located in Cliff canyon, the floor of which is several hundred feet above the level of the canyon. It is approached by means of steps cut in the rock, and ladders.

Deep under the debris which covered the lower entrances of Cliff palace the excavators found the ancient entrance to the building, which leads by a gradual slope to the center of the village.

Castle is Most Wonderful.

Only recently there has been discovered, across the canyon from Cliff palace, the most remarkable of these remarkable ruins—a cut-and-polished stone citadel, already known as the "castle."

The stone edifice is built in the shape of an enormous "D." The vertical line of the "D" measures 152 feet, while the curved wall measures 295 feet, a mammoth affair covering nearly a city block. The architecture is perfect, the stones are polished to marble smoothness and every stone joins its neighbor with exactness.

The walls are hollow and filled with rooms, from which doors open into the main court. The top no doors have been found through this outer wall, and it is supposed that entrance either was made from the top by way of ladder, through a tunnel down under the walls.

Inclosed in the walls are circular stone rooms, called kivas, supposed to have been meeting places for the men. Probably twenty such rooms are included in the main court.

Pottery of exceedingly beautiful design and workmanship has been found in the interior of the walls. The fine prints of the women, who evidently laid the stones, are in the clay between the stones.

A HOME-MADE AMERICAN FLAG.

Flag-making is within the ability of any girl handy with the needle. A medium-sized flag requires but little more work than a small one, and for this reason I have shown in Fig. 1 a diagram for a flag six feet in length. It will be seen that these dimensions if you want a flag of different length.

Red, white and blue bunting for the stripes and field can be purchased at any dry goods store.

After cutting the stripes three inches wide, sew them together, thinking in their edges slightly, as shown in Figs. 2 and 3, and sewing with a double row of stitching. The top and bottom red stripes should be cut from the selvedge of the cloth, so their outer edge will not have to be finished off. Join the blue field to the stripes in the same way you joined the red stripes.

With the field and stripes assembled, cut a piece of canvas for the staff edge, doubling this over the side of the blue field and fold, turning in the edges and sewing with a double row of stitching (Fig. 4). Then buy a couple of large iron washers at the hardware store, for grommets (Fig. 4), and sew these to the doubled binding edge, one at each corner, to the ropes to be fastening the flag to a pole.

Cutting and sewing on the stars and stripes can and pinking. For the forty-eight stars needed you must cut twice—many, because they must be fastened upon both sides of the field. To make a pattern for the five-pointed stars, first describe a circle four inches in diameter upon a piece of cardboard, and divide the circumference into five equal parts (Fig. 5); then connect the five division points with straight lines (Fig. 6) cut out the piece (Fig. 7), and carefully mark out the stars upon cloth, using the centers for the stars by ruling lines horizontally and vertically across the field, so the positions will be the same as shown in Fig. 1. Then, in sewing the stars in place, stitch down the edges and around the centers, as indicated in Fig. 8.

A round rag-pole, nicely painted with a brass curtain-pole ball screwed into the top, and a brass ball for the pole (Fig. 9). Screw screw-eyes into it, as shown in the sketch, to run the ropes for holding the flag, another at the base, to which the supporting stays to, and a fourth at D. Screw-eyes D should be large, and two others of the same size (B, Fig. 10) should be screwed into the window sill or other ledge on which the flag is to be supported, and a peg (F) cut to fit the eyes. By placing screw-eye D between screw-eyes B, and slipping peg F through the three, the end of the pole will be held securely. But before this end is fastened, the stays (Fig. 9) must be tied to screw-eye C and to screw-eyes screwed into the sides of the window, as shown in Fig. 10, to carry all of the weight of the pole.

HOMELY FRUITS.

Cranberries are so well liked and are so appetizing served in different ways that a few ways to prepare them, will not come amiss. When you have a small quantity prepare as well as delicious serve with your roast the following sherbet.

Cranberry Sherbet.

Cranberries should be carefully looked over, and after cooling put into glass or stoneware dish mold. If one cares to have them retained they may be put through a sieve as soon as they are cooked, then mold in any desired form. For the sherbet take four cupfuls of sieved cranberry juice, add the strained juice of six oranges and four cupfuls of sugar; freeze until mushy, then add the whites of four eggs beaten stiff, and finish freezing.

Cranberry Frappe.—Boil a quart of cranberries and two cups of water for ten minutes. Strain through a sieve into a jar, add two cupfuls of sugar, cold water, and a little lemon juice. Place in a tightly covered jar. Cool and serve in glasses.

Harmits.—Take two cupfuls of brown sugar, a cupful of butter, and when well creamed add one egg, well beaten, one cupful of sour milk, a teaspoonful of soda, dissolved in it, and one hour's work. Add a teaspoonful each of cinnamon and nutmeg, a half cupful of chopped almonds and a cupful of chopped raisins, cut in all lengths.

Sponge Sweetness.—Make an ordinary sponge cake in a shallow tin. Cut in small oblongs and cover with chocolate icing. When cold drop drops of icing to represent dominoes. When plain cake has become a trifle stale, put it in thin slices and put jam, jelly or marmalade between the layers, then cut in fancy shapes and covered with boiled frosting.

Date Filling for Cake.—Chop two cupfuls of dates, and two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, one-half cupful of powdered sugar and a half cupful of whipped cream. Mix all together and spread on top and between each layer of layer cake.

DELICIOUS BUTTERMILK.

Our Welsh friends have made a hot dish which might be called buttermilk soup and is considered a great treat by them. It is said to be a surprise to large numbers of people in cities and in the country that so many dainty dishes may be produced from buttermilk. We read of the sour-milk cure for purifying the alimentary canal, this last in the study of buttermilk, which was for a long time not at all appreciated.

Buttermilk cheese is now a favorite dish in many of our college towns, where a cafeteria is probable. This cheese is richer and finer grained than ordinary cottage cheese and once eaten it never leaves the memory.

Buttermilk Cheese.—This is the method used by Wisconsin experiment station for making the cheese: Heat the buttermilk slowly to 120 or 140 degrees F. Stir while it is heating. It may be done in a double boiler. After heating the curd settles to the bottom of the boiler and most of the whey may be poured off. The remainder of the whey is removed by draining through a cheesecloth, doubled in several thicknesses, to which salt and pepper or with salt and caraway seed. When mixed into a thick soft-seed butter, about a fourth in weight, is added, and sandwiches. It is called sandwich cheese.

Buttermilk Cream.—This is very similar to the cheese, and is intended to a lower temperature in heating. A hundred degrees F. is the required temperature, stirring constantly until the curd separates. Drain through a cheese cloth until the curd is like thick cream; season and serve as sandwich filling or as a dressing, with vinegar for salads, used in the place of the German cream dressing.

Pineapple Lacto.—Beat the yolks and whites of two eggs separately, add two or three cupfuls of sugar; mixed with two quarts of sour skim milk and 1½ cupfuls of pineapple. When partly frozen add the juice of two lemons. In place of the pineapple a half cupful of the juice of fruit may be used, or the juice of five oranges, or a cupful of strawberry juice, or half a cupful of raspberry juice, thus make lag any fruit lacto.

CAKES FOR TEA.

If one has on hand small cakes or cookies that will keep for some time, they may be made more satisfactory for an emergency by having them with grow stale, and is harder to make as new.

Lemon Delights.—Take a cupful of sugar, a half cupful of butter, a cupful and a half of flour, two eggs, one teaspoonful of baking powder, three tbsps. of milk, a cupful of water, the juice and rind of one lemon. Cream the butter and add the sugar and butter, then a pinch of salt added, the lemon rind, water, and juice. Stir in the flour sifted with the baking powder and fold in the whites of the eggs beaten stiff. Bake in gem pans and ice with lemon frosting, decorating with cake, with a pinch of preserved lemon peel.

Harmits.—Take two cupfuls of brown sugar, a cupful of butter, and when well creamed add one egg, well beaten, one cupful of sour milk, a teaspoonful of soda, dissolved in it, and one hour's work. Add a teaspoonful each of cinnamon and nutmeg, a half cupful of chopped almonds and a cupful of chopped raisins, cut in all lengths.

Sponge Sweetness.—Make an ordinary sponge cake in a shallow tin. Cut in small oblongs and cover with chocolate icing. When cold drop drops of icing to represent dominoes. When plain cake has become a trifle stale, put it in thin slices and put jam, jelly or marmalade between the layers, then cut in fancy shapes and covered with boiled frosting.

Date Filling for Cake.—Chop two cupfuls of dates, and two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, one-half cupful of powdered sugar and a half cupful of whipped cream. Mix all together and spread on top and between each of layer cake.

The KITCHEN CABINET

It is too common with all of us that it is customary in the nature of a most kindly to be overawed by fine clothes and fine furniture.—Dickens.

HELPFUL SUGGESTIONS.

Contrary to all rules and advice of our forefathers white woolen blankets, sweaters and wash underwear will not shrink or become yellow if washed in water as hot as the hand can bear it, and use plenty of soap, rinse thoroughly and hang out in any kind of pleasant weather. The trouble with flannels many times is that they are not washed thoroughly or not rinsed well. Plenty of hot suds is the secret.

Salends in cheap red should be used in hot water to flush all plates at least once a week. It removes the grease from the kitchen sink drain, and keeps it clean.

Carrot, that wholesome vegetable which is so little appreciated, will have one more good way to serve it the following is tried: Put carrots through a meat chopper, then cook in boiling water until tender, and use as a bed for the end of the cooking. Drain and add butter, a dash of cayenne and a little parsley. Place this with a roast of any kind and see how your family will enjoy the dish.

Put cauliflo to be used on the dinner table into the oven for half an hour to brown. Serve with hot gravy.

Cut a pound of beans into two or three slices, and boil together in 1000 and now pickerel, a very respectable appearance to the visitor, the Spruce Tree house, it is in a cave, the roof of which arches about seventy-five feet above it, and is located in Cliff canyon, the floor of which is several hundred feet above the level of the canyon. It is approached by means of steps cut in the rock, and ladders.

Deep under the debris which covered the lower entrances of Cliff palace the excavators found the ancient entrance to the building, which leads by a gradual slope to the center of the village.

Castle is Most Wonderful.

Only recently there has been discovered, across the canyon from Cliff palace, the most remarkable of these remarkable ruins—a cut-and-polished stone citadel, already known as the "castle."

The stone edifice is built in the shape of an enormous "D." The vertical line of the "D" measures 152 feet, while the curved wall measures 295 feet, a mammoth affair covering nearly a city block. The architecture is perfect, the stones are polished to marble smoothness and every stone joins its neighbor with exactness.

The walls are hollow and filled with rooms, from which doors open into the main court. The top no doors have been found through this outer wall, and it is supposed that entrance either was made from the top by way of ladder, through a tunnel down under the walls.

Inclosed in the walls are circular stone rooms, called kivas, supposed to have been meeting places for the men. Probably twenty such rooms are included in the main court.

Pottery of exceedingly beautiful design and workmanship has been found in the interior of the walls. The fine prints of the women, who evidently laid the stones, are in the clay between the stones.

"RED" SOON PARTS WITH HIS $20,000

Atlanta Character Had Howling Time While It Lasted—But How.

Atlanta, Ga.—The tragic experiences of Timon of Athens have just been duplicated by "Red" Russell of Atlanta, a man who, though not so great a philosopher as the Attic misanthrope, is equally not unknown to fame.

"When I had $20,000 and a big automobile I was always welcomed in the best saloons," says Russell, musing on the vicissitudes of fate, "but now when I haven't got a cent they throw me out of doors."

And Red's lament does more or less accurately describe exactly what has happened to him. For years past he has been a prominent figure on Decatur street. Two years ago he was in a railroad accident and had both his legs cut off. He got $20,000 in damages, bought a pair of fine cork legs and a racing automobile and lived, in honor of his nickname.

For six months Red was popular. He took his friends to ride and bought wine. The bartenders in the beer saloons were always glad to see him, for it meant a round of drinks for everybody.

Even the police were lenient with him when he skidded on two wheels and nearly shaved the bottom off the traffic officer's coat, for Red, in spite of his many faults, was generous and had a touch in his neck, had a generous smile and a kindly heart.

Well, Red went away, and when he came back his pockets were empty and his coats were frayed. Gone was the big touring car. Gone were the friends who had shared with kindly feeling toward humanity as when he was rich and half soused; Red marched into a saloon and announced:

"Well, boys, I'm back and broke. I guess I've got time to treat now."

Did they treat? They did not. The bartender hooted Red into the street, and for objecting to the treatment Red narrowly escaped a trip to the stockade.

POPULAR CAT HAS FANCIES

Feline at Dalton Believed to Be Descendant of Cat Made Famous by Mark Twain.

Dalton, Ga.—Being firmly convinced that it is a direct descendant of the cat made famous by Mark Twain in "Roughing It," a diminutive feline owned by C. R. Cargo has acquired an unusual taste for green beans, its appetite being different from Mark Twain's pet in that it craves beans rather than green cocoanut.

The cat, named for "Roughing It", now monumental bar in The West, recently a delegation of prominent citizens assembled at his home to show him up for a fine specimen of what his cat lived green cocoanut, they saw that he had only eaten the coconut meat for more.

Cargo's cat has several fondness for green beans. It has robbed garden after garden, for it likes to pull them off the stalk and devour them. Lately it has grown so lazy that it waits until a diminutive popping announces the fact that a neighbor is stringing beans for dinner.

LAD FALLS IN MOLTEN ROCK

Body Appears to Vanish, So Intense is Heat—Nothing But Bones Left.

Butte, Mont.—Edward Zachmann, aged nineteen, lost his balance while assisting in dumping a ladleful of slag into a pot containing a few days ago and pitched headlong into the pot of molten rock, being submerged and burned before the eyes of his companions.

Although his body was immediately pulled out of the slag by means of long iron hooks, nothing remained except charred bones, with hardly a shred of clothing attached. The body seemed to vanish into a mist, according to those who witnessed the accident, the instant that it struck the boiling hot rock.

TIRES OF JAIL, PAYS $22

Husey Found He Could Not Spite Court So He Decided to Settle.

Everett.—One night in jail was enough for Carl Husey of Stanwood, who had announced that he would serve time rather than pay $25 fine imposed upon him for violation of the game code.

He found that he did not spite the court by staying in jail and agreed to pay $25 minus $3 allowed him for the one day of confinement.

O. D. Hammond began work Tuesday on his south side sewer contract.

Geo. W. Priest leaves today to join his wife in Detroit, to spend Xmas with friends.

The fishing tug Parmelee is receiving new decks and deck-beams. S. W. Swaties is doing the work.

The heavy fall of snow for the season fell Saturday night of over a foot. It has fell almost continuously since.

The Christmas program by the M. E. Sunday school will be of unusual interest Friday night. All are invited.

E. W. Coulter who has been traveling extensively this fall and winter for the Ferry Seed Co., is home for the holidays.

Morris Moore, an employee of the Dodge Motor Works, Detroit, is here to spend Xmas with his brother, Warren Moore.

Skating at the Rink Christmas afternoon. Masquerade in the evening. Spend the Xmas with us—a good time guaranteed.

Owing to continued bad health, Leon Hanshew has resigned his position as mail carrier on Route 3, to take effect January first.

On Friday evening, of this week, is the election of officers of the Maccabees. Every member is requested to be present at the meeting.

Wm. Finncan Jr., goes to Chicago this week to work for the remainder of the winter in the Booth offices. He will re-same work here in the spring.

The Baptist Society of Bergess will serve a pot-luck supper at the home of William Gregory, Wednesday evening, Dec. 22. All are cordially invited to attend and have a good supper and a good time.

A somewhat serious accident to the publisher's sanctified person, and seven illnesses in his family, prevented any special attention to our Christmas issue that the occasion justified. We aim to give our readers fifty-two good issues in the year, without "spurts," and we are doing it.

Read the clubbing announcement printed in another column.—Four standard publications for 50 cents! The Sun and the Sentinel, for $2.00, and a Handy Kitchen Implement thrown in. Avail yourself of this great chance before it expires. To new subscribers only, or renewals of old names for one full year in advance.

George Reinhart, formerly one of the Charlevoix police force, and for several years past night watchman at the Inn, was adjudged an insane person by the Judge of Probate on Tuesday. He was taken to the Traverse City State Hospital on Wednesday morning. Reinhart was not violent, but has been acting strangely of late, and brooded very much over his inability to get work. He has a family.

Next Wednesday's feature at the Majestic is a very wide deviation from the subjects that have preceded it. "The Key to Yesterday" is a very stirring story of adventure and devotion, featuring Carlyle Blackwell, who is a very proficient movie actor. He is supported by J. Francis Dillon, Edna Moyo, John J. Sheehon and John Prescott, all way up in the screen art.

The Charlevoix State Savings Bank will round up the year 1915 in the usual prosperous manner. At the last meeting of the Board of Directors a dividend of 7 per cent was declared to be paid at the close of the year to stockholders of record Dec. 20, 1915. Besides this a neat sum will be transferred to surplus. This institution shows a very substantial growth during the past year which speaks well for the officers and directors as well as for our city and community.

Louis Orlowski, wife and child, left Wednesday for Victor, Iowa, to visit Mrs. Orlowski's parents. They will be gone several weeks.

A large delegation of Odd Fellow Encampment members from Boyne City, visited their Charlevoix brethren Saturday night.

John Kelly and family left Wednesday for Grand Haven, for the remainder of the winter. Mr. Kelly will be engaged in a machine shop.

"Good Will To Men" is the title of the Christmas program to be rendered by the Congregational Sunday School next Friday evening. The offering will be sent to the Missionaries in Turkey for relief work.

Capt. Chas. Roe, of Harbor Springs, came over Tuesday and made the Inland trip on the Columbia Wednesday. Capt. Roe says the firm had plans for re-opening the City of Boyne this winter, but they have been declared off by reason of the prohibitive provisions of the seaman's law. Even if the unjust law is amended or repealed this winter, it will be too late to do the work contemplated, so we may expect to see the boat lie at the dock next summer.

WHAT ABOUT IT LAD?

New Year's day is no more appropriate day for good resolutions than any other of the year, except that it is a good day to reckon from.

One good rounded out calendar year of manliness is better, somehow, than parts of two. Manliness! My boy, have you thought of it? The word embraces everything that your mother or your sister hope for you. Your father's career depends upon the quality of your moral fibre.

From next Saturday, let all that is folly slip from your grasp, get a firm grip on the ladder, and climb.

The Sentinel wishes you a happy New Year.

NAVIGATION MATTERS

General navigation at this port is practically suspended. A few small fishing craft is dodging out and in, and the steamer Columbia is still making her inland trips.

Capt. Smith, of the Columbia, says he expects to continue his trips the remainder of this month anyway. But the Columbia is "smooth shod" and cannot with safety buck ice. He expects he will be compelled to make some of his St. James landings at the point, after which a few tug trips may be made with the mail.

Resolutions by the Charlevoix County Bar Association

At the coming Republication State Convention, a candidate for Justice of the Supreme Court of Michigan will be nominated to succeed the late Justice McAlvay, whose death made vacant the only position on the Supreme Bench held by a Northern Michigan Jurist.

Charlevoix County and the Thirteenth Judicial Circuit have in Judge Frederick W. Mayne, a scholar, lawyer, Judge and man who excels in all that these terms imply. His many years experience as a general practitioner, his knowledge of men and public affairs, his broad and sound views concerning the administration of the law by the courts are well known and recognized throughout the state and distinguish him not only as a man of Northern Michigan but of the whole state, capable of rendering the people valuable service in this honorable and important position.

Therefore Resolved, by the Charlevoix County Bar Association, that we, who have had an intimate association with Judge Mayne for many years and who know and appreciate his character and worth, do here and now unanimously and earnestly commend and endorse him to the people of this state as one of the very best men of Michigan available for this important office.

Resolved Further, that this Association and its members individually and collectively pledge our best endeavors from now until after the election to the work of securing the nomination and election of Judge Mayne to the office of Justice of the Supreme Court.

Dated, Charlevoix, Dec. 14, 1915.

The work of taking whitefish spawn from Torch Lake this season is meeting with only indifferent success. So far but one shipment of the whitefish eggs, about sixty quarts, has been made to the U. S. fish hatchery at Northville.

Traverse City Record: Captain E. N. Emery returned from Chicago yesterday where he made all arrangements with the Spielmann Bros. Company for putting in a cider mill at Bowers Harbor of sufficient capacity to grind up all the cider apples grown on the peninsula. The firm will not only back up the proposition but will also take the entire output of cider, thus insuring Captain Emory of a certain market for his product.

Some two weeks ago petitions were forwarded to Prosecuting Attorney Davis for the placing the ban on all gambling devices in this city including slot machine, cards, etc. Since then no action has been taken although immediate action was confidently expected by those backing the movement. The Sentinel and its approached by a newspaper man. But when the Secretary goes before a committee in either House of Congress, it is probable that he will be a little less debonair. Congress this winter is from Missouri and will have to show him. The Secretary has been quoted as favoring more taxes. But if he has so much money on hand as he claims it will be difficult to show why more taxes should be imposed.

When Mr. Bryan said that the differences between himself and the President are differences of principle, he gave a rather broad and unmistakable hint of his attitude on the "single term" plank of the Baltimore platform. He says he has no personal difference with the President. Of course not. He assumes that Mr. Wilson will adhere to the pledge of the Baltimore platform; if not, then there will be a difference between himself and the President on this principle—a difference that need not interfere with their personal friendship. But principles are something on which Mr. Bryan does not compromise, and he wants everybody to know it.

Just before Congress opened, the clerk at Washington was full of trial balloons sent up from the White House. A bond issue, a duty on sugar, higher income taxes, an inheritance tax, more stamp taxes—these and other suggestive features were sent out by the Administration bureaucrats by conditions of its own creating. The need of more taxes is due to the Democratic folly in tinkering with a tariff which produced ample revenues. Whatever course is finally decided upon to raise the money to cover the Democratic deficit and to provide funds for defense, it will have to be accompanied by a confession of Democratic inefficiency in handling the nation's finances.

Someone on Secretary Redfield's staff of writers editing the "Commerce Reports" has made the following startling discovery: "Aluminum foil, formerly imported, is now produced in New Jersey." For the benefit of this department it need not stated that aluminum foil is also manufactured at Hickseville, N. Y., and in one or two places in New England. According to George R. Meyercord, of Chicago, Illinois, who manufactures decalcomanias, these little aluminum leaf establishments were put out of business by the Underwood tariff law, which cut the rates on their product and turned the industry over to the Germans. The European war has permitted them to again start operations, but they will quickly succumb after the war has ceased, unless the Republican party is in power and a fair measure of protection is given them.

County Normal Notes

Francis Price was absent from school Thursday, morning on account of illness.

Marcia Goss and Francis Price are officers for this week.

The Lecture Course which was held last Tuesday night was very good. It was largely attended and enjoyed by everyone.

The normal students have finished their phonic charts and passepartouting and been taken up which the class are enjoying very much.

Hazel Richardson and Catherine LaLonde serve as housekeepers this week.

The class is taking up work in articulation and several catchy exercises have been practiced. This is very useful and will help in the work for next year.

Catherine LaLonde did some special work in practice teaching last Thursday afternoon.

Miss Howe received two cards last week with greetings to the class. One was from Miss Countis Mason of the class of 1912 who is attending school at Mt. Pleasant. The other was from Mrs. Hanger, formerly Miss Maggie Zeitler, of Lansing, who was a graduate of the class of 1906.

"THE BERNHARDT OF THE PHOTO-PLAY"

Miss Edith Storey who is portraying Viola Allen's part of Glory Quayle in "The Christian," the famous story by Hall Caine, the picturized version of which will be presented at the Majestic Theatre, on Monday December 27 has much to say relative to the value of acting in the drama and in pictures. Miss Storey is well qualified to speak since she has been called "The Bernhardt of the Screen," and prior to her entrance into pictures she was an actress on the stage.

In this photo-play Miss Storey is seen at her best, even though she has a splendid elocutionary delivery. But on the screen where this ability is useless, she shows every motion and runs the gamut of feeling merely by facial expression and gestures. She has it refined to such a science that it is possible for her to carry on a conversation with another, convey all of her meanings, and not make a sound.

Modern Marriage.

Marriage may not have been comparable to a profession. It is not now. It may once, for a woman have been comparable to slavery. It is not now. Marriage, in fact, cannot be classed with anything but itself. It is marriage and nothing else—a wonderful mixture of experiences and duties on many different planes. So far as its spiritual demands go, it may require everything or nothing. It may of necessity fill her life or leave it empty. To call it a profession is to blur its meaning, for it is much more than this and much less.

Absolute Truth.

Pain is a visitor to every home and usually it comes quite unexpectedly. Risk you not prepared for every emergency if you keep a small bottle of Sloan's Liniment handy. It is the greatest pain killer ever discovered. Simply laid on the skin—no rubbing required—it drives the pain away. It is really wood full.

Mervin H. Sessler, Berkeley, Cal. writes: "Last Saturday, after training around the Fairmon Exposition with wet feet, I came home with my neck so stiff that I could not turn. I applied Sloan's Liniment freely and went to bed. To my surprise, next morning the stiffness had almost disappeared four hours after the second application I was as good as new."

Theodore Roosevelt won't permit his name to be used in any primary, nor even as a Progressive candidate, and won't be in Chicago during the Republican convention.

Ueripe potatoes which are black and rotten no matter how long they are cooked, are thought by physicians to be the cause of a peculiar epidemic prevailing in some localities. The symptoms resembled those of grip, accompanied by emetic and purgative activities.

The hunting season in Michigan claimed ten lives in the upper peninsula, half of the number killed last year. Only about two-thirds the usual number of resident hunters took out licenses for big game this year. Besides the ten deaths, there were four accidents, the result of which are still doubtful.

The business of selling slates and slate pencils, once so general, is now confined almost entirely to remote districts and small villages. The picture of the old-fashioned child going to school always showed the slate as the principal equipment. Nowadays the pencil and the cheap writing pad are the things used instead. Not only are the more convenient, but hygiene pronounced slates unsanitary and that settled the matter.

In his report to the public domain commission, State Game Warden William R. Oates says that the proceeds from the sale of gun licenses up to the first of December amounted to $64,247.40 this year, as compared to $9,641.50 during the entire season of 1914. All the money received from the sale of hunters licenses is turned into a state fund for the propagation of game, and Warden Oates is of the opinion that the total amount to be collected from this source during 1915 will amount to more than $100,000.

Four pairs of silver foxes, valued at over $30,000 have just been placed on the fox farm of Wm. H. Smith, located just outside of the eastern limits of Muskegon. The animals were shipped from New Brunswick and were at once taken out to the farm, which has been especially prepared for them at a cost of several thousand dollars. Added foxes will be secured in the near future, the total investment in the venture being nearly $200,000, according to present plans. The farm is the first of its kind in the part of Michigan, if not in the entire state.

FATAL SHOOTING ACCIDENT

HAYES FARMER ACCIDENTALLY DISCHARGES SHOT GUN—RECEIVED FATAL INJURIES

The dead body of George Banks was found in an old barn near his home in Hayes township Tuesday.

Beside him was an old-fashioned hammer shot-gun with one barrel discharged. The charge had entered his abdomen.

Officers from this city went to the place and held examination, concluding that the death was accidental.

Banks leaves a mother, wife and three children.

SYNOPSIS.

Canalet, on the steamer Kaiser Petra, meets Blanche Blanchefort, who tells him her troubles. Her husband, Hector, aide, has left her, young Stephen has defined the father and himself is dead and finds that Hilton Toye, who shares the stateroom with Canalet, is engaged to Blanche. Canalet, however, is drawn toward the lady's side. When the duty papers are passed at Boulogne Toye sends word to Canalet that he must go at once, but thinks he is being watched and asks Canalet to take his place. Canalet, who did some boxing in the army, with the two Frenchmen, who had been Toye's friends, and the English detective, Chaters, dodgeonary, has been released from his promise to Toye, and he and Blanche go ashore.

"I wonder who can have done it!" "No do dee police, and they don't look much like finding out!"

"It must have been for his watch and money, don't you think? And yet they say he had no money on him!" Canalet kept silence; but she thought he winced. "Of course it must have been the man who ran off in the drive," she concluded hastily. "Where were you when it happened, Sweep?"

Somewhat bearishly he was recalling the Mediterranean movements of the Kaiser Petra, when a sudden first mention of the vessel's name he was freshly jockeyed.

"Sweep, you don't mean to say you came by a German steamer?"

"I do. It was the first going, and why should I waste a week? Besides, you can generally get a cabin to yourself on the German line."

"So this was why you're here before the end of the month," said Blanche. "Well, I call it most unpatriotic, but the cabin to yourself was certainly some excuse."

"That reminds me!" he exclaimed. "I hadn't it to myself all the way; there was another fellow in with me from Genoa; and the last night on board it came out that he knew you!"

"Who can it have been?"

"Toye, his name was. Hilton Toye."

"An American man! Oh, but I know him very well," said Blanche in a tone both strained and cordial. "He's great fun, Mr. Toye, with his delightful Americanisms, and the perfectly delightful way he says them!"

Canalet pondered like the primitive man he was, when taken at all by surprise; and that anybody, much less Blanche, should think Toye, of all people, either "delightful" or "great fun" was certainly a surprise to him, if it was nothing else. Of course it was nothing else, so his immediate knowledge; still, he was rather ready to think that Blanche was blushing, but forgot, if indeed he had been in a fit state to see it at the time, that she had partly drawn her arms into complipment across the gain. On the whole, it may be said that Canalet was rather vexed; finally, he was greatly disturbed as to the eventual basis which alone hoped to his mind.

"Where did you meet the fellow?" he inquired, with the suitable admixture of confidence and amusement.

"In the first instance, at Engadine." "Engadine! Where's that?"

"Only one of those places in Switzerland you never hear of, and yet now always for what they call winter sports."

She was not even smiling at his apparent ignorance; she was merely explaining one geographical point and another of general information. A "fine chaser-on" she must have thought her almost anxious not to identify herself too closely with a popular crash.

"And you became acquainted," said Canalet, but rather as though he was wondering why she had not.

"I dare say I didn't! Everything won't go into an annual letter. It was like taking a house for a year and with Betty and her husband."

"And after that he took a place down here?"

"Yes. I didn't meet him on the river, the following summer, and found he'd got rooms in one of the Nell Gwynne Cottages, I think, at Cookham."

"I see."

"But there was no more to see; there never had been much, but now Blanche was standing up and gazing out of the balcony into the belt of singing sunshine between the opposite side of the cabin and the invisible shore across away.

"Why, I couldn't we go down to Henley and get out the boat if you're really going to make an afternoon of it?" she cried, with her sweetest smile. Mademoiselle Blanche, and while she's making her mind, we can get a cabin to yourself on the German line."

"So this was why you're here before the end of the month," said Blanche. "Well, I call it most unpatriotic, but the cabin to yourself was certainly some excuse."

The above enormous profits made by the shrewd investors with the courage to back a young concern are a matter of record and undeniable. Duplicate by present stock offerings. You have such an OPPORTUNITY in this offering.

THE WEALTH we offer is a real and an accomplished fact—our company, if we did not increase our manufacturing facilities and working capital one cent, still could pay 50 percent on the investment offered in this advertisement. This we are now earning, this is an accomplished fact.

The proceeds from the sale of our stock will enable us to increase our output at least fourfold and with the economies this increased production will effect, we will then be earning about 200 percent on this investment.

THIS IS THE SMALL INVESTORS' OPPORTUNITY

By a special arrangement, we are enabled to offer one thousand investors this EXTRAORDINARY proposition.

Mail us ten dollars ($10.00), no more and no less, and we will mail you a Certificate for Forty (40) shares of the Treasury Stock of our Company, Fully Paid and Forever Non-Assessable, and descriptive literature of our company and its business.

This offer is made only to the first one thousand investors who answer this advertisement. Plain enough, first serve. If you are too late to share you send any amount less than ten dollars, your money will be returned by the next mail.

This offer is made to secure the co-operation of one thousand small stockholders in boosting the sale of Double Service Tires and to prevent large unusual interests from securing control.

The Double Service Tire and Rubber Company is incorporated under the stringent laws of the State of Ohio at $250,000.00, divided into 250,000 shares of a par value of $1.00 per share, all common, Fully Paid and Non-Assessable. Every share of stock and every stockholder being absolutely on an equal and even basis, all sharing alike in all earnings of the Company.

This is an established and going business and one which is at present earning net dividends equal to 50 percent on its entire capitalization, and offering net dividends equal to 50 percent on its entire capitalization, and with future dividend possibilities so big and so alluring that they seem almost unbelievable.

A company of practically any one of Akron's famous rubber tire companies reads more like a fairy tale than business facts. Early investors have made fortunes almost unbelievable and are still making them. The phenomenal growth and success of the Double Service Tire and Rubber Company but adds another chapter to this never-ending story of the fortunes made through the popularity of the automobile.

OUR GUARANTEE—YOUR PROTECTION

The fact that this Company is now earning at the rate of 50 percent on its entire capitalization, with less than one-third (⅓) issued, is a positive guarantee of your 80 percent and proof of the still larger earnings you will receive when their production facilities have been increased.

TELLS TALE OF SEA

Old Skipper Claims Islands in the Pacific.

Suit Discloses Thrilling Romance of Sorensen's Adventures at Sea and Fight for Ownership of Discovered Land.

Washington.—A narrative of adventure that would have set Robert Louis Stevenson's fingers tingling is disclosed by the filing in the Supreme court of a suit involving title to certain South Sea islands alleged to have been discovered by the defendant, Niels Peter Sorensen, while he was master of a sailing ship in the Pacific.

The suit was filed by Frederick Cleary Blizzard and John Grose, through Attorneys F. D. Davison and J. W. Marshall, Jr.

Evidence is offered to show that the plaintiffs acquired an interest in Sorensen's claim to the islands after the court is asked to enjoin the latter from carrying out his contracts with other unknown parties, to compel the disclosure of the terms of these latter contracts, and to see that any contracts already completed are made to operate for the benefit of the plaintiffs as well as for the defendant.

It is stated that Sorensen, who has been a citizen of the United States since 1876, and who served from 1887 to 1892 in the United States navy, discovered the islands, which are described as the Treasury group, Solomon and North Island of the Solomon group, and Green Island of the Cateret group.

The evidence of his title, it is stated, is in the logbook of the ship he commanded, documents of British officials, certified copies of registration by Australian officials, other written evidence and agreements with native chiefs, the latter lost by jurisdictional claims when they were held for registration.

It is alleged that Sorensen became involved in disputes in regard to trading, mining and other rights of the islands and that British officials in Australia attempted to deprive him of his rights by persecution and other means.

The plaintiffs aver that Sorensen came to Washington late in 1914 or early in 1915 to seek the good offices of the United States government in establishing his rights to the islands and in protecting his interests, and that he secured the services of the plaintiffs to assist him, agreeing to give each a one-fourth interest in his claims.

It is further alleged that the defendant has recently repudiated his contracts with the plaintiffs and has entered into other contracts with unknown parties.

With the bill of complaint the plaintiffs filed a copy of the plea in behalf of Sorensen, and thereupon filed with the state department on June 9 last, asking that this government intervene with Great Britain for the clearing of title to the islands.

Apostolic Renounces Wine.

The Apostolic was a week which first appeared at the end of the second century. The followers renounced marriage, wine and flesh foods. A second sect, which sprang up about 1031, wandered about, clothed in white, with long beards, dishevelled hair and bare heads, accompanied by women, called spiritual sisters, preaching against the church at Rome. The leaders was burned alive in 1200, his followers were dispersed in 1305 and the sect died out in 1406.

KILLED TWO FIGHTING BUCKS

Sportsman Runs Afoul of Law by Shooting More Than Legal Share of Deer.

Crivitz, Wis.—Harvey Villers of Kansas City is in bad with the state game wardens because he shot one of two bucks whose horns were interlocked when fighting. The state law allows a sportsman to shoot one buck. When Mr. Villers shot his buck he could not see that there was another near by.

When his game dropped he found he could not disentangle the horns, so he shot the other buck, intending to have the interlocked heads mounted. When the state game warden arrested him for having two bucks in his possession he explained in vain. The bucks were killed on the north branch of Thunder river, 30 miles from civilization, on Thunder mountain.

ANY weakling can make resolutions. Most people have a strong desire to keep them. That is perhaps why New Year resolutions are so often futile. The strong do not wait for high days and holy days to amend their ways or carry out their resolves. They obey Goethe's dictum: "Ye who have strength enough, Holdness has genius, power and magic in it."

And so it happens that the large army of people who wait for the New Year before offecting a reformation in their lives are seldom successful in carrying out their intentions. They are not possessed of the spirit of energy as, resolve, necessary to achievement. It may be argued that it is better to make good resolutions, even though they are not carried out, than not to make them at all. This is open to question, however. Unless one is absolutely determined to do what one has decreed, it is perhaps on the whole better not to make promises to oneself. Unfulfilled resolves continually repeated, tend to weaken the character, and to reduce one's faith in one's better aspirations and desires, which are conducive to strength and self-confidence.

Very little reason is nowadays for the pessimism of the average person, in fact, many people welcome any excuse, even the slightest one, for carrying out of their resolves. One individual determines, let us say, never to lose his temper. He comes down on New Year's morning with a set smile on his face. Alas! It is short lived. The whole world seems to conspire to drag him back to his former frame of mind. The coffee is cold, the waiters which look as dirtyas prone to be chiefly bills and begging epistles, he fails over the doorstep as he leaves the house. All these things, and many others, which, if right, would have helped him to conquer his weakness seem to drive him back into his original state, and before evening he is as bad as ever he has been.

Or, take another very general New Years resolution, that of getting up at a certain time in the morning. When the day dawns, any reason whatever is grasped at to evade this. The weather is too cold, the alarm was too loud enough, he is sure his watch is fast, he doesn't really feel well enough to risk getting up earlier than usual, and, after all, he asks himself, is there any real reason why he should? A thousand and one reasons crowd to the average individual will make to himself rather than perform what he has designed to do. The world is full of weakness of this kind, and the more they wobble the weaker they become.

Another reason perhaps why the average resolution-maker so seldom achieves their purpose is that they attempt too much. They make two, three, sometimes six resolutions at once, whereas one only should be undertaken successfully is quite an admirable feat.

As Thomas a Kempis says:

"If every year we could root out one vice we would sooner become perfect here." Impatience is at the root of many defeats. It is customary nowadays to sneer at the virtue for which the name of Job is synonymous, but those who say that patience is the virtue of an ass or a beggar virtue are not so wise as the Spanish proverb-maker, who said:

"Patience! and shuffle the cards." Most people shuffle the cards eagerly enough, but the patience is lacking. Nothing is gained by those who shuffle their fall back to the earth.

And so, if people at the commencement of a New Year arbitrarily shape their desires in accordance with their abilities, and instead of sighing for the unattainable and, if it be not too much to say, foolishness vanished to them, one would hear less of broken resolutions and failures.

"Do the duty which lies nearest to thee which thou knowest to be a duty, and thereby thy second duty will have become clearer." Carlyle.

The Turning of New Leaves.

Good resolutions have almost gone out of fashion. On the last night of the year we no longer sit down to revise or put into shape and resolve to be "better and wiser" than we have been in the past. It is of no use making resolutions, I never can keep them," is the saying heard on all sides. Yet the idea is a good one, however. It is commendable to resolve, and, if alarm clock helping one to get up half an hour earlier than usual in the morning, even though it results—as, alas! it too often does—in one getting up half an hour later, it is worth something, and is a beginning.

If people could live more in the present it would help them enormously in the carrying out of resolutions. Many people persist in being just a little ahead all the time.

"Tomorrow, I shall begin my reform," but the tomorrow of their imaginings never arrives.

Ancient and modern philosophers have agreed as to the dangers of procrastination. Such wise old diverse people as Horace, the Latin poet who flourished in B. C. 65, and modern persons who flourish (occasionally) at the present day, you know, you could only get the French Foreign Legion into their ranks, possesses half the deed." says Horace.

"Here to be wise, make a commencement."

"Do it now." is the cry command of the modern apostle of haste. Again, Horace says, "If you are anyone, now to live aright, give place to those who have learn d the lesson.

"Get on or get out," says a mankin, following in more concentrated, if less emphatic language the same line of thought on a somewhat lower plane. The one was concerned with the things of the soul and the spirit, the other with worldly advancement. There are some who contend that the two cannot go together, but if (as has been contended by many men of wisdom) what a man is is of more importance than what he has, it is well to make spiritual advancement as the years go by. If we have not made progress, we have gone back. The soul never stands still. Time has no terror for those who have learned wisdom.

Pass thou, will heart,
Will heart of mine that still
Hast half a mind to stay.
I grow too old a comrade.
Will you part?
Pass thou away.

Some people drag the follies and immaturities of youth into old age. There is wisdom in adjusting ancient to time, to profit by past experience, and to acquire the habit of proportion which refuses to magnify trifles into tragedies, and to worry over the inevitable.

THE FRENCH FOREIGN LEGION

DE MAUPASSANT, describing an officer, said that just to look at him made one feel martial. "He did not say warlike or bellicose; the idea he wished to convey was much more subtle. In the presence of this officer one assumed the military attitude of mind and body.

This is a phenomenon which exercises the attention of most people—women, however, observe it. Practically every constitutary man at the sight of a well set up, fully accoutred and martial-looking officer assumes something of a military bearing. And when the fine uniform and a marching column of soldiers fashion into view the civilian involuntarily throws back his shoulders and steps out with a more martial tread.

And as we are all civilians, so with soldiers. The ordinary regiment becomes more military in the presence of the crack regiment. The crack regiment itself gains something more when in proximity to a body of recruits, almost legendary, fame, such as the Foreign Legion.

The Legionaries handle campaigns of their own, and probably no body of troops has ever done such continuous fighting. The French over and over again have had occasion to call upon the Legion, and always other troops. They stiffen the mass, and make emulate their actions.

The Legion was sent out to the Crimea and gained considerable fame covering itself with glory, as that had been expected of it, but did reflect great credit on the judgment of those who had sent it out to help to inspire a whole army.

The Legion of 50 years ago was in a hard fix with a civil war on her hands. The Carlists, whom she was fighting, were just as good soldiers as her own, if not a shade better. Then the Queen's generals had recourse to the French Foreign Legion. Some of the Legionaries were only just the French Foreign Legion into their army they fell the shade of advantage would move over to their side. So the queen bought the Foreign Legion from the then king of France, and for four years the Legion belonged to Spain.

In the present war, part of the French Legion has been sent to the trouches of France and Flanders and Alsace and to the Dardanelles. Part of it remains in Africa, its normal habitat, doing some mighty vigorous campaigning in the Moroccan part of France's wonderful and extensive African empire.

The Americans and other foreigners who are enrolled as volunteers in the French army are put in contact with the Legionaries and the, while giving them scope for their fighting qualities and assuring them an opportunity for genuine campaigning, is the highest measure of protection for them. It guarantees them against foolish rashness, as well as against being led into traps or losing their head in critical moments.

Fighting is routine work with the Legionary, just as sailing a yacht is to the expert mariner. The winds may be different on each trip and the craft is never the same in the same way, but the expert knowledge of the technique of his trade makes the Legionary and the skipper each equal himself of his task in fullest fashion.

Officially the Foreign Legion is composed of eight thousand men. In reality it is understood it has twice double that number, and the Legion becomes readily a whole army corps, with the addition of some of France's colonial troops.

France for hundreds of years had regiments of German, Swiss, Irish, Scotch, Swiss, Italians and other foreigners enrolled in her ranks, but the present Foreign Legion may be considered as dating from 1831. One brief rule in its constitution says that the enlisting colonel may accept a man even though he does not possess a birth certificate or a certificate of baptism. Nearly all the nationalities represented in the Legion have been Swiss, Brown and Jones, of Germans Muller, Schwartz English and Scotch, Irish and Groat, of the French, Petit, Legrand an, Leclaire, and so on. and Wales; of the Italians, Rossi and Grossi, of the Poles, Sobieski and Sobieski.

The Legion has made for itself a name and a reputation. The Legion has made for itself a name and a reputation. The Legion has made for itself a name and a reputation.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Congregational church will meet at the home of Mrs. L. J. McLean, 102 Hurlbut Ave., Wednesday, January 5, at 2:30 p. m.

Don't lose sight of the "Big Four" clubbing arrangement which the SENTINEL offers. It is positively the greatest clubbing proposition yet offered in Charlevoix.

Judge Mayne left Monday morning for Lansing to attend a meeting of circuit judges. From there he goes to Detroit to hold a term of court for Wayne county.

Miss Addie Holly, cashier and chief clerk at the telephone office, leaves this week for Florida, where she will spend the remainder of the winter. Miss Price takes her place.

The steamer Columbia made her last Island trip Wednesday of this week. The mail will be carried by the St. James tug McCann as long as possible, probably to a date well along in January.

Work on the new Blanchard Hardware Co. block is progressing rapidly. The masonry is finished and the ornamental metal ceiling is being placed and painted. The first of February will see this fine building occupied and doing business.

Chas. S. Osborn, ex-governor, will be a candidate for the Republican nomination for president if Senator William Alden Smith is not actively in the race. This was Osborn's statement one day last week before departing for New York for the holidays.

Four freight steamers, now in service on the great lakes, are to be taken to New York to relieve the unusual freight congestion at that port by Charles W. Morse, who announced Friday he had signed a contract to purchase the ships from the Mutual Transit company of Buffalo. The transaction is said to involve more than $500,000.

Positive evidence of great industrial activity of Michigan during the past year is contained today in the report of State Banking Commissioner Merrick. An increase of over $60,000,000 in state bank deposits during last twelve months is shown. This is the largest increase ever made in a similar length of time Merrick reported.

Round and Pine Lakes are still open, with no signs of ice.

Plans for the establishment of a national game refuge, of 100,000 acres in Luce county, on the upper peninsula, are being seriously considered by the public domain commission of Michigan. State property in Luce county is so near the "forest primeval" as can be found anywhere in Michigan and officials believe the establishment of a refuge there would go far toward preventing the driving of all big game from the state.

The state game and fish department calls the attention of winter fishermen and sportsmen to the new law governing the spearing of fish through the ice. The new act has narrowed the time by two months during which fish may be speared. It is now lawful to spear fish through the ice only during the months of January and February. It is feared that many fishermen believe that the same law holds as in 1914 by which they were allowed to spear fish during December, January, February and March.

In balancing their books for the last year the officials of the Western Michigan Development bureau find that the finances of the bureau are in better condition than they have been in several years as more work has been done at less expense than in former years. The bureau will have a fair sized balance in the treasury with which to begin the new year and none of the funds have been overdrawn. All debts have been paid and for the first time since its organization the bureau will enter the newly ar with a clean state.

MARINE WINS BIG FORTUNE
Wealthiest Enlisted Man in United Services Retires After Thirty Years in Corps.

Seattle, Wash.—Sergeant Major James Deaver, United States marine corps, wealthiest enlisted man in the united services, was retired here recently after thirty years continuous service with Uncle Sam's sea soldiers, possessing real estate, stocks, bonds, mortgages, and personal property valued at more than one hundred thousand dollars.

Deaver had no capital when he entered the marine corps in 1885 and has been dependent entirely on his pay as an enlisted man and his own efforts in the accumulation of wealth.

He will continue in drat from the government about $70 a month retired pay for as long as he may live.

By strict economy Deaver managed to save several thousand dollars in the first fourteen years with the marines, and when he was transferred to Seattle in 1899, predicted that this city would one day be the metropolis of the great Northwest. He wisely invested his savings in Seattle realty when values were low. He sold his holdings several times and reinvested opportunity with his wealth passed the six figure mark.

The wealthiest enlisted man resides with his wife and young son in their beautiful home at 4225 South Alki street, overlooking the waters of Puget Sound.

PHYSICIANS BELIEVE MAN WAS MURDERED

The physicians called in the case of George Banks, the Charlevoix county man, who was found dead in a barn near his home Tuesday night do not believe the man committed suicide or that he was killed by the accidental discharge of a gun, says the Petoskey News. They believe some one else pulled the trigger of the gun which caused his death.

The hard beaten path from the road to the barn, where the man was found, has so far failed to give any clue to support this belief but the physicians declare the wound, low in the abdomen, could not have been caused by the man himself, and so far they have failed to see how it could have been caused by an accidental discharge of the gun found by the dead man's body.

Mr. Banks was one of those happy-go-lucky sort of fellows and his friends declare he has not had enough trouble or bad luck to cause him to kill himself. He played with his children in a jolly way just before leaving his house. He told his wife he was going to the Gray farm to pull out a drag to use in skidding logs from the woods.

When found the body was laying just inside the barn door with the feet almost sticking out through the doorway. The gun was laying across one leg and under the other and the wound showed that the muzzle of the gun was pressed close to the body when it was discharged.

CHARLIE BREWSTER GETS NEW JOB

Charles E. Brewster, former chief deputy state game warden of Michigan, and well known in Charlevoix, has resigned his position with the biological survey of the agricultural department and accepted an important post with the game commission of the state of Pennsylvania.

This state is attempting to restock with game large areas of certain counties and Mr. Brewster has been put in charge of the work. He is at present on a mission to Mexico where he will contract with natives for the trap large numbers of quail. When he gets several thousand healthy specimens the bird he will return with them to Pennsylvania. The same plan is to be followed in restocking the state with deer, rabbit and other game.

Too Much for Her.

A little girl who was enrolled in the extension department of the Y. W. C. A. was asked by one of the recreation of the association why she no longer attended the criminal grammar class. "Well," replied the girl, "I always thought a conjunction was a place where trains stopped. When I learned it was a word that connected other words the class was too much for me."

Antiseptics of Snakebite.

A common cold and one not generally known is the recurring symptom of insanity on or about the anniversary of a bite. The victim of a snakebite may have these recurring symptoms for ten or twelve years, and there is a case on record where the recurring symptoms lasted for twenty-five years.

Although 571 miles of state reward road have been approved since July 1 by the state highway department, lack of funds in the treasury has made it necessary for counties to go without reimbursement for 188 miles, for the present. After the first of the year, when more money is procured by the treasury, it will be necessary for $200,101 to be paid to counties which have made highway improvement. Two hundred and ninety-one miles of single state reward road have been built within the last five months, for which the payment of $205,467 was authorized by the highway department, and in the same period 32 miles of state trunk line, for which the state has paid $102,435, have been constructed. The state still have about $750,000, to carry on the state reward work if the new auto tax law stands the court test.

Boyne Citizens:—It is impossible to play a slot machine, take a chance on a punch board or play a game of cards or pool without violating the law at stake, in Boyne City. The petition signed by some seventy citizens which was presented to the prosecuting attorney and referred by him back to the council, was presented Monday night. Inasmuch as the petition was addressed to the prosecutor the City Dads did not feel it their duty or privilege to take up the matter officially. Deputy Sheriff Houghton notified all places of business where a game of chance was in operation that they would have to be closed. Immediately slot machines were taken out, cards and dice disposed of and punch boards removed. At noon the lid was on tight with the avowed intention of the various business men to keep it on.

Boyne Citizen: A petition was drawn up yesterday and now being circulated which asks the city commissioners the city council to enforce the blue laws here relative to Sunday closing. It asks for absolute compliance with the Sunday blue livery stables to drug stores. At noon today forty-four signatures had been obtained. As one said to some back' of those opposed to the putting on of the lid here. To the credit of those men who are most vitally interested in the throwing out of the games of chance, be it said they were not the instigators of the movement. Such sections merit only the strongest condemnation from all people whether favoring or opposing the putting on of the lid. It finds its birth in pure and simple (with emphasis on the latter) spite work. There is no moral ground for the asking of the enforcement of the blue laws and those agitating the question do not desire that the Sabbath be more sacredly kept.

Adage Traced to Bible.

"A little bread and no meat, is an almost universal adage based on the idea that the sustenance of a person is in proportion of the amount of his sales out all strange as it may seem, recent inquiries of them to those who can understand, Jews in Rochesterdo do not. Curse not the king, nor, not in thy bedchamber; for the fowl of the air shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter."

COUGHS AND COLDS ARE DANGEROUS

Few of us realize the danger of Coughs and Colds. We consider them common and harmless ailments. Pneumonia follows in one every third person who has had a cold. AMERICANS AIDING FRANCE'S BLIND
Victims of War Are Being Taught Trades.
WINIFRED HOLT ACTIVE.

She Went to Paris After the Outbreak of War and Succeeded in Gathering Funds Among American Friends to Carry on Work—Keeping Away Despondency Big Task.

Paris.—Blind for life is the fate that has overtaken many of France's soldiers who have not been permitted to offer their lives on the altar of patriotism.

Trench warfare, the concession of huge artillery, poisonous gases, flaming fire, have all contributed to counts—wounds to the head, only too often resulting in total blindness.

American initiative again has stepped in the fore. A group of American ladies have banded themselves into a committee to assist in teaching the blind Miss Winifred Holt, well known in America for her work with the blind in the Lighthouse in New York city, was the originator of the idea.

She was in London when the war broke out as American delegate to the international congress of the blind in that city. Her experience in ministering to the war victims to aid those who have been rendered sightless, she came to Paris and succeeded in gathering sufficient funds among American friends to carry on a limited amount of work with the soldiers.

"The darkest moments in a soldier's life are those when for the first time he realizes that he never will be able to see again." Miss Holt recently declared. "Without prompt expert assistance some other form of despair to the blind man is apt to become despondent. to lose his intelligence or to drift into an apathy from which it is difficult if not impossible to rouse him.

"The committee's first task is to find the blind sufferers, some of whom are marooned in improvised hospitals, farm houses or chateaux, and many of whom are concealed in the large hospitals or Red Cross stations. The committee sends clairvoyants to search for these blind soldiers, and for those other victims, physically able to start the process of putting eyes on their finger tips and giving them light through work.

The mastery of war has just given a special building to be used entirely for the instruction of the blind. Many blind teachers have come forward and offered their services to Miss Holt to serve under her guidance. A class in instruction is held every morning in one of the large hotels. The men come here to start their lives over again.

Typewriters and stereotype machines especially constructed for the blind have been imported from America for their instruction. The men are taught the "touch" typewriting system, similar to that taught in many of our large business schools and colleges.

For military work and reading the International Braille raised letter system is used. The letters resemble the Morse telegraphic code in that they are a series of dots and dashes, punched through heavy parchment-like paper by a stylus. Checkerboards, playing cards, musical instruments, rattan for basket weaving, modeling clay and watches, all specially made for the blind, have been brought from America. A large consignment of gauze and writing materials which kind friends sent to Miss Holt to enable her to continue her work here under the Louisiana.

Speaking of her work with the men, Miss Holt said: "My friends have been very kind in holding in my hands and the authorities have given us every support. We are starting in twenty seven military hospitals and have a large waiting list of men who are able to be about and who wish to come to our 'school' as soon as it is opened. My staff of workers is small and of necessarily French, have been most successful in their efforts."

Dog Tree Big Reboat.

Salt Lake City.—A 22 caliber poodle dog treed a 46 coulimeter bobcat near the tank house of the city waterworks here, which has been hunting foxes in the canyon and kept him in a state of siege on the top of a telephone pole until the feline was shot by Lodi Stroker, caretaker of the tank house.

GETTING READY TO CHOOSE THE NEXT PRESIDENT

Political Parties Beginning to Look Over Material for Campaign of 1916.

MANY HAVE SOUGHT HONOR

History Shows That Two Hundred and Eighty Names Have Appeared Before Conventions or in Electoral Returns, Among Them Those of Two Women.

Washington.—Who will be the next president of the United States? The political incubator is already being stocked with eggs for the 1916 hatching, but no soothsayer can tell just now what ones are fertile enough to produce even a candidacy.

During our hundred-and-forty-year career as a republic 27 Americans have held the exalted office which gave them more power than most kings have in modern times. Since the days of 1776 no less than 50 political parties have sought supremacy and have named candidates for the biggest job in the land.

Men now generally forgotten or unknown, but big in their day, had votes in the electoral college or in presidential nominating conventions as representatives of these parties. Their disappearance from public notice and memory is evidence of the fleeting nature of fame.

The following list of about 280 names of those who have been before conventions or in electoral returns includes those of two women. This list is supposed to be complete. It is alphabetically arranged and gives the born state and party in most cases, of candidates and the year in which the name of each was considered. Asterisks indicate winners.

MRS. GALT HAS DOUBLE

© H.H.&S. Co.

This picture is not that of Mrs. Norman Galt, the president's fiancee, but that of Mrs. Hubert Dent, wife of the Alabama congressman. The likeness is so striking that Mrs. Dent is having trouble in convincing Washingtonians who think they recognize her on the street that she is not Mrs. Galt. One of the most experienced newspaper women in Washington, one who has a wide acquaintance, and has seen Mrs. Galt many times, followed Mrs. Dent for two hours on a shopping expedition thinking that she was getting a story about Mrs. Galt's purchases, only to be disappointed at the end of the long walk. The photographer who made the picture also was quite positive that it was she, and was unwilling convinced when he had made several pictures.

The Beauty Spot

By WARREN F. BOYDEN

With a rude smack the gentle current of an ideal girlhood life was abruptly changed into the fierce, raging torrent of tragedy. It came about to Lura Denison on a stormlessly peaceful June afternoon and in a garden redolent with the drowsy odors of violets and roses.

This was the situation: She was one of a party of friends visiting Ed Dene, the pretty summer resort at Crystal Lake. Lura was only a school teacher and dependent on her own employment for a living. She was one of a coterie between whom a friendlyness as to wealth and social position, she could not draw as rich by as her cousins, the Worthingtons, but her each was neat, tasteful, but figure perfect, her face beautiful and her manner full of sweetness and fascination.

To the power of those kindly magnetic eyes Clyde Hanson had paid full tribute. He was a favorite with everybody, a heedless, impulsive young fellow, answerly at the end of his resources, but enjoying his last dash of folly, as he termed it, before settling forth to grapple with the practical issues of life.

From all Lura had learned he had recently been discarded. It was not until it was too late that Clyde realized, but in his independent way he had gone contrary to the wishes of his mamaroy relative. There had been a little scene, ending with the announcement that he need depend upon John Griffiths for no further favors at his hands.

"It's sort of rough to have anything of that sort at a picnic," Clyde confidentially told Lura, "but a certain half cousin of mine is with Griffiths trying to cut in to Uncle John.

It Held a Leveled Revolver.

while I am not. Perhaps it's a good thing for me, though," he added in genuinely; "I was too leaflike and idle, motiveless life."

And so it was at this moment Lura, half hidden by the thick verdure of a tall flowering shrub, stood gazing pensively, dreamily at Clyde Hanson lying fast asleep in a hammock. She had always admired his frank, cheerful character. She had quite cherished certain tender words he had spoken to her. Lura was going back to the hard dull grind of a little red schoolhouse within a few days. She wondered if they would ever meet again—more than that, if she would ever forget him!

Even as he slumbered the tender smile of perfect love for all the world and all its creatures lingered upon the handsome face. Lura's heart beat faster, as she noted that he wore in his buttonhole a dainty little straw flower she had given him the day previous. Then she drew back, for there was a rustle in the opposite shrubbery. She flushed hotly at the thought of anyone discovering her regarding thus rapt the object of her interest. She seized the tennis racket she carried in one hand more closely, and was about to fly home her face grew deadly pale. She uttered a quick gasp. Then, with an inarticulate cry she sprang clear of her ambush.

A form had become vividly outlined in the opposite bush. A hand was thrust forward. It held a leveled revolver and it was pointed directly at the sleeping man in the hammock. By an instant only Lura caught sight of a dark sinister face behind the weapon. She heard a dull Crack!—a quick, overlying report rang out, but not before Lura had reached the side of the hammock. She was on her knees then, her arms about the sleeper, shielding him. She felt a stinging contact on one cheek. Then whirling about she prepared to scream for help, when she noted that the affrighted would-be assassin was speeding for his life away from the spot.

Lura was reeling with the reaction from the great strain of excitement. She almost collapsed. Springing to his feet Clyde Hanson seized her swaying form.

"Miss Denison—Lura!" he cried incoherently, "what has happened? I was asleep. I fancied I heard an explosion."

"Yes," faltered Lura, withdrawing from his clasp. "Oh, Mr. Hanson, you must go away from here. Some one just saw fit to take to kill you. Dark faced, tall man with a band of crisp curly hair". He fired at you. I—I got in front of you. The bullet must have struck the hard wooded tennis racket. It rebounded to my cheek—

"You risked your life—for me!" voiced Clyde, his tones trembling with wild emotion. "Your dear cheek! It is marred! You might have been killed—for me! Oh, my friend, my more than friend!"

He had clasped her in his arms with a fervor that made her helpless. Gently, reverently his lips swept the abused cheek. Then he held her at arms length, his eyes met her own fairly scintillating with the overpowering emotions that filled his grateful, loyal soul.

"Listen to me, Miss Denison—Lura," he spoke, "you have described the man whom I know. For only one reason would I seek my life. The instant of that reason I must at once explore. Please let me see you safe to the hotel."

In a moment he was the calm, courteous gentleman he ever presented. He spoke no other word. He only lifted his hat politely as they crossed the hotel. Half an hour later, in her room, Lura was handed a large envelope, sealed. A note accompanied it and it read:

"I am handing you my will. If anything happens to me, and I really have anything, it is left to you! I faith an evil genius who seeks my death. I expect to return tomorrow. I must see you then, at all hazards."

What strange circumstance was this? Lura was thoroughly amazed, mystified. When she went from her room again she wore a tiny patch of adhesive plaster over the spot on her cheek. The bullet had barely grazed it but had left a visible abrasion of the skin. Her friends rallied her as to her "beauty spot," but Lura made no explanation.

Her fair cheek tingled whenever she thought of Clyde Hanson, with joy and pride because she had saved his life, the thought made her blush at the memory of that kiss at least prompted by heartfelt gratitude and devotion.

She was in the garden of the hotel that next evening, wondering why he had gone contrary to the wishes of his mamaroy relative. There had been a little scene, ending with the announcement that he need depend upon John Griffiths for no further favors at his hands.

"Lura!" he cried in tones that seemed to thrill her to the core. "Lura, I have given it out that in case of my death the disposition of my property is left to the woman I love, the woman to whom I have hastened to ask her to become my wife.

"You mean—you mean," fluttered Lura, her face blanched now.

"Who else!" questioned Clyde—"only you would have interested me so! I was a boy, I was so poor. But now—and he kissed the 'beauty spot' that was a reminder of the unofficial devotion of a noble soul.

A Missionary at Home.

I never have any time now except in the afternoon, when an overpress run rather low from the exertions of the morning. In the evenings my time will be full of people—women and the schoolboys—who come to talk with me or to sit quietly in the plaster lighted room. I sit and sew in my summer chair, and all the time my doors, there is the effort to pass the barrier of kind. We were talking so last night—about the common uses of life—when a certain young fellow who had been listening with a sad attention, leaned his head on his hand with a kind of old weariness and said directly to me, across the heads of the others and our current of our talk—across my effort and his effort—"How we differ! I cannot tell you how much there was of baffled endeavor and of relinquish ment in his eyes. Sometimes I see and he saw, better than you can—the difference is so much to the disadvantage—Baltimore American.

Illustrating the Idea.

A school inspector was examining a country schoolmaster, and trying to elicit date the complex relations of adjectives and nouns by a telling example. "Now, for instance," said he, "what am I?"

That was an easy question, and all the children shouted:

"A man!" and then looked round triumphantly.

"Yes, but what elsew said the inspector.

This was not so easy, but after a pause boy ventured to suggest:

"A little man."

"Yes, but there is something more than that."

This was a poser, but at last an infant, diminutive and almost lost from his seat in his eagerness, and cried:

"Please, sir, I know, sir—I am ugly little man!"

His Wee Wittiest.

"I made a—ch!—pun yesterday!" boasted sixteen. "Dad's wee wee wife bought from an agent a book entitled 'Twenty Years Abroad in War' and I believe after she got it she was sorry she had done so. Forgot to be surprised until she examined it, that it was a suffrage book, although I am not sure about that part. Anyway, I said: 'The truth is smiley and will prevail—what! ha!—just like that. And she smote me on the head with the volume. I was so proud of my wit that really the blow did not hurt much."

His Early Training.

"A twopenny stamp, please," said the lady at the stamp window of the post office.

"Yes, ma'am," replied the new clerk who had just graduated from a department store. "Will you take it a song or have it sent?"

Scatters Death Widely.

THE SANDMAN IN STORY

By Mrs. F. A. WALKER

THE HUNTER'S FRIEND.

In a hut on the side of a mountain lived an old hunter all alone. He had only one room, which was very scantily furnished, and he cooked his meals in a frequent.

"You need not pity this old man, for he would rather eat his food cooked in this way than in any other. He had a bunk built in the room about half way up the wall, where he had to climb a ladder to reach it, and when he went to bed he covered himself with a big bearskin. Beside the bunk a gun hung on the wall, where he could quickly reach it if it were needed. Across the door at night he fastened a big bar for he did not intend that anyone should enter while he was asleep.

The old hunter had set a trap by his door, and one morning he found a baby bear caught in it by the left hind paw. He very carefully opened the trap and took the little fellow out. This he took Johnnie Bear, as he named him, into the cabin, and very carefully washed the poor cut foot and bound it up with some healing salve.

Johnnie Bear seemed to know that the hunter was helping him, and he did not bite or try to get away. In fact, he rather liked this nice like a baby when it is hurt. Then the hunter warmed some milk and put in a bottle, which he gave to the bear. Johnnie Bear took the bottle in both paws and held it up to his mouth and drank the milk very greedily. Then the hunter fixed a bed for him and put a log on the fire to keep the place warm while he went for a hunting trip.

Johnnie Bear slept all day, and when the hunter returned at night he tried to run to meet him, but the poor foot hurt him so he had to lie down again. Several weeks passed before Johnnie Bear's foot became quite well, and he always limped because the trap had cut so deep.

The little fellow became quite fond of the hunter and would run to meet him at night, and when the hunter brought in his game, Johnnie Bear would poke it with his nose and paws as though to tell the hunter that he had done well.

One day he did not run to meet the hunter when night came he did not come to his supper. The old hunter began to look around the cabin, and he found the footprints of two bears. One was Johnnie Bear's, which he could tell by the light mark where the lame foot made, and the other was of a big bear which had enticed Johnnie back into the woods. The hunter felt very lonely and looked for Johnnie every day for a long time, but after a year had gone by gave up hoping that he would come back again.

A long time after this the hunter was going through a part of the wood that was filled with bushes and vines, and in some way his feet became entangled and he fell, breaking his arm. His gun fell some distance from him, and as he went to pick it up he saw a big mother bear with two cubs coming toward him. She was growling and showing her teeth, and the hunter felt that he had little chance for escape from a fight. He wondered how the fight might come out.

He braced himself against a tree and waited for the bear to come up. He held his gun in his left hand, intending to use it to beat her off as long as possible. Just then another bear came in sight, and the poor hunter gave up all hope. But all at once the first bear stopped, and looked at the other bear, then suddenly walked toward him. Both stood and looked at the hunter, who did not move. Suddenly the second bear growled strangely, and the first bear walked away toward her cubs. Then the second bear came nearer, and as he walked the hunter saw that he limped. It was Johnnie Bear, and in some unknown language he had sent the other bear away and saved the hunter's life. He did not come any nearer the hunter, but only looked at him as though to say: "You saved my life once, now I have paid my debt to you." Then he limped away in the direction the other bear had gone. Perhaps the mother bear was Johnnie's wife, and the cubs were their children.

DIARY OF A LITTLE PRINCE

Recently Found in French Archives—After Lady's Attack of Indigestion Fancies Dictated Fairy Tale.

The diary of a schoolboy at the close of the seventeenth century, and that boy a prince, no less than the son of Louis XIV, grandson of Louis XIV, has recently been found in the French archives. This prince had as his tutor the great Abbe Fenelon, who wrote many fables and stories for his small pupil. Jules le Maitre has published some fragments from the prince's diary, which have been translated for Everyman. Under a date in January, 1692, following indigestion from eating too much pastry with cream, the little prince writes:

"To correct me for my greed, Mgr. l'Abbe de Fenelon dictated to me this morning a fable called 'A Voyage to the Island of Delight.' It is a story of a traveler who having fared too well in a marvelous island, becomes displeased finally and returns to a sober life. I shall do the same—but not until I have spent a long time in this island where I should love to go. I read over again the description with delight.

"There are the mountains of compote, rocks of sugar candy and caramel and rivers of strap, so that the inhabitants lick all the roads and suck their fingers after dipping them in the rivers. There are great trees from which fall cakes that the wind carries into the mouths of travelers whenever they open them. Further off there are mines of hard candy, of colored pepper, ragouts, and streams of onion sauce. The dew of the morning is white wine.

And to this the little prince has added, "Ah, Monsieur l'Abbe, your tale justifies my indigestion!"

VERY CONVENIENT LUNCH BOX

Ordinary Pasteboard Cracker Box May Be Utilized by Making Few Additional Creases.

Have you ever started for school or a picnic in the morning and had to carry your lunch? I have found the box I make a simple lunch box which is very convenient, says a writer in McCall's Magazine. Take an ordinary pasteboard cracker box and by making some additional creases and cuts, transform it into a receptacle of a shape to fit a man's pocket, and in which sandwiches may be conveniently packed. If you will study the diagram you will easily understand how I have made it.

First crease and flap on both sides in center, as shown by lines marked 1 and 2 in diagram, vertically, and slit flaps on crease of part 3 (diagram A). Fold cute rounded, but take care not to cut too deeply for a crease.

Bend at crease between parts 1 and 2 and at lines running through the figure 2 and 3, to form right angles, at the same time fold in the ends to insert the narrow tongues on part 3 through the slits made in part 1. And slip the extensions on part 3 under the edge of part 1, to hold in position, as shown in diagram B. The crease between parts 2 and 3 and that on the rounded flap of part 4 are not used in the newly shaped box. This box, when completed, is a very convenient shape for carrying a light lunch.

No Wonder.

Little Bobby wanted a birthday party, to which his mother consented provided he asked his little friend Jimmie. The boys had all had trouble, however, that we have a party, which prompted his mother to invite Peter. On the evening of the party, when all the small guests had arrived except Peter, the mother became suspicious and sought her son.

"Bobby," she said, "did you invite Peter to your party tonight?"

"Of course I did, mother."

"And did he say he would come?"

"No," explained Bobby. "I invited him to come all right; but I dared him to."

99 YEARS IN JAIL FINED $1,000,000

Creek Indian Woman Has Become a Nuisance, Said Police Judge.

Muskogee, Okla.—Police Judge Ed. I. Williams has assessed upon Mandy Simon, a Creek Indian woman, a fine of $1,000,000 and sentenced her to 99 years in the city jail. She has been in the police court here virtually every week for several years.

Judge Williams said he set the fine so high and sentenced her to 99 years because he did not want her ever to be at large again. The judge's actions were recorded in the record books of the police department and he was supported by Chief of Police Joe Dejoe. Said Judge Williams:

"Mandy has been a continual pest to the city of Muskogee for years. She was always causing trouble by

Middle-Aged Tennessee Man Loses All Memory as to His Identity.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—The medical society here is studying the case of a middle-aged, well-dressed man who has suffered a complete lapse of memory. He has been in Chattanooga several days and I registered as "D. G. Harris." But he says he took that name after he discovered himself to have forgotten all his other names.

He says he was on a train between Hartford, Ky., and Knoxville, N. C., when he realized his mental lapse. Nothing in his clothing or effects gave a clue, except that he carried, which bears the initials J. D. H. He remained in the police court here virtually every week for several years.

He has sufficient money for present needs, but the supply of clothing carried in his grip reveals the fact that he did not expect to make a long trip. Local doctors promise him a series of memory tests and care will restore him to a normal condition. He is greatly worried for fear his people, whoever they are, will think him dead, as well as because of his fear that he will never recover.

BRUIN TREED BY CHILDREN

Six Tots From a Rural Schoolhouse in California Throw Scare into Bear.

Redding, Cal.—Six schoolchildren, the oldest of them aged fifteen, treed a bear at the Oak Run schoolhouse a few days ago.

During the afternoon recess while the tots were at play bruin ambled into the schoolgrounds. The children, hearing the dogs, took after the bear, who, taking flight, climbed a tree to get out of danger.

Miss Vivian Brauer called the children into the schoolhouse, locked the door and, as a precaution, pulled down the blinds.

A few minutes later the bear climbed down the tree and ran into Amos Welch's field, to yards farther the dogs left Welch shot and killed it. There was a barbecue at the Oak Run schoolhouse the following day.

After a lot of difficulty he borrowed a shabby silk hat from his village audience. Turning it upside down to prove there was nothing inside, he next placed it brim uppermost on his little table and proceeded to produce 12 eggs from its depths.

The audience watched with gaping eyes, and then burst into wild applause.

"And now," the magician went on, bowing his thanks, "I will show you that, although the hat is empty, there is inside it the hen that laid those eggs."

Putting his hand into the hat he withdrew a fluttering, squawking fowl, which he placed on the table, and turned to face the applause.

Instead there was a wild yell of laughter. It turned in amazement, which changed to horror when the fowl disappeared.

Don't Neglect Kidneys

Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Prescription, Overcomes Kidney Trouble

It is now conceded by physicians that the kidneys should have more attention than other organs in a sick person. The kidneys do a tremendous amount of work in removing the poisons and waste matter from the system by filtering the blood.

The kidneys should receive some assistance when needed. We take too many drugs, drink water and often eat more rich, heavy food, thereby forcing the kidneys to do more work than nature intended. Evidence of kidney trouble, such as lame back, sneezing, bladder troubles, smarting or burning, trickles or accompanied by constipation, rheumatism, inactive weak or irregular heart action, warns you that your kidneys require help immediately to avoid more serious trouble.

An ideal herbal compound that has had most remarkable success as a kidney and bladder remedy is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. There is nothing else like it. It is Dr. Kilmer's prescription used in private practice and it is sure to benefit you. Get a bottle from your druggist.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.—Adv.

SYNOPSIS.

Casalet, on the steamer Kaiser Prinz, sees a man who, by his conversation, crime book in hand, he decides is a burglar. He sees Lady Blanche Hilton and finds that Hilton Toye, who shares the stateroom, knows the man, who is known as Mr. Bernard Manners, a famous burglar and pickpocket. When the man disappears Casalet is alarmed at finding that his cabin trunk has been opened and ransacked. He thinks of doing a good turn and warning Bernard on the case himself. In the train to town Casalet sees Bernard in a compartment and overhears a conversation between him and from Chalet that Brinton, who had been Craven's chauffeur, has been released from prison and is now in Blanche's employ.

He had floundered to his feet as well. He was standing over her, feeling his way like a great fatuous cow-ard, so much was at stake, and yet it really looked as though Blanche was not attending to what he did say, so neither was she watching her little angliers slamed in let upon the silvery stream, now and then at some of Nelly Potts in the Australian records. She had come down to see the trefla, and come in from the river, and she was watching the open door of the other end of the cabin, perhaps, listening to those confounded steps coming nearer and nearer! Casalet was staring at her as though he really had said something that deserved an answer.

"Why, Miss Blanche!" cried a voice. "And you of all lady-killers! Why, I should find you Sweet!"

"Why, I was afraid of you last time, they couldn't hang a dog on his evidence."

"Still," said Blanche, "I'd rather have that circumstantial evidence, parson, than you, Mr. Toye!"

"No, Miss Blanche, I would not," replied Toye, with unbeatable candor. "The worst evidence in the world, in my opinion, and I've given the matter some thought, is the evidence of identity." He turned to Casalet, who had been only a subdued interest in his views. "Shall I tell you why? Think how often you're not so sure if you see a man before or if you never have! You kind of shrink from not being, for you hate to be wrong, if you didn't ever have that feeling, then you're not so very other man I know."

"I have!" cried Casalet. "I've had it all my life, even in the wilds, but I've never thought of it before."

"Think of it now," said Toye, "and you'll see that's why I'd rather have the evidence of identity that money can buy. But circumstantial evidence can buy. But circumstantial evidence can be very good, and, what with the sun's bare hand on her yellow hair, she now looked more bonnier than before, yet not quite, quite such a girl! But then every bit of the boy had gone out of Casalet. So the boat moseys from the pool was up forever.

"Why do the police think the other thing?" he reported. "What have they got to go on? That's what I want to know! Lots of people have the right to Blanche looked up quickly. "I wouldn't trust old Sexton an inch. I've been thinking about him and his previous evidence. He got realized that it's quite dark now soon after seven! It was pretty thick saying his man was alone, with either her or her maid, left behind to prove it! Yet now he's sworn to it, and he's got to stick and next we shall have the color of his eyes!"

Blanche laughed at his vigor of phrase; this was more like the old girl, Casalet thought, and he was glad to see it. He felt certain that it's bearing fervey. Something had made him limp to the conclusion that Brinton could not possibly have killed Mr. Bernard, whereas he might have gone down in days gone by. So it simply was impossible, and anybody who took the other view would have to reason himself out of it.

Mr. Toye already had reckoned with him. In a little debate begun outside the old summer schoolroom at Littleford, and adjourned rather than finished at the iron gate into the road, in his heart of hearts Blanche could not say that Casalet had the best of the argument. Toye had advanced a general principle with calm ability, but Casalet could not be shifted from the particular position he was so eager to defend, and would only enter into abstract questions to beg them out of hand.

Blanche rather thought that neither quite understood what the other meant; but she could not think the fact that the old friend had neither the courtesy of the new, the unfailing courtesy of the new. That being so, why shift her position? Men have changed the subject; but she could see that Casalet was looking at nothing else, and no wonder, since they were approaching the scene of the tragedy, and, what was more, within each long dip of her paddle.

It had been his one wish to start upstream; but she could see the wisdom. Yet gain he was in no hurry to get more upon the red turrets and the smooth green lawn of Uplands; and she rather regretted not looked at him again until he spoke to her.

"No. What?"

There was no need to inquire as to the class of news; the immediate past had come to Casalet's mind, the boy's life, and even in Blanche's presence, even in her presence, the old days had flown into their proper place and also in the perspective.

"Why, made an arrest," said Toye; and Casalet nodded as though he had quite expected it.

"Bernard?"

WASHING IS MODERN CUSTOM

Only in Comparatively Recent Times Has the Idea of Cleanliness Become Common.

One must not forget that regular and systematic cleansing of the person is a very modern fashion. As late as the early part of the nineteenth century toothbrushes were not allowed in certain French convents, being looked upon as a luxury.

Cleanliness was not very common a century and a half ago in any country.

In 1770 the publication of Monsieur Pierre's "Pigmentorma, ou l'Art d'apprendre a se raser soi-meme," created a sensation among fashionable people, and enthusiasts studied self shaving.

The author of Lois de la Galanterie" in 1640 writes: "Every lay one should take pains to wash and cleanse and one should also wash one's face twice a day."

The copenia streams of hot and cold water, turned into a porcelain tub at the disposal of the day or night, the brushes and soaps and towels and toilet waters and powders of our day were quite unknown to our not fastidious ancestors.

The oft-repeated and minute stories of our day are almost as modern as bicycles, and not as ancient as the railways.

When a box of sardines is opened, it should be drained of its oil at once and the fish turned out.

Hair Ornaments for Evening Wear

It appears that the pursuit of happiness and the pursuit of luxury are not limited to the human race, if judging from the belongings of women who are able to indulge in both of the human pursuits. A study of those things that are made more for the purpose of being decorative than for being useful reveals an enticing play of fancy in their make-up; many of fans, the jewelry and the hair ornaments of the hour. The matter of first importance with them is to be beautiful and, next to that, to be original and clever in design.

Any number of fascinating decorations for the coiffure adorn those who have occasion to wear them. Nearly all of them consist of a band supporting a standing ornament of some kind, and all sorts of sparkling and growing and colored materials are used to make them. Spangles, imitation rhinestones and gems—the sparkling in all colors, as well as silver and gold—provide the glitter. Tulle and ribbon and flowers play their happy parts, and a few soft and graceful feathers are given places of distinction on the coiffure ornaments of the day, or, rather, of the night. Jet is used in beads, in bands and tassels and ornaments, is conspicuous everywhere.

Two typical hair ornaments, designed to meet the requirements of opera goers, are shown in the picture above. At the left a band of jet is the foundation of the orn

The stock in the above companies went begging when it was first offered—investors could not believe the profits the management predicted. The above enormous profits made by the shrewd investors with the courage to back a young business are a matter of record and fact, and are being duplicated by present stock offerings. You have such an OPPORTUNITY in this offering.

THE WEALTH we offer is a real and an accomplished fact—our Company, if we did not increase our manufacturing facilities and working capital one cent, still could pay 80 percent on the investment offered in this advertisement. This we are now doing—this is an accomplished fact.

The proceeds from the sale of our stock will enable us to increase our output at least fourfold and with the economies this increased production will effect, we will then be earning about 200 percent on this investment.

THIS IS THE SMALL INVESTORS' OPPORTUNITY

By a special arrangement, we are enabled to offer one thousand investors this EXTRAORDINARY proposition:

Mail us ten dollars ($10.00), no more and no less, and we will mail you a Certificate for Forty (40) shares of our Treasury Stock of our Company, Fully Paid and Forever Non-Assessable, and descriptive literature of our Company and its business.

This offer is made only to the first one thousand investors who answer this advertisement. "First come, first served." If you are too late, or if you send any more or less than ten dollars, your money will be returned by the next mail.

This offer is made to secure the co-operation of one thousand small stockholders in boosting the sale of Double Service Tires and to prevent large financial interests from securing control.

The Double Service Tire and Rubber Company is incorporated under the stringent laws of the State of Ohio at $250,000.00, divided into 250,000 shares of a par value of $1.00 per share, all common, Fully Paid and Non-Assessable. Every share of stock and every stockholder being absolutely on an equal and common basis, all sharing alike in all earnings of the Company.

This is an established and going business and one which is at present earning net dividends equal to 20 percent on its entire capitalization, and with future dividend possibilities so big and so alluring that they seem almost unbelievable.

The history of practically any one of Akron's famous rubber tire companies reads more like a fairy tale than business facts. Early investors have made fortunes almost unbelievable and are still making them. The growth and success of the Double Service Tire and Rubber Company but adds another chapter to this never-ending story of the fortunes made through the popularity of the automobile.

OUR GUARANTEE—YOUR PROTECTION

The fact that this Company is now earning at the rate of 20 percent on its entire capitalization, with less than one-third (⅓) issued, is a positive guarantee of your 80 percent and proof of the still larger earnings you will receive when their production facilities have been increased.

Your protection is made still more secure by the fact that after you have received our literature and your stock, you may return the same any time within ten days of its receipt by you and receive your money back in full if you are not entirely satisfied with your investment. This gives you ten days in which to investigate and to assure yourself that this is not a chance, but the best and biggest little investment you ever made. Could anything be more fair and square? Wasever an investment offered on earth more attractive?

Just tear off and fill out this coupon and attach a ten-dollar bill to it, or a check, or a Money Order, and mail it to-day. REMEMBER, this offer is made only to the first one thousand who answer this advertisement.

TWINS BACK WITH FORTUNE

Started for Alaska 15 Years Ago With Less Than One Dollar Capital.

Milwaukee.—With less than a dollar between them the twin brothers Oscar and Walter—left Milwaukee 15 years ago to seek their fortunes in the Klondike.

A few days ago they returned as owners of mining property in Alaska said to be worth several hundred thousand dollars. They are visiting their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Poppert, Twenty-seventh avenue.

The adventures of the Poppert twins rival those read about in the wildest of Alaskan tales. The first years in the North were spent in "prospecting" or rather panning their cruises taking them to Siberia, China, Japan and the Hawaiian islands. Later, they herded cattle, and finally, with a team of dogs set out for the interior of Alaska.

The men are now known as the most daring explorers in the Arctic region. They are the discoverers of Midnight creek, now the richest gold district in the Klondike. They founded Rudy City, situated among Midnight creek, which is now a centering point for the miners.

Tobe's Grievance.

"Every time my fellow townsmen read of a gold brick being purchased anywhere within five hundred miles of here," pouted Tobe Sagg of Coshkonong, "they hunt me up and state that they notice I have been traveling again."—Kansas City Star.

IS SAVED BY WOODEN LEG

Bear, When Surprised, Claws Horseback Rider's Artificial Limb.

Sunbury, Pa.—John Davidson, a Catawissa mountain farmer, who lives near the town of that name, says he is glad he has a wooden leg, for it saved him serious hurts in a battle with a bear.

Davidson says he was riding horseback along the Susquehanna, which skirts dense mountain growths at that point, when he saw a black bear fishing in the river. It would dive down and come up with a fish in its mouth. Angered by his approach brute dropped a fish and gave chase, but Davidson drew his revolver and fired. He missed, and the animal came on after him and bit and clawed at his wooden leg.

He fired again, and then a freight train approached on a railroad near by. This, together with the tooting of the locomotive whistle, frightened the beast and it dropped to its feet and bounded off into the woods. The farmer exhibited a torn pair of trousers and lacerated wooden leg to his friends. The source of this truth or his story.

OHIO FARMER'S HUNT OF LONG AGO

Ohio Farmers, in 1822, Slaughtered Nearly Twenty Thousand, and the Others Fled.

At the dedication of a monument to Ludwig Sellis and his wife in the Dublin cemetery in Franklin county, Ohio, Rev. Byron R. Long gave an interesting account of the hunt of 1822 in honor of September, 1822, which was said to have ended the serious depredations of the animals in the fields of the farmers there.

The Columbus Gazette of August 20, 1822, referred to the great damage being done by squirrels and published an address to the farmers suggesting a county squirrel hunt. The farmers of several townships were asked to select representatives to make the arrangements.

The preliminary meeting says the Columbus Gazette, was held. One of the delegates from Washington township, in which Dublin is located, was Peter Sellis, a son of Ludwig Sellis.

The hunt was held and the farmers turned out in a mass, spending two or three days in slaughtering the squirrels. The count is far as made reached a total of 19,500 skins, but as many of the hunters failed to report the number must be much the total. No doubt really in excess of that.

But what is better, great as it was, would not in itself have had any very great effect on the damage done by the squirrels. But the pioneers fell of a great migration by the squirrels following the raid.

The little animals moved like ants, in countless droves, going straight ahead and turning aside for no obstacle. They went over precipices and swam rivers in their persistent course. They seemed to be in command of some leader and obeyed without fear of ordinary enemies.—New York Sun.

Skunk's Weapon of Defense.

"Some animals use sprays which are not only strongly irritant, but possess a most powerful and disgusting odor. "Chief of among these is the American skunk, which has attained a world-wide notoriety," says Doctor Pycraft. "Its weapons of defense lie in a pair of glands at the base of the tail, and so conscious does their possessor appear to be of their formidable character that he makes no attempt to conceal or even approached either by man or dog. From these glands an amber-colored, most pungent and acrid fluid can be expelled, and with force enough to carry several yards.

"Should a dog enter the eye violent inflammation, or even blindness, may result. But the fumes from this fluid are even more to be dreaded; they the fluid itself, for unless well diluted with atmospheric air, they are destructive to the respiratory passages. The skunk thus makes use of poison gas for the discomfiture of its foes."

DIFFER ON VIEWS OF SOAP

Authorities Throughout the Centuries Have Never Been in Agreement on the Point.

Here comes a health officer with advice to use soap. He says it does not injure the complexion, and that it increases the general cleanliness of the race.

On the face of the advice, this health officer appears to be old-fashioned, remote the Cleveland Plain Dealer. modern ablutionists shun the use of soap, even in the bath, and for purposes of removing difficult dirt from the hands. Soap on a pretty face is almost sacrilege. Warm water and wash cloths are relied on to remove all soil from delicate complexions, without the danger of sorry alkalies.

But, in reality the doctor is newfashioned. For our old heroes and heroines did not even know the meaning of soap. Laura Derengaris Rosmond and Marguerite lived before soap was invented, yet they were cleanly damsels, the creations of poets, writers of this and of our own brains. The ancients—Sappho, Anacreon, Corneila and even Poppaea—never dreamed of such a thing as soap.

On the whole, this health officer must be classed as a moderate. He is neither ancient nor modern. And there is no likelihood that his advice will have the slightest effect on the users and nonusers of soap.

AUXILIARY PLANT IS APPROVED

Council and Board of Public Works Accept Rock Product Co. Emergency Proposition

Acting upon the growing demand for a safe supply of electricity for lighting and motor use at all times, the city council and board of public works, in joint session, Monday night, adopted a resolution, by unanimous vote, accepting the proposition of the Rock Product Co. to supply current when needed. In other words, the Rock Product Co. plant is to take the place of the existing city plant (which is of uncertain utility,) in furnishing light when the Bellaire plant fails to do so. In no sense does the Rock Product Co. proposition interfere with the existing contract with the Bellaire plant. The validity of the latter contract is hereafter to be threshed out on its own merits.

The conditions which compelled this recent action of the Charlevoix authorities are as follows: Charlevoix has undertaken to supply not only the permanent residents of Charlevoix with light and power, but it has contracted with six large summer hotels. The uninterrupted supply of light to these hotels is of extreme importance to Charlevoix. The source of this supply must be absolutely safe. Hence drastic action was demanded.

Now a word concerning the financial side of the case: For the year ending November 1915 Charlevoix paid Bellaire $13,189.02. Under the terms stipulated in the Rock Product Co. proposition the city would have paid for the same period $12,471.84, a saving of $3,806.

Assuming that city must twenty-five percent more current as development demands, we would pay Bellaire $15,114.72, and Rock Product Co. $14,705.91. Comment is unnecessary, but a very significant feature of it is that under the Bellaire arrangement every cent paid goes out of the county, while with the Rock Product Co. the money remains in Charlevoix, and, secondarily is an encouragement to a local industry. We extend these observations to apply on the ultimate outcome of the Charlevoix-Bellaire contract, and not to the action of the city authorities in accepting the local proposition, toward which they have no bearing. The phase of the question comes later.

Following is the text of the Rock Product Co. proposition:

Articles of agreement entered into this.....day of.....A. D. 19....., by and between the City of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix and State of Michigan, a municipal corporation, party of the first part and the Charlevoix Rock Product Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the laws of the State of Michigan and located at Charlevoix, Michigan, party of the second part.

It is further agreed between the parties hereto that this agreement is entered into for the purpose of providing for the said party of the first part a source of electric current to be used by the said party of the first part at any time it may deem for its best interest and in no way binds or obligates the said party of the first part to the exclusive use of the electric current manufactured or produced by said party of the second part and in no way supersedes or takes the place of any contract or contracts that may be in force at the present time with the said party of the first part.

15. It is further agreed between the parties hereto that the said party of the second part shall furnish to the said party of the first part so much electric current as the said party of the second part to remedy such defect, cease doing it, and supply the current required by said party of the first part under this contract, the said party of the second part shall still refuse, neglect or be unable to deliver the said current in amount and in accordance with the terms of this agreement for the period of one hour after such notice shall have been given aforesaid, then and in such case the said party of the first part shall have the right to enter upon the premises of the said party of the second part and every part thereof upon which the said power plant of the said second party is situate and to take possession of the said power plant and its immediate appurtenances together with the right to use the railroad of said party of the second part for the transportation of fuel and other supplies necessary to operate said power plant and make such repairs thereof as may be necessary to place it in condition to perform the service required of it by the terms of this agreement and the said party of the first part shall appropriate the revenue earned by said power plant on account of furnishing electric current to said party of the first part to the payments of the outlays necessarily incurred by the said party of the first part in operating said power plant and the said party of the first part shall pay to the said party of the second part the balance of such revenue, if any there shall be, at such time as the said party of the second part shall be able to carry out the provisions of this agreement, provided, however, if at such time there shall be any balance still due to the said party of the first part on account of the outlays made by it in operating said power plant said amount shall be paid by the said party of the second part to the said party of the first part.

"Every inch of it!" he said bitterly. "But it I could, I would, now."

"But, three thousandpenny weeks! here in your room! Why, it was improvement. Don't you remember how the path ran around to the other end of your yard? This side into it was, I made."

"No, mine it was," said Conslet, as they came up to the new gate on the path in the wall, and looked through they could see where the old gateway had been bricked. The rhododendrons cropped the yard wall at that point' masking it from the lawn, and making on the whole an improvement of which anybody, but a former son of the house might have taken more access.

He said he could see no other change. He noted the fact that the windows were wide open, the whole place seemed as deserted as Little-ford; but just past the windows, and flush with them was the tradesman's door, and the two newcomers were barely abreast of it when the door opened and disgorged a man.

The man was at first sight a most formaginous figure for the back premises of any house, especially in the country. He was tall, rather stout, very powerfully built and rather hard some in his way; yet not for one moment was this personage in the picture, in the sense in which Hilton Tyre had stepped into the Littleford picture.

"May I ask what you're doing here?" he demanded bluntly of the male intruder.

"No harm I hope," replied Conslet smiling, much to his companion's relief. She had done him an injustice, however, in dreading an explosion when they were both obviously in the wrong, and she greatly admired the tone he took so readily. "I know we've no business here whatever, but perfection; for if he meant to stand by the hapless Scruton, guilty or not guilty, he could not perhaps begin better than by getting on good terms with the police. But his ready tact, and in the case claiming, were certainly a revelation to one who had known him marvelously as boy and youth.

"I mustn't ask questions," he continued, "but I see you're still anxious for things, Mr. Drinkwater."

"Still minding our own job," said Mr. Drinkwater gruffly. They had ascended on with him to the corner of the house, and seen a bowler hat bobbing in the shrubbery down the drive, towards Conslet's hat.

"Well, I needn't tell you I know every inch of the place," said Conslet, "that is, barring alterations," as Blanche caught his eyes. "But I expect there's a reason for these, rather."

"Blasted," said Mr. Drinkwater, bristling afresh in the direction he had also taken out a presentation gold half-hunter, suitably inscribed in acknowledgment of his more bloodless victories. But Conslet could always be trusted, and now he referred to neither the detective's bright brown eyes nor his own.

"There's just one place that's occurred to me, Mr. Drinkwater, that perhaps may not have occurred to you."

"Where's that, Mr. Conslet?"

"In the room where the fight took place."

Mr. Drinkwater's long stare ended in an indulgent smile. "You can show me if you like," said he indifferently. "But I suppose you know we've got the man?"

CHAPTER VII.

After Michael Angelo.

"I was thinking of his cap," said Conslet, but only as they returned to the tradesman's door, and just as Blanche put in her word, "Just about me!"

Mr. Drinkwater eyed the trim white figure standing in the sun. "The more the merrier!" he cried himself in it. "I dare say you'll be able to teach us a thing or two as well, miss."

She could not help nudging Conslet in recognition of this shaft. But Conslet did not resent it; he had now set foot in his old home.

It was all strangely still and inactive, although dormitory animation, had been suspended indefinitely. Yet the open kitchen door revealed a female form in multi; a sullen face looked out of the pantry as they passed, and through the old green door (only now it was a red one) they found another female with her back over a pink panel in the floor of the stairs. There was a glitter of eyes under the housed bonnet in Mr. Drinkwater conducted his friends into the library.

The library was a square room of respectable size, but very close and dim with the one French window closed and curtained. Mr. Drinkwater shut the door as well, and switched on all the electric lamps. He disclosed to the newcomers a Rembrandt and Reynolds, and the other fixtures in the room were as Conslet remembered them. But the former owner of the house himself no time to waste in sentimental comparisons, he cupped a pair of mahogany doors, like those of a church, set into the wall.

"Have you looked in here?" demanded Conslet.

"Isn't he one of looking in a cupboard?" Drinkwater made-mild in turn.

"Clear cupboard!" echoed Conslet in distrust. "I'd be really only use if he hasn't cleared."

"A clear cupboard," repeated Drinkwater, and looked on at the time it happened. What was it, if I may ask, in the Conslet line?"

"I remember!" came suddenly from Blanche, but Conslet only said, "Oh, I don't, you know! I was looking over the end of it."

Drinkwater went to the door and summoned his subordinate. "Joe! fetch that stool from the pantry, Tom," said he; but the sullen suffering from police rule took his time, in spite of shirt, and was sharply paid which he appeared.

"I thought you told me this was a cigar cupboard?" continued Drinkwater in the browbeaten tone of his first words to Conslet outside.

"So it is," said the man.

"Then where's the box?"

"How should I know? I never kept it!" cried the butler, cowing under his oppressor for a change. "He would keep it on his own bunch; but his watch, and all the other things that were missing from his pockets when the men went through him, and you may find his keys, too!"

Drinkwater gave his man a double signal, the door slammed on a petty triumph for the servants' hall, but now both invaders remained within.

"Try your hand on it, Tom," said the tradesman, "if you can. I've lost here." he explained somewhat superfluously to others, as Tom applied himself to the lock in one mahogany door. "Man's been drinking. I should say, clearly enough, that he meant to stand by the hapless Scruton, guilty or not guilty, he could not perhaps begin better than by getting on good terms with the police. But his ready tact, and in the case claiming, were certainly a revelation to one who had known him marvelously as boy and youth.

"I mustn't ask questions," he continued, "but I see you're still anxious for things, Mr. Drinkwater."

"Still minding our own job," said Mr. Drinkwater gruffly. They had ascended on with him to the corner of the house, and seen a bowler hat bobbing in the shrubbery down the drive, towards Conslet's hat.

"Well, I needn't tell you I know every inch of the place," said Conslet, "that is, barring alterations," as Blanche caught his eyes. "But I expect there's a reason for these, rather."

"Blasted," said Mr. Drinkwater, bristling afresh in the direction he had also taken out a presentation gold half-hunter, suitably inscribed in acknowledgment of his more bloodless victories. But Conslet could always be trusted, and now he referred to neither the detective's bright brown eyes nor his own.

"There's just one place that's occurred to me, Mr. Drinkwater, that perhaps may not have occurred to you."

"Where's that, Mr. Conslet?"

"In the room where the fight took place."

Mr. Drinkwater's long stare ended in an indulgent smile. "You can show me if you like," said he indifferently. "But I suppose you know we've got the man?"

CHAPTER VII.

After Michael Angelo.

"I was thinking of his cap," said Conslet, but only as they returned to the tradesman's door, and just as Blanche put in her word, "Just about me!"

Mr. Drinkwater eyed the trim white figure standing in the sun. "The more the merrier!" he cried himself in it. "I dare say you'll be able to teach us a thing or two as well, miss."

She could not help nudging Conslet in recognition of this shaft. But Conslet did not resent it; he had now set foot in his old home.

It was all strangely still and inactive, although dormitory animation, had been suspended indefinitely. Yet the open kitchen door revealed a female form in multi; a sullen face looked out of the pantry as they passed, and through the old green door (only now it was a red one) they found another female with her back over a pink panel in the floor of the stairs. There was a glitter of eyes under the housed bonnet in Mr. Drinkwater conducted his friends into the library.

The library was a square room of respectable size, but very close and dim with the one French window closed and curtained. Mr. Drinkwater shut the door as well, and switched on all the electric lamps. He disclosed to the newcomers a Rembrandt and Reynolds, and the other fixtures in the room were as Conslet remembered them. But the former owner of the house himself no time to waste in sentimental comparisons, he cupped a pair of mahogany doors, like those of a church, set into the wall.

"Have you looked in here?" demanded Conslet.

"Isn't he one of looking in a cupboard?" Drinkwater made-mild in turn.

"Clear cupboard!" echoed Conslet in distrust. "I'd be really only use if he hasn't cleared."

"A clear cupboard," repeated Drinkwater, and looked on at the time it happened. What was it, if I may ask, in the Conslet line?"

Shoe-Tree Cuts Butter Cost.

A shoe tree from which each man's black pooch would cut a big slice of butter off the monthly food bill. In Akron vegetable butter is made from the fruit of this tree, and it is said to be of richer taste than any butter made from cows' milk—alleged or not. Usually pressed from a three and squeezed into the wooden mold which leaves a pretty conchoid on top of the cake. The shoe tree is at its early time, but the Greeks and Romans did without it, and did, and consequently wore purple silk togas.

EDUCATE THE ALIEN

Federal Naturalization Bureau's Plan Meets Approval.

More Than 400 Cities and Towns Join—Nation-Wide Educational Movement for Elimination of the Hyphen.

Washington.—Throughout the country the plan of the bureau of naturalization of the United States department of labor to enlist the cooperation of public schools in the education and Americanization of candidates for citizenship is receiving the most gratifying support. Approximately 400 cities and towns have already joined in this nationwide educational movement for the elimination of the hyphen and this number is increasing daily.

The magnitude of this work and its development since its inception are shown, in part, by the territory covered, the number of candidates for citizenship reached, and the night and day schools which have been established for their instruction. It is the intention of the bureau of naturalization to communicate with all applicants for citizenship in the United States, wherever they are to be found, and to secure the opening of classes for them. During the current school year all superintendents of schools where classes may be formed will receive monthly from the bureau the name, address, age, nationality and other necessary information concerning each alien residing within their jurisdictions who files a declaration of intention or petition for naturalization. In this manner the school authorities are enabled to get in touch with such applicants and afford them valuable assistance in preparing for citizenship in addition to this the bureau informs each applicant for citizenship that his name has been forwarded to the educational authorities and invites him to go to school. It points out the benefits to be derived from such attendance. The women are also working in close cooperation with various patriotic and civic bodies of the country to secure the approval of public night schools where they are now.

The wives of all petitioners for naturalization are also advised to attend school, for the reason that they defer citizenship when their husbands obtain their final papers, and because, too, such instruction will materially aid the family in this as American life. It has been found that approximately two out of every three petitions for naturalization are denied, and it is toward the improvement of the home life and conditions that this phase of the movement is especially directed.

The records of the bureau of naturalization show that since the commencement of the school year on October 1 naturalization have been sent to about 40,000 declarants, 20,000 petitioners, and 5,000 wives of petitioners, and each day hundreds are added to the list.

The present volume of naturalization shows that over half a million foreign-born residents annually have taken themselves within the jurisdiction of the bureau of naturalization, and it is the plan of the bureau, through the cooperation of the public schools with the educational movement, to change that portion of the alien body now in a condition of helpless dependence or semi-subservience to the state of productive capacity which is the birthright of all American citizens regardless of their origin or birth.

WHEN IS A JAG A "JAG?"

West Virginia Higher Bench May Decide Question. "When Is a Man Intoxicated?"

Charleston, W. Va.—The state supreme court is likely to be called on to decide the question, "When is a man intoxicated?"

A man was arrested on a charge of drunkenness, but the evidence was conflicting when he appeared before Magistrate Vickers.

The defendant admitted five drinks, but denied he was intoxicated. He gave notice of appeal to a higher court when the magistrate fined him $10. Magistrate Vickers gave this definition of "when a man is intoxicated:"

"A man is intoxicated when his attitude changes from that of a person who is characteristic of sobriety. It is not necessary for him to be fallen into a gutter."

Former Ragtime Expert Marries Princess Karraria, Daughter of Famous Chieftain.

San Francisco.—From a ragtime player to Maori Chief of a Maori tribe at Hawke Bay and the husband of Princess Karraria, the daughter of a famous Maori chieftain, is the fortune of Peter La Motte, who arrived here on the Matson steamship Sonoma en route to the Royal Naval academy in London.

Several years ago La Motte went to London from New York to introduce ragtime in the London music halls. The Princess Karraria was at the time studying in a London school. She visited the music hall where La Motte was playing, and the acquaintance thus formed was followed by their marriage. Later he was made chief.

Appreciated the Apple.

A curious testimony to the importance formerly attached to apple may be found in the coronation service of our Anglo-Saxon kings. The coronation benediction runs: "May the Almighty bless thee with the blessing of grapes and apples and by his blessing may this land be filled with apples, with the fruit and dew of heaven, from the top of the ancient mountains, from the apples of the eternal hills." —London Chronicle.

OSBORN'S CHALLENGE BODY BLOW TO SMITH

SENATOR'S FRIENDS AT CAPITAL ADMIT FORMER GOVERNOR HOLDS WHIP HAND

Washington Special—

The challenge of former Governor Osborn to Senator William Alden Smith to state definitely whether he was in the presidential race to win or merely for trifling purposes has been the one topic of discussion among Michigan politicians during the last few days. Even Senator Smith's friends admit that he maneuvered himself into an embarrassing position by his New York interview in which he said his boom was merely a spontaneous outburst. They admit that Gov. Osborn holds the whip hand.

Despite the fact that he has had less office holding experience than Gov. Osborn has quite as many friends and is looked upon as as big a figure in Washington as Senator Smith. Politicians who are in the capital during the recess, however, hesitate to attach any importance as between the two men. But the opinion is general that Senator Smith should not be allowed to sew up the delegation and deliver them bound hand and foot to anyone he sees fit at the Chicago convention. Sentiment has grown to be in favor of swinging the Michigan delegation in favor of a progressive Republican who was not too much identified with the scrap of 1912.

I should think Osborn was just the type of man for Michigan to support," said one Republican who did not want his name used at this time. "He is better known outside the state than any of our public men. He was one of the seven governors who got formal President Roosevelt into the race in 1912. Yet he remained like Hadley and Borah within the Republican ranks after the split came. He made a valiant fight for the immediate presidential primary in Michigan, which had it carried, would have nominated Roosevelt and prevented the schism.

"Osborn is a man of action. He is a scholar and traveler and would make a wonderful appeal to the voters. I shall never forget the impression he made in his lecture before the National Geographic society after his return from Africa. This society has honored only a few great explorers like Roosevelt, Admiral Peary and Nansen with invitations to speak. Yet I doubt whether any of these men made more of a hit than Osborn did with his facts and figures. His dynamic manner marked him as being of presidential caliber."

CONCERNING THE PERE MARQUETTE

On the theory that the people of Michigan have a direct interest in the fate of the Pere Marquette railroad, and are entitled to know the plans and policies under which new effort is being made to rehabilitate this big transportation system, Paul H. King, Operating Receiver, has prepared a series of advertisements which will appear as "Pere Marquette Talks." In these talks Mr. King will give his views regarding the problems and needs of the railroad as he sees them after a careful study of the situation.

Publicity of this character is a new thing for a Michigan railroad. The one reason why Mr. King is making these talks, he says, is to bring the people and railroad into closer touch, and to emphasize the importance of cooperation for mutual benefit. Mr. King has been in charge of the railroad since June 1914, and with the active support of every member of the organization, has been working to make the railroad "go"—that is, provide means for its proper maintenance to give good service. An earnest effort is being made to bring about a reorganization of the railroad on a stable basis, and in this connection it needs the support of the people whose transportation agent it is.

The Receiver believes the people served by the Pere Marquette understand that if the railroad can be made to prosper as a "going concern" it will be better able to furnish them the kind of service which will aid them in the development and progress of their respective communities, and that they will, therefore, appreciate an exposition of its condition and needs to enable them intelligently to assist in working out such results. The first "Talk" will run in our issue of Jan. 13.

STEAMER NYACK FIRE WRECKED AT MUSKEGON

Fire which broke out on Thursday morning and was not discovered until the boat was well ablaze, almost completely destroyed the steamer Nyack of the Crosby Transportation company at the company's dock at Muskegon. The united efforts of practically all Muskegon's fire companies proved unavailing to check the flames. The Nyack was being rebuilt in preparation for next summer's business between Milwaukee and the east shore of Lake Michigan.

The origin of the blaze is a mystery and the fire was not discovered until about 6 o'clock. By this time it had swept through the hold and was breaking out through the deck. A Bell telephone lineman turned in the alarm. A strong wind was blowing on the steamer and she soon which quickly fanned the flames. The nearest hydrant was four blocks away from the Crosby dock and it was some time before the fire department could get a line to the fire. By this time it was impossible to get to the vessel so that nothing could be saved from it.

The vessel sank to the bottom and lists to one side. It became apparent that the ship was doomed and the fire department confined its efforts to saving the warehouse and contents.

When the alarm was turned in the engine room was burning fiercely. The vessel was used by the Crosby Transportation Co. on the Milwaukee-Grand Haven-Muskegon run. It was valued at $150,000 and was fully insured. It was one of the oldest vessels used in the passenger service on the great lakes having been built in Buffalo in 1870. Its gross tonnage was 1,595 tons, length 235 feet, beam 38 feet, depth 14.7 feet. It carried a crew of 28 men.

The Nyack was one of the fleet of Captain Crosby's steamers was called "big" in her early days, when her fuel was "Cumberland wood." She occasionally took fuel here.

SPERM WHALE BATTLES SHIP

Monster Hits and Nearly Founders Whaling Vessel in Alaskan Waters.

Seattle—Showing the effects of a desperate battle with a huge sperm whale while ten miles south of Mount Edgecumbe, "Fred" Grant, the entrance of Sitka sound, on June 16, the whaling steamer Blue Jacket, Capt. L. P. Halle, Gunner G. Earling, reached Eagle Harbor after a successful season.

While taking one of the big mammals, which numbers of the crew describe as "just like an ocean liner," the big fellow charged the steamer, damaging the gunwale, second towing block on the starboard side and bending and crumpling a plate in the bulwarks for a distance of ten feet. The weight of the whale nearly swamped the little steamer.

HARD TO DESCRIBE STYLE

Matter Is Exceedingly Difficult to Define, Chiefly Because It Is So Intangible.

What makes a woman stylish? Applied to dress, style is a curiously elusive quality, either to define or to acquire, says a writer in Good Health.

"A stylish garment" we say, of one made in the fashion of the day. But when we ask, "What is the style of the garment?" we are inquiring for a description that may be of this year's style, or last year's, or of the last century's. A dress may be "in style" so far as its material, cut and trimmings go, and yet look stylish when worn, either because it is worn by the wrong person or in the wrong way.

"A stylish woman," we say, of one dressed a la mode, and yet in the next breath we describe another woman as "good style," although she is not wearing the latest fabrics or newest cut, and often is not herself beautiful.

Style is not a simple quality, but a compound one. "We say style," says an old writer, "of anything in which form or matter is conceived to be, in however slight degree, expressive of the taste and sentiment." And it is taste and sentiment more than a specific mode that go to the making of style in dress—that intangible something so "dim" in evolution and so difficult to see and so much desired because it is so widely admired.

The French word chic expresses, as Americans and English use it today, a good deal of what we have in mind when we say "stylish." It implies a certain knack in the selection and manner of wearing clothes. The meaning in French includes the idea of suitably and finesse, and it is these qualities more than the opulent (striking) effect that are suggested by the best-dressed women, and are so often lacking in the appearance of expensively dressed Americans.

DESERT WAS ONCE A JUNGLE

Scientists Have Discovered Facts of Greatest Interest Concerning the Barren Hills of Wyoming.

That palms, figs, magnolias and other tropical vegetation once grew luxuriously on what are now the barren hills of Wyoming is proved by fossil plants found in the enormous coal deposits being uncovered there. These trees and plants doubtless grew in the swamps of Wyoming when the climate was as mild as that of Florida is now.

Coal is fossilized vegetable matter. The tremendous extent of the coal fields indicates that the vegetation to produce this great amount of combustible matter must have been extremely luxuriant. The hills are now brown and bare; the flourishing jungles were long ago turned into arid deserts.

It is estimated by the United States geological survey that the amount of coal in the Rock Springs, Wyoming, field alone available for mining exceeds 142,000,000,000 tons. "Available for mining" means within 3,000 feet of the surface and in beds 2½ feet or more in thickness.

Cotton.

Cotton is usually differentiated in ordinary classification by the length of its staple. "Ordinary cotton" in the United States is of several kinds, other than the upland cotton which is the staple of from seven-eighths to one inch in length, and Sea Island cotton, on which the staple is not usually quite so long. The longest-stapled cotton among the "ordinary cottons" here are the bottom land or bender cotton, with a staple of from one and one-eighth to one and one-fourth inch, and the upland cotton, with a staple one and three-eighths to one and five-eighths inch in length. The sea island cotton, which is grown on the sea islands off the coast of south Carolina, has a staple of from one and one-half to two and a half inches, the average length being one and a quarter inch. The Egyptian cotton is being grown in southern California, New Mexico and Arizona; its staple is not so long as the sea island cotton, but compares rather with the upland cotton here.

Pulse Beat Means Little.

Many persons, knowing that the average pulse is about seventy beats a minute, believe that to be the normal and think themselves well or otherwise as their pulse approaches or departs from this standard. Physicians say there is no physical peculiarity that exhibits such wide individual variation as the pulse. It seldom falls below sixty or rises above eighty, but an unusually slow or rapid pulse is not an infallible indication of disease as many persons think. Many times the pulse is counted while talking about the matter; in such cases the pulse is almost certain to be overestimated, for physicians all know that the heart is quickened by the excitement of conversation.

Spray Keeps Off Enemies.

Many of the tropical species of a sluggish mammal (mendalum), found on the rocks between tide marks, have the back studded with cysts, and are at the same time provided with very efficient spraying apparatus which is used with effect to repel the attacks of that very remarkable creature, the walking fish (periopthalmus).

With bulging eyes, this creature, for several years daily, leaves its native element and hunts along the strand for insects and "sandidoms." If the latter see him coming they ward off his attack by means of the acid spray.

NOW TAKE UP BEADS

Indian Women Devote the Winter to Fancy Work.

Passing of Season of Feasts and Dancing Enables Squaws to Devote Time to Making Indian Trappings.

Thomas, Okla.—Now that the Cheyenne social season has ended with the close of summer the women of the tribes have more leisure for making and decoration of moccasins and other Indian trappings. Their children are at school, their homes are stationary and dances and feasts infrequent.

Leisure in bedwork have learned that they get best results by supplying the Indian woman with all her materials and then paying for the work when finished. In this way an expert beader will receive better pay than she might be able to do if she had to get, tan and cut hides for herself.

The design for beadwork is often carved upon beforehand, as well. In this way the Indian is saved from decisions and the dealer can be sure he will get the designs and sizes which have been found to suit the markets. Moreover, this prevents the loss in steps which are invariably found in moccasins made for Indian wear.

The Indian has worn heelless footwear for so many generations that his instep is not as high as that of most civilized men, and and the result is that, if left to themselves, the moccasin makers turn out footgear that the white people can wear.

But for all this the pattern, meating and beaded design are genuine "Indian" in every respect, and have been carefully copied from old models. The present makers are taught to preserve old Indian patterns, which might have been forgotten or changed if left unattended to.

It is remarkable with what deftness and speed an expert can cover a pair of buckskin moccasins, using only a thin strand of sinew and a sharp awl. The Indian woman has been adept at this work for years upon years, and her best work is easily distinguished from the cheap and irregular work of factories.

The art work of Cheyenne women and Cheyenne men is quite different.

The man's art is realistic and is intended to represent things as they are. He devoted his attention to painting tepees, minnies and buffalo robes, and these pictures are never twice the same.

The women, on the other hand, employ unchanging geometrical designs, squares, circles, triangles and lines. Flowering lines and flower patterns are utterly unknown to the women of the plains tribes, and whenever seen should be decided with suspicion by the collector, as it is more than probable they come from Oklahoma.

Some of the forest tribes, such as the Ojibway, use these flowering patterns but none of the tribes plains Indians do so.

In reading the designs on a moccasin one can usually say that the triangles are tepees, the straight up right round the sole. If not, and especially if they are pointed towards other figures, they may be arrowheads.

Every Indian design means something and sometimes the colors have a second significance, quite independent of the meaning. For instance, with triangles pointing toward it represents a buffalo attack by hunters with arrows. Without the arrowheads about it it means a usually secret for a star. Diamonds stand for lakes.

Sometimes moccasins were made with a bunch of fringes a foot long at the back. These were intended to smooth over the tracks by the wearer, so that anyone following him might think a dragging tepee had passed. Of course they also were decorated, beaded and fringed, the reason was

BOTH HOTELS AWARDED GOLD CERTIFICATES

Winter Park's Hotels, the New Seminole and The Inn.

CALLED THE MOST PERFECT IN FLORIDA BY STATE'S HIGHEST AUTHORITIES

After a very rigid inspection by a state hotel inspector last week, The Inn and the New Seminole Hotel were each awarded a gold certificate by the state hotel commissioner, a fact over which R. P. Foley, president and manager of the Seminole Hotel company, is naturally much elated. These certificates are only given to hotels complying with the very stringent state laws regarding construction, safety, ventilation, equipment, cleanliness of kitchen and sleeping rooms, heating, lighting, appearance and cleanliness of employes, care of food, etc., and they are, of course, much prized by hotel men fortunate enough to secure them. Each feature considered is given a certain number of points, two or more. The New Seminole was given a perfect score of 100 and The Inn a score of 99. The Inn was inspected just before the improvements were completed, and a little of the new equipment was still lacking.

The inspector, of course, had no right to pass upon this equipment until he might see it; otherwise, Mr. Foley says, that house would also have received a perfect score. Last year the New Seminole was given a score of 100 and the gold certificate, and the latter was accompanied by a letter from Hon. A. L. Messer, state hotel commissioner, to Mr. Foley, in which he said: "I wish to compliment you, very much, on the score of your hotel made by Inspector O. G. Husband. Your hotel, so far, is but the second to reach the 100th mark in this state." To have Winter Park's two hostelries, both of which are the perfect of Florida's many 8 or hours, is something of which every citizen should be proud. Winter Park (Florida) Post.

Experts estimate that unused land lying at either side of the country roads is capable in many cases of bearing 500 bushels of corn to the mile strip. Thousands of miles of the best European roads are only a rod wide, but Uncle Sam's only criminise still is largely a matter of theory.

POLITICAL NOTES.

It is not surprising that President Wilson cannot recognize the editorials of a democratic paper of a college years 25 years ago. In fact, he cannot recognize the speeches he wrote about the Baltimore platform only three years ago.

The President is reported to have spent Thanksgiving Day at his typewriter. But he couldn't produce anything like as lively a piece of imaginative writing as Son-in-law McAdoo's estimates of receipts and expenditures which were given out the same day.

Senator Gore of Oklahoma, who said he could see a Democratic victory in 1916, now finds his political vision obscured by the McAdoo plan to put a tax on gasolene. Oklahoma is an oil-producing state. Senator Gore wants the taxes to be paid by New York and other eastern states.

The kind of clature that Senator Owen started out to get and the kind that prevails in the Senate offered an interesting occasion for comparison—the kind of comparisons which are always and naturally to be instituted between Democratic proposals and Democratic results.

Senator Kern having declared that Wilson is the greatest President the country has had since the days of Jefferson, the Philadelphia "Press" sets out to read the Senator a lesson in history. Cannot the matter be compromised, brethren? Why not say that Wilson is the greatest candidate the Democratic party has had since the days of William J. Bryan, and let it go at that?

Secretaries Lane, Houston and Garrison long maintained whatever there was of dignity and businesslike bearing in the Wilson cabinet. Now that Garrison has so far forgotten himself as to burst into a charge of the Democratic chiefs which probably could not be borne without a protest from Secretaries Lane and Houston, to serve the nation's chief executive counsel for complete loss of public confidence and respect.

Senator John Sharp Williams of Mississippi says he is in no fear of a force bill from a Republican Congress, even if clotures rules in the Senate. Mr. Williams may be right in one respect, but he should remember that there is a constitutional alternative which the South may not relish. If the South wishes to curtail her voting strength, it is possible to compel the South to take a reduction in her representation in Congress and in the Electoral College. This would not be force-bill legislation but it would be quit as effective.

"The Democratic party will not have the services of Mr. McAdoo next year because of his larger duties in the Treasury Department." We do not see the matter in that light. Mr. McAdoo's "larger duties" mean larger opportunities for political work—much larger than any that occur to a mere officer of a campaign committee. There are plenty of indications already that Mr. McAdoo understands this thoroughly. In fact, the Treasury Department under Mr. McAdoo been many ear-marks of a well-organized Democratic machine.

The Paisley Shawl

By MILDRED CAROLINE GOODRIDGE

(Copyright 1918 by W. G. Chapman.)

"Think hard, Eustace—try to remember!" urged Wallace feebly, but his invalid brother shook his head in a helpless, melancholy fashion.

"It's no use, Wallace," he declared. "It's all a kind of blur; all except the quaint little story and a ballet whose painted yellow, and the sweet-faced girl who was so kind and prying, and the lady with the old-fashioned Paisley shawl. I can see it now—a white cotton and the figure in quaint curlicues and saffron-colored fringe. Find that shawl, Wallace, and you find the jewel."

"If they have not been destroyed—yes," nodded the brother, with a sarcasm sigh. "We are as impetuous, poor ly balanced family, Eustace. I lost my share of the fortune left to us by father's speculation. You wasted yours and you are now paying the penalty of your folly. I fancy we have both learned some. We will have to begin business life all over again. We can do it with good, strong capital, if we can find those lost papers."

"I never knew their value," sighed Eustace. Briefly, "When I took my last thousand dollars from the safe, the envelope they were in, I discovered later, held a couple of pretentiously-looking documents. I supposed they were some old deeds of no value."

"You are sure they were in the coat you wore the day you exchanged that garment for the overcoat you tell about?" pressed Wallace anxiously.

"Positively, and about all there was in it at that time," declared Eustace. "I had long before spent all the money I took away with me. I remember leaving Springfield and striking out for home on foot. I was footsore, I starved nearly frozen, as I tramped through village after village. That day we were talking about I must have had the start of the wasting fever that has kept me an invalid for over six months. Everything is a blur from the moment I was sitting swaying to and fro on a rock by the road side, when a young girl and an old lady in the Paisley shawl passed by. I fell sideways, exhausted but that They got me into their house—a yellow-painted story and a half cottage. They led me upstairs to an attic bedroom. They brought me food and drink and then I slept. I recall waking up in the morning half delirious, not sensible of my real surroundings. I remember dressing and putting on in overcoat hanging across a chair and leaving my own worn underwear in its place. I recall stealing down the stairs and in my lightheadedness chuckling that I had a covering now to cover off the acting cold and keep me warm—warm! Since then I think blank. Till I wandered into the house here, burning up with fever and in wild delirium."

"To find that old coat is to recover papers that will prove our joint ownership to property worth fifty thousand dollars," said Wallace seriously. "A story and a half house—painted yellow—an old lady and a Paisley shawl," he added memorizingly, half to himself. "I shall start on my quest at once."

So, first Wallace Brierly went to Springfield. He had secured an automobile and made a regular business of his difficult task. For three weeks he traversed all the main thoroughfares leaving not the smallest nook or crevice from his starting point. Alas, the fashion in bonnets had not changed. There were any number of old ladies in "quaint little structures, and many of them painted yellow. But the bonnets in wraps had changed. Only some ancient dames retained possession of that olden badge of dignity and exclusivity—a Paisley shawl. Few were there, however. They were in the looms relegated to obscurity, and this Wallace Brierly had learned in his mortalities.

One day—ah, he would never forget it! He had arrived late Saturday evening at a little town called Fairview. He was weary and footsore, almost discouraged, as he awoke the next morning. He idled around the hotel till about noon and then strolled along the pretty main street of the peaceful town, more for the sake of exercise than with any investigatory spirit in it.

A church called its sinners and the attendants were disposing to be neared it. Passing from a distance were driving off in wagons and and quoted surveys. Two ladies had just been helped into an old-fashioned phaeton. The weather was quite crisp and chilly. As the older of the two ladies took her place she drew one from under the seat cushion a shawl.

A Paisley shawl! And having a white center and "curlicues," and a fringe! Wallace Brierly sprang into action as if shot from a gun, but the phaeton had started up. Before he could overtake it the rig had turned a corner and was lost to view, complicated with other vehicles.

"That phaeton!" he panted, rushing up to the man who had helped the ladies into the vehicle—"the lady with the Paisley shawl!"

The man whose arm he had seized in his fervor of urgent excitement stared at his wildeyed, breathless interlocutor in profound surprise.

"Why, yes," he spoke slowly. "Mrs. Esmond and her daughter."

"Do—do they live in a story and a half house—painted yellow?" bolted out Wallace tumultuously.

"They do, one mile down the road, where you saw them turn," was the rejoinder, and then the informant found himself alone, staring marvelously after the frantic Wallace, who had dashed away forthwith.

Mrs. Mary Esmond, widow, and her daughter, Leila, pretty as a picture, were quite astonished half an hour later to be overtaken just as they were putting up the old family horse, by the breathless, perspiring Wallace Brierly. He apologized for his urgency—"one story and a half house"—"painted yellow"—"Paisley shawl"—did they remember a fevered, hunted tramp who had fainted at their doorsteps such and such a length of time back?

"Why, yes, the poor fellow!" replied Mrs. Esmond. "He made me think of my dead son. I got out his old overcoat for our unfortunate guest. The next morning he was gone."

And often since I have hoped it kept him warm, and that he found home and friends," spoke Leila Esmond, and Wallace Brierly, reverencing her for her gentle pity for a unloved brother, thought her face were the divine glory of some angel.

He was my only brother," spoke Wallace. "He left his old coat behind him here."

"It is in the attic now," explained Leila. "There were some papers in it. They bore no address, so I placed them carefully away, thinking that maybe some day they might be claimed."

"I claim them now," said Wallace in a tone of deep gratitude and satisfaction. "They mean to my poor misguided brother and myself a new, grand start in life, after many bad years."

They restored the papers and made him stay to dinner. He would never forget that peaceful, enjoyable afternoon. He bade them farewell with a full heart.

Three weeks later Wallace Brierly called unexpectedly at the Esmond home. He had learned of a mortgage on the place, of the worldiness of the owner of the Paisley shawl. He brought to her a present in ready cash that would free her home from debt.

And then he found it hard to get away! It was the loneliness that lured him to delay, and then to a confession of love.

It was a quiet ceremony, their wedding, and as the happy pair returned off on their honeymoon Wallace Brierly insisted that his bride wear the Paisley shawl.

Could Not Stand It Longer.

Did you ever converse with a man who is so nervous that he must break right in and finish what you were going to say? A fat man and lean man met on a Broadway car recently, relates the New York Sun. Their conversation began agreeably enough. It was about the weather, fuel, coal and politics. The fat man was a good listener, but the lean man wanted to do all the talking, and every time the poly-pody one said anything the cadaverous man took the words out of his mouth. The fat man began to glance sideways at his companion. It was apparent that the thing of having his words taken out of his mouth was beginning to raw him up some. The car crowded quite a distance before he opened up again. Then he said something about electric, but the lean man again interrupted and finished what he was going to say. The fat man jumped from his seat with an angry flash on his face, shook his fist at the lean man and said: "It would be worth ten dollars of any one's money to give such a pleasant ride. You, such a dogtoned unmannerly chatterer a dirtnad good—" Thinking out in the lean man. And the fat man jumped off the car.

Best Substitute for Wisdom.

An acquaintance of the late Jos. Jefferson was one day talking with him about the remarkable increase of imitations and substitutes for original articles, as oleomargarine for butter, celluloid for ivory and so forth. "and," said he, "many of the substitutes go ahead of the real thing. I guess in time there will be a substitute for everything—though I don't know about wisdom."

"No!" replied the humorist, "up to the present time, at least, there is no really good substitute for wisdom. But silence is the best that has been discovered."

Women's Duties.

For the women of an earlier time, their duties were not only well defined, they were unescapable. For us, they are not only rather readily escapable, they are even not defined. This is indeed, broadly true of all ethics, whose entire emphasis seems to have changed. The older moralists occupied themselves with the difficulty of doing one's duty. The modern ones, if they want to hold our attention, must rather consider the preliminary difficulty of finding out what one's duty is.—Elizabeth Wood bridge in Atlantic Monthly.

THE SANDMAN IN STORY

By Mrs. F. A. WALKER

JACK RABBIT GETS WELL.

Jack Rabbit continued to improve after Mister Fox came to visit him in his burrow, but he was still rather weak on the morning when he started for the first time since his illness to visit the fox in his home on the hill. As he started out he thought again of the last lesson that the fox had taught him, and said to himself: "This walk is not going to be half so hard as it seems, if only I keep up my courage."

Jack Rabbit had thought many times of the lesson that had been so well shown by the fox, when he walked through the spider's web, after the beetle ate, the bumble bee had failed.

Mister Fox was watching for the rabbit, and while he was still a long way off saw him coming and ran down to meet him.

"Well, well," said the fox, "I am certainly glad to see you and looking so well, too. One would scarcely think that you had been ill at all. I hope that the walk has not tired you too much."

When they got to the door of the fox's house, he said: "Come right in and sit down, for I know that you must be tired, and perhaps a bite of food is just what will refresh you a little." The fox was thinking of the time of green cornfodder which the rabbit had set out for him, and he was almost inclined to offer the rabbit nothing to eat but the meat of a fat turkey, which had been missing for two days from a neighboring roost. "But," said the fox to himself, "that would be an unkind thing to do to the rabbit since he has been ill, and I suppose he forgot the other day that food do not eat green vegetables."

So instead of the turkey he brought out some green pea pods, which he had gathered the day before, and the rabbit thought he had never tasted anything more delicious.

"They are the finest I ever ate," he said to the fox, as he finished the last of them, "and it was exceedingly kind of you to be so thoughtful."

"They sat and gossiped the news of the wood for an hour or so before Jack Rabbit, rising said: "Well, I think that it is about time I was going, for the oak home is pretty long one and I have to go rather slowly. I shall have plenty of time to think over whatever bit of wisdom you have to give me on my way home, although I may not be so fortunate as to see any application of the lesson."

"I would not overdo," said the fox, "and you had perhaps better take two or three days to apply the lesson I am about to tell you. There are a great many men and a great many animals who are never happy and, for the most part, they are themselves to blame, for they have not learned the lesson that contentment with what we have is the greatest source of happiness."

"That, then, is the lesson I am to apply," said the rabbit. "Well, I will do how as I can do it," and saying good-by to the fox Jack Rabbit started for home.

All the way home he did not see a thing which furnished any sort of an application of the wisdom that the fox had told him, but the next morning he was awakened by the sound of voices outside his burrow, and peeping out of the hole, he saw a small boy holding in his hand a cap which was worn and frayed, and he was saying to himself: "I won't want that old cap any longer. My father has got to buy me a new one, and to make sure that he does I am going to throw this one away," and, drawing back his arm he flung it as far as he could toward some bushes, where it landed in a hollow of the ground, well covered by a thickly leaved branch of a small tree.

"What an unhappy boy," said the rabbit, "and all because he is discontented with what may be the best Cap his father can afford."

A few hours after Jack Rabbit thought he would go over to where the cap lay and take a look at it, and just as he got near to the cap he thought he saw something in it move, and going a little closer, he saw it was a bird.

"What are you doing here?" said Jack Rabbit as soon as he recovered from his surprise.

"Why I have found the finest nest of all the wood," said the bird. "I had hunted for days and days for bits of string and cloth with which to build my nest, and then this morning, right here, under this tree, I found a nest all built for me. Everything that has been in service are and I shall have the finest home for my children of any bird in all these parts. I cannot understand how anyone who owned so fine a cap as this was would ever have thrown it away."

"It certainly is a fine nest," said the rabbit, "and I am sure your children will appreciate it."

And then as he walked away Jack Rabbit said to himself: "How could I have found a better application of the wisdom that Mr. Fox told me yesterday, when he said that contentment with what we have is the greatest source of happiness."

Concerning the Remaking of Suits

It is a good idea to buy an extra yard or so of the material selected for a tailored suit, in order that the coat or skirt, or both, may be altered and remade when the styles have changed slightly. Many times a skirt that is required to be more than one season's service without any alteration should be conservative in style. A plain skirt of medium fullness, and a box coat or one of the plain, semifitted models, if well made of good material and fine finish, is never out of the running.

A good model to follow in remaking a suit is shown in the picture given here. The skirt is made with an inverted panel set in at the back and front, and a narrow skirt may be widened by the addition of such panels. Another good plan for widening a narrow skirt is to split it up at each side to the swell of the hip. Here it is trimmed to form a yoke, and an extra piece is set in at each side by shirring or plaiting it to the yoke. The fashion for short skirts help make the way easy in altering them, and box coats at the shoulders and sleeves are usefull for the same purpose.

Coats have been brought up to date this season by the addition of full skirts, set on at the waist line, and by belts and pockets made in the new mode. A collar and cuffs in another fur help out in the transformation, and buttons supplement those with the enamel of finishing touches.

It is a great satisfaction to convert an old style into a new one. Whether one is compelled to be economical or not a remade suit made of good cloth adds variety to the wardrobe and admits of the exercise of the individual taste in design.

Artificial feathers for millinery, made of fur, have been invented by a boston man.

EVIDENTLY A THRIFTY SOUL

Would-Be Talker Over Telephone Balked When Called Upon to Drop a Nickel in the Slot.

A correspondent of the Cleveland Plain Dealer tells this story:

"I was called to the telephone, and a strange voice operator asked, 'Is this Garfield 6084?' and since that is indeed my number, I took the spoken call instituted, which were driven in their ends so that about one-half inch of the body with the head projected, writes Justin Stewart in Popular

Sled Propelled by Wheels, Pointed Nails Doing the Pushing.

Mechanics. The nails were then removed and the nail ends sharpened.

The bow were prepared of pieces of wood, whittled to tightly fit the holes. A hole was then bored exactly midway between the holes in the top of the half inch rod. This size rod was provided with a hole in the center for a bearing and being threaded for a distance equal to the length of the hub.

The runners were made of wood two inches square and four inches long were used as runners. These were bored centrally through the long way, to receive the one-half inch rod just loose enough to make a good bearing. These bearings were supported by a pair of braces made of strap iron about one-quarter of an inch thick and three-quarters of an inch wide. The length of the iron will depend on the size of the wheels and the height of the sled runner. The braces were shaped as shown. The center of the bearing hole must be as high from the surface of the ground as the distance the spokes end are from the center of the hub hole.

The crank is then run through the bearing hole and a nut run on the threads and a washer placed against the nut. The wheel is then slipped on the axle, and another washer and nut run on tightly. The wooden bearings, cranks and brackets are made alike. The brackets are fastened with small bolts to the sled top.

AMUSING PASTIME FOR BOYS

Any Number of Players May Engage in Game of Duck on the Rock—How It Is Played.

All boys and girls have played ducks and drakes at some time or another. The game is too well known to describe here. However, a variety of this game is called Duck on the Rock.

It is played like this: First pile up a heap of stones; each player is provided with a "duck" (stone), and in turn puts his "duck" on the top of the pile. A little way behind the pile stands the "rock" or safety. When a player has placed his "duck" on the rock the others try to knock it off with their stones.

Should a player miss he must be "duck" on the rock and endeavor to hit the sentry touches them before he can return to the mark from which the stones are thrown. If he is caught he becomes sentry and places his own "duck" on the rock to throw at.

If the duck is knocked off the rock the players may pick up their stones at leisure, for no one may be "ticked" until the duck has been put in position by its owner.

BOOKS FOR A BOY'S LIBRARY

"Allan Quatermain" and "King Solomon's Mines" Are Good Stories of Mystery and Adventure.

Amid a multitude of suggestions for the twenty-fifth book in Librarian Leary's list of books for boys we have missed two that, in our opinion, ought to be included in the library of every normal boy, says Chicago Evening Post. They are not books of instruction or moral improvement—they are just ripping good stories of mystery and adventure, and they were both written by Rider Haggard. The boy who has not read "Allan Quatermain" and "King Solomon's Mines" has a delight in store for him. He is sure thrilled by the exploits of that of Zulu warrior Umslopogaas, he is a small tree.

"What an unhappy boy," said the rabbit, "and all because he is discontented with what may be the best Cap his father can afford."

A few hours after Jack Rabbit thought he would go over to where the cap lay and take a look at it, and just as he got near to the cap he thought he saw something in it move, and going a little closer, he saw it was a bird.

"What are you doing here?" said Jack Rabbit as soon as he recovered from his surprise.

"Why I have found the finest nest of all the wood," said the bird. "I had hunted for days and days for bits of string and cloth with which to build my nest, and then this morning, right here, under this tree, I found a nest all built for me. Everything that has been in service are and I shall have the Quaint Runner Design.

There is a strong evidence of the revival of things quaint in the summer, not only in stitches, but in designs as well. One expression of this revival is noticeable in a runner for a library table. Conventionalized birds form the principal motif, and are stamped upon heavy tan crash. They are embroidered in rival colorings, heavy wool being used for the purpose. The rounded ends of the runner are an unusual effect in the scarf. There is no fringe, which looks just as old-fashioned as the birds themselves. The sides of the scarf are embellished with a conventional border formed of solid and outline stitches.

A pillow displaying the same design would complete a very attractive set for somebody's library.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

White House Has Many Military and Naval Aids

WASHINGTON.—When President Wilson marched down the grand stairway at the White House to preside at the first state reception of this winter he was preceded by the longest line of military and naval aids ever seen there. When the four bugleirs of the Marine band approached the foot of the steps to sound the usual fanfare for the approach of the president and his cabinet officers in full uniform of blue and gold lent luster to the event.

President Wilson had 13 aids during his first winter in the White House, and it is rather significant that he has added another aid. It is suggested that the superstition of a fair Virginia woman had something to do with it. Col. W. W. Harts, engineer corps, U. S. A., superintendent of public buildings and grounds and the Washington monument, is at the head of the list on chief military aid.

Commander Daniel W. Wurtzbaugh, U. S. N., is the chief naval aid. Considerable jealousy has existed in past years as to which should have the greater number of representatives on the distinguished list, the army or the navy, and to settle the affair justly President Wilson has book branches of the fighting contingent equally represented.

Guinea Hen Entertains a Crowd in Washington

SOMEWHERE in this wide and expansive city a lone guinea hen is at large, unless she has been trapped by a hunter within the confines of the District. The hen gave an audience of four or five hundred people a grand afternoon, and as a consistent, and entertaining performer the little squawking fowl had many another matinee queen looking faded.

She reached the city in a coop along with several other guinea hens, and was given a prominent position on the sidewalk in the market section of the region. At some time during the midafternoon the hen saw a grain of corn on a bright young fowl and slipped through. As she wriggled out to freedom the hen did not know that she was but the hen few striking to the top of a wagon, where the boss couldn't chase her because of his rotgut gait.

He detailed a Shanghai-guinea colored boy to the chase. The boy took a long pole with a wire hook at one end and began to fish for the bird. The pole stirred up the guinea fowl and sent her to the bottom of a tree.

With pole in hand the boy shinned the tree, while the guinea fowl kept one eye on him and edged out to the end of her bough as the pole and wire hook came nearer. The crowd was highly appreciative and began to show directions. The pole got within six inches of the bird, the boy nearly dived through the tree to the sidewalk and the guinea sailed flapping and squawking to a higher limb.

"I've goin' for get dat baby yit," murmured the colored boy, as he prepared to climb higher.

The limb sagged, the bird yelled again and flew to another tree, while the huntsman again all but fell heading to the sidewalk.

All lots in the crowd below were now on the bird. She was a prime favorite and the boy was but an object of derision.

The colored boy slid down to the ground and cautiously attacked the next tree. The hen was far up near the top and waiting the enemy with complacence. She had found a method of eluding the pursuer and seemed ready to adopt that course until nightfall.

And that is exactly what she did. As soon as the boy got into that tree, the bird flew into another, and so forth and so on, and at the time dusk fell the bird was sleeping somewhere in the open, with her head under her wing.

Navy Yard Wind Tunnel Tests Model Aircraft

THE largest plant in the world for aeronautical experiments is at the Washington navy yard and is known as the wind tunnel. Here all aircraft are worked out by navy designers, and a huge weight-carrying biplane soon to be constructed at the navy yard will be built on data gathered from the tests made in the big wooden box, where an 8-mile gale can be created and its effect upon the planes of a proposed aircraft can be weighed to within 2-2,000 of a pound.

The present tunnel is a temporary one, and navy officers hope that congress will authorize the construction of a permanent experimental aeroplane plant when the value of the scheme is fully realized. The tunnel is eight feet square inside and at one end is an electric fan, driven by a 500-horse power motor. At the opposite end are baffles or carefully built apertures to allow the blast created by the fan to escape without generating any back pressure to destroy the value of the experiment.

Coming down through the roof of the tunnel is a metal lever, to which are attached the model planes to be tested. These also about a foot long, representing the full power of a 60-foot lifting surface. They are modeled in exact reproduction of the real planes and can be set at any angle. Above the tunnel is the weighing machine, an intricate system of levers and fulcrums, leading finally to a delicate needle, swinging along a graduated quadrant, where the divisions are so minute that they must be read with a magnifying glass. The mechanism is so delicately adjusted that a pressure of 1-2,000 part of a pound will be noted by the vibrations of the needle.

When the model is placed in the tunnel, the fan is then started and a wind force is developed in the tunnel that can be increased or decreased at will. Step by step the operator notes the weights shown by the scale for which of various intervals and with the same set of planes to be tested. From his data he then plots the curve of the lifting power of the plane and the power necessary to drive an aircraft equipped with planes of that type at any desired speed. The results also will show the surface friction of the air against various kinds of material used in plane construction.

DEVELOPING WOOD PULP INDUSTRIES.

The Canadian government is now offering for sale, under certain conditions, forest lands, by sealed bids from pulp and paper interests for use of a certain tract of forest. It is stipulated that every bidder must be prepared to erect at a certain place, a pulp and paper mill, to employ a stated number of men in the woods and in the mills, and to turn out a certain tonnage of paper each day, the receiver of the grant also promising to invest a certain amount of money in the plant. The Canadian government has adopted these means to bring within the confines of the Dominion paper and pulp plants so that domestic labor can be given employment, using as the limit the enormous wealth of Canadian forests.

Naturally this move is unpopular with United States manufacturers—our quotation is from the United States trade paper—since there is, of course, no desire abroad to build up our industries at the expense of those of other lands.

Prepared-ness

By REV. J. H. RALSTON
Secretary of Correspondence, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.

(TEXT—Prepare to meet thy God.—Amos 4:12.)

Preparedness is the word of the hour. Its application is to preparation for defense. Many newspapers and many patriotic citizens are now urging the United States government to prepare for war in the time of peace. This application of the idea to the nation is a one strong competitor for consideration and that is preparation for man's eternal welfare. The preparedness first sermon of a in connection with a possible enemy of greater present military strength. God is very strong, and if it is possible for man to so act that he encourages God as an enemy, is he able to meet him?

Meeting God.

What is it to meet God? Man meets God in his everyday experiences. Some of these are commonplace, while others are unusual. Man is a creature of emotions and as individuals meeting God and they are enjoying or suffering the consequences. Man is a creature of meeting of God in death, the soul standing naked before God, and it is a very common expression in connection with the death of someone, "He has gone to meet his God." When a judge in court sentences a prisoner to death he adds, "And God have mercy on your soul." But the chief thing in mind is the meeting of God in the final judgment. Neither taking a chance, ignorance, nor becoming religious will make this preparation; only belief in the Lord Jesus Christ as Savior will do it.

The Outcome of Preparation.

One outcome of such preparation will be an immediate blessing, the establishment of peace with God and the experience of the peace of God. There is the realization of man's true place in the universe. He was created in the image and likeness of God and he can never be "the whole of man," as indicated by the current teaching of Ecclesiastes 12:13, unless he believes in Jesus Christ. There is also deliverance from the power of death, which, while as a lion in the pathway it may terrify, is chained. This outcome means the ultimate, perfect individual and also the perfect social order. Man is not "whole" until he has a sound mind in a sound body, and both of these are the inheritance of the believer in Jesus Christ. A man who does not believe in Jesus Christ as his Savior is not of a sound mind. The prodigal was not in his right mind when he demanded his father's goods and when he was spending them in riotous living, and it was only when he came to himself that he was in a resumed rationality and determined to return to his father's house, that he became of sound mind. This sound mind will also be in a sound body. It is the story of the Christian religion that it promises a body that is incorruptible, powerful, honorable, glorious and like Christ's body. The blind, the deaf, the dumb, the deformed and those lacking members of the normal body, can certainly believe that they will have perfect bodies some day if they meet the conditions that God places on them.

When Shall Man Prepare?

Many who acknowledge the necessity of preparation and put it off until or death, but while there is a most dangerous indifference to this fact on the part of those who theoretically profess it, it is true that preparation must be made before death. It is impossible to do it after death. Is it like the judgment? That preparation can be completely made now. But says someone, "That is too rapid, that is practically impossible. That is too active." Precisely so, and nothing less. There is no evolution in regeneration. Jesus, in his talk to Nicodemus, stated the matter of man's right relationship to God as speaking of it as a new birth. That preparation can be made the moment by believing in Jesus Christ.

Two soldiers in the trenches of Flanders, who were brothers and devout Christians, belonged to a regiment which had been ordered out for a charge upon the enemy. The commanding officer said that there would be a very serious business. The younger of the two brothers said to the other, as they were coming in smoke and the smoothering gases, "Brother, we may not see each other again, but it is all right." The older brother came back wounded, the name of the other was found in the list of those who had been killed, but he was prepared.

Luther's Trust in God.

Luther's entire reliance upon God, and his distrust of all human ways and means, is clearly set forth in the following quotation from a letter to his German doctor who befriended him:

"No sword can help in this affair. God will do it without any man's care or aid. Therefore who believes most will be of most protection here and since I suspect your highness to be weak in faith I can go no means regard you as the man who can protect or rescue me. Since your highness desires to know what to do in this affair, and fancies you have does too little, I answer respectfully that you have already done altogether too much, and should do nothing. . . .

If your highness believed, you would see the glory of God; but since you do not yet believe, you have as yet seen nothing. To God be love and honor forever. Amen!"—Christian Science Monitor.

TOOK DRUNK AND BOUGHT A CITY

North Carolina Planter Wakes Up to Find Himself Owner of a Town.

APPLE BRANDY DOES IT

Sold Various Friends With Apple Brandy and Then Drifts Into a Real Estate Auction—After That the Awakening.

Wilson, N. C.—W. H. Tomlinson, a well-to-do planter of this city, took a drink of apple brandy and bought a whole city. The details were told in an action in the county court here before Judge Rountree. J. D. Taylor was the defendant.

According to the story told in the courtroom, Mr. Tomlinson took one drink of apple brandy. Then he went out and met a friend who had some apple brandy. Then the two met a friend who had some apple brandy. After that the three met a friend who had some apple brandy. After that things are a little vague. Judge Rountree didn't insist on the witness being altogether too accurate about his recollections. But this he learned: Mr. Tomlinson drifted, or tacked, along to a real estate auction. There was a hard to stimulate those who needed that kind of stimulation. Mr. Tomlinson says he didn't, although he admitted pretty get some, too. Mr. Tomlinson says he remembers the band but he had no recollection whatever of the deed to three and three-quarter acres of property which he found in his pocket the next day. He looked the document over, and not being quite sure that it was rural bright, he called in his daughter. She figured out that her father had bought the three and three-quarter acres of land, a mile from Wilson, giving therefor notes for $600. He said that they was all set out with trees of three years growth, strawberries had been laid out, sewers dug and, in fact, that the place was a city, laid out and awaiting only the touch of a magic hand to become a rival of Wilson.

The magnitude of the proposition somewhat overcame Mr. Tomlinson. He has plenty of money, but he didn't exactly want the city. Still, he went out and looked it over. It looked pretty good. There were the trees getting ready to arch themselves over the four or five streets. They looked like real live trees—but they weren't.

There's where the rub came. The trees died. They not only died, but they fell over. And then Mr. Tomlinson found that they were trees only from the ground up. They had been cut somewhere off in the woods, sharpened on the end like a picket and driven into the ground.

Mr. Tomlinson put the following counsel to the court:

"I really wouldn't have cared so awful much about the whole thing," he said. "But I watered those trees all summer long."

COYOTES ARE IN CONTROL

Rabid Animals Are So Numerous That Men Are Afraid to Venture Out at Night.

Winnemucca, Nev.—From the tollhouse, north of the Humboldt line in Humboldt county, the hills are reported to be alive with rabid coyotes, making it extremely dangerous for persons to travel without being armed. While riding his ranch, George Hines killed four mad beasts with a club, and Frank Lamb also claimed one to death recently.

At the Sanders ranch, near Golconda, the rabid beasts are said to be in control of the situation, and are so plentiful that men fear to venture out at night. A rabid animal attached a farmer near Golconda and forced him to take refuge on the seat of his wagon. The camp dog was chewed to pieces when he gave battle to the intruder and the animal kept the team sear on the wagon all night. It was killed in the morning.

charted seas and tell "whoppers" guaranteed to at least attract attention.

He has been telling officials at the Children's society some of the best brain figments ever devised. After he had confided to them that he was the abandoned son of an Indian prince, the child of a Japanese fisherman and the son of a wealthy family, his adventures became tiresome, and postal cards bearing his signature were sent all over the country. His grandfather, in Kansas, Ill., saw one of them cards and notified the Children's society that it could find the father in New York. Mr. Adachi, when told of his son's whereabouts, signed:

"Oh, well, I'll come and get him. I thought he was safe."

The wonderful Adachi, when he was told firmly what his name and pedigree was, rushed his hands forcefully against his knickerbockers, kicked a stubbed shoe into the rug and said:

"Oh, shucks, that's true. I guess now I've got to go home and go to school again—but—and be righteous, I suppose, you just wait. When I get rich, I'm going to—" and the rest of the children gathered around while the wonderful Aladdin again rubbed his lamp of dreams for them.

Alton, Ill.—One kiss is all a bridegroom may give his bride when the ceremony is performed in the office of Police Magistrate Patrick Maguire. This rule was announced by the magistrate after the repeated osculations of a couple delayed the completion of the ceremony.

The couple being married were J. F. Kochenscher of Alton and Miss Cobbie A. Van Hoy of Terre Haute, Ind. In the course of the ceremony the judge asked the bridegroom to kiss the bride. The bridegroom didn't stop at one or two or three, and finally the magistrate asked him to cease, as it was taking too much time for the ceremony.

Takes Six Men to Overcome Infuriated Animal in Zoo—One Seriously Hurt.

Chippewa Falls, Wis.—Felix Lugard, seriously, on of the animal trainers at the zoo in Irving park, was seriously injured by a big buck deer which attacked the keeper when he entered the deer inclosure.

Mr. Lugard battled for nearly an hour before help came. His reservers, Bill Milner and Andrew Jacques had no weapon and they grappled with the enraged animal. After a 30-minute battle the other men reached the deer inclosure, sealed the fences and the five men succeeded in throwing the deer and tying its feet to its horns.

In trying free its feet, the animal broke its neck and died. Lugard was taken to the hospital.

NEW ARCHBISHOP OF CHICAGO

The Paisley Shawl

By MILDRED CAROLINE GOODRIDGE

(Copyright, 1918, by W. G. Chapman.)

"Think hard, Eustace—try to remember!" urged Wallace Brierly, but his lovable brother shook his head in a helpless, melancholy fashion.

"It's no use, Wallace," he declared. "It's all a kind of blur; all except the quaint little story and a half house painted yellow, and the sweet-faced girl who was so kind and playing and the lady with the old-fashioned Paisley shawl. I can see it now—a white cover and the figure in quaint curious and saffron-colored fringe. Find that shawl, Wallace, and you find the papers."

"If they have not been destroyed, yes," nodded the brother, with a sarcasm sigh. "We are as impecunious, poor by balanced family, Eustace. I lost my share of the fortune left to us by father's speculation. You wasted yours and you are now paying the penalty of your folly. I fancy we have both learned sense. We will have to begin business life all over again. We can do it with good, strong capital, if we can find those lost papers."

"I never knew their value," spoke Eustace Brierly. "When I took my last thousand dollars from the safe, the envelope they were in, I discovered later, held a couple of presumably legal-looking documents. I supposed they were some old deeds of no value."

"You are sure they were in the coat you wore the day you exchanged that garment for the money you told about?" pressed Wallace anxiously.

"Positively! And about all there was in it at that time," declared Eustace. "I had had some money in it and I took away with me. I remember having Springfield and striking out for home on my feet. I was footsore, starved, nearly frozen, as I tramped through villages after villages. That day we were talking about I must have had the start of the wasting fever that has kept me an invalid for over six months. Everything is a blur from the moment I was sitting swaying to and fro on a rock by the roadside, when a young girl and an old lady in the Paisley shawl passed by. I fell sideways, exhausted. Just then, they got me into their house—a yellow-painted story and a half cottage. They led me upstairs to an attic bedroom. They brought me food and drink and then I slept. I recall waking up in the morning half delirious, not sensible of my real surroundings.

"I remember dressing and putting on an overcoat hanging across a chair and leaving my own were underneath it in its place. I recall stealing down the stairs and in my light headedness, checklike that I had a covering now to fend off the biting cold and keep me warm—warm! Poor me, I think, till I wandered into the hayfield and rolling up with them and in that wild delirium."

"To find that overcoat to recover papers that will prove our joint ownership to property worth fifty thousand dollars," said Wallace seriously. "A story and a half house—painted yellow—and lady with a Paisley shawl," he added memorizingly, half to himself. "I shall start on my quest at once."

So, first, Wallace Brierly went to Sheffield. He had arrived in an automobile and made a regular business of his difficult task. For two weeks he traversed all the main thoroughfares looking out like cuckoos in a clock from his starting point. And the fashion in houses had not changed. There were any number of one and a half story structures, and many of them painted yellow. But the fashion in wraps had changed. Only some ancient dame retained possession of that olden time relic of dignity and substantiality—a Paisley shawl. Few were them, however. They were too frozen relegated to obscurity, and this, the chief line, utterly failed to materialize.

One day—ah, he would never forget it! He had arrived late Saturday evening at a little town called Fairview. He was wearied and indeed, almost discouraged, as he awoke the next morning. He loitered around the hotel till about noon and then strolled along the pretty main street of the pedestal town, more for the sake of exercise than with any investigatory spirit in the matter.

A church called its services and the attendants were dispersing as he passed it. Farmers from a distance were driving off in wagons and anticipated horses. Two seemed had been noticed into an old-fashioned phaeton. The weather was quite crisp and chilly. As the elder of the two lolled into her place she drew a fur from under the seat, cushion a shawl! A Paisley shawl! And having a white center and "curious," and a fringe! Wallace Brierly sprang into action as if shot from a gun, but the phaeton had started up. Before he could overtake it the rig had turned a corner and was lost to view, commingled with other vehicles.

"That phaeton!" he panted, rushing up to the man who had helped the ladies into the vehicle—"the lady with the Paisley shawl!"

The man whose arm he had seized in his fervor of urgent excitement stared at his wildness, breathless interlocutor in profound surprise.

"Why, yes," he spoke slowly. "Mrs. Esmond and her daughter."

"Do—do they live in a story and a half house—painted yellow?" bolted out Wallace tumultuously.

"They do—one mile down the road, where you saw them turn," was the responder, and then his informant found himself alone, staring marvellingly after the frantic Wallace, who had dashed away forthwith.

Mrs. Mary Esmond, widow, and her daughter, Leila, pretty as a picture, were quite astonished half an hour later to be overtaken just as they were putting up the old family horse, by the breathless, perspiring Wallace Brierly. He apologized for his unguarded—"one story and a half house"—"painted yellow" "Paisley shawl" "do they remember a fevered, hunger-crazed tramp who had fainted at their doorstep such and such a length of time back?"

"Why, yes, the poor fellow!" replied Mrs. Esmond. "He made me think of my dead son. I put out the old overcoat for our unfortunate guest. The next morning he was gone."

"And often since I have hoped it kept him warm, and that he found home and friends," spoke Leila. Raymond, and Wallace Brierly, reverencing her for her gentle pity for a homeless brother, thought her face were the divine glory of some angel.

"He was my only brother," spoke Wallace. "He left his old coat behind him here."

"It is in the attic now," explained Leila. "There were some papers in it. They bore no address, so I placed them carefully away, thinking that maybe some day they might be claimed."

"I claim them now," said Wallace in a tone of deep gratitude and satisfaction. "They mean to my poor brother guided brother and myself a new, grand start in life, after many bad mistakes."

They restored the papers and made him stay to dinner. He would never forget that peaceful, enjoyable afternoon. He bade them farewell with a full heart.

Three weeks later Wallace Brierly called unexpectedly at the Esmond home. He had learned of a mortgage in the place of the worthless of the owner of the Paisley shawl. He brought to her a present in ready cash that would free her home from debt. And then he found it hard to get away. Leila was the handsome (but bored him to delay, and then to a confession of love.

It was a quiet ceremony, their wedding, and as the happy pair started off on their honeymoon Wallace Brierly insisted that his bride wear the Paisley shawl.

Could Not Stand It Longer.

Did you ever converse with a man who was so nervous that he would break right in and finish what you were going to say? A fat man and lean man met on a Broadway car recently, relates the New York Sun. The conversation began agreeably enough. It was about the weather, fads, coal and politics. The fat man was a good listener, but the lean man wanted to do all the talking, and every time the roly-poly one said anything the cadaverous man took the words out of his mouth. The fat man began to glance sideways at his companion. It was apparent that the thing of having his words taken out of his mouth was beginning to raise him up some. The car traveled quite a distance before he opened up again. Then he said something about exercise, but the lean man again interrupted and finished what he was going to say. The fat man jumped from his seat with an angry flash on his face, shook his fist at the lean man and said: "It would be worth ten dollars of any man's money to give such a pail parson a good, soundly dogmared unmanerly chatterer a durned good—" "Kicking," the lean man finished for him. And the fat man jumped off the car.

Best Substitute for Wisdom.

An acquaintance of the late Josh Billings was one day talking with him about the remarkable increase of imitations and substitutes for original articles, as oleomargarine for butter, enameled for ivory and so forth, "and," said he, "many of the substitutes go ahead of the real thing. I guess in time there will be a substitute for everything—though I don't know about wisdom."

"No!" replied the humorist, "up to the present time, at least, there is no really good substitute for wisdom. But silence is the best that has been discovered."

Women's Duties.

For the women of an earlier time, their duties were not only well defined, they were unescapable. Well or ill they are not only rather readily escapable, they are not even desired. This indeed, broadly true of all the rich, whose entire emphasis seems to have changed. The older moralists recognized themselves with the difficulty of doing one's duty. The modern ones, if they want to focus our attention, most rather consider the preliminary difficulty of finding out what one's duty is.—Kinnaird Woodbridge in Atlantic Monthly.

THE SANDMAN IN STORY

By MRS. F. A. WALKER

JACK RABBIT GETS WELL.

Jack Rabbit continued to improve after Mister Fox came to visit him in his burrow, but he was still rather weak on the morning when he started for the first time since his illness to visit the fox in his house on the hill. As he started out he thought again of the last lesson that the fox had taught him, and said to himself: "This walk is not going to be half as hard as it seems, if only I keep up my courage."

Jack Rabbit had thought many times of the lesson that had been so well shown by the fox, when he walked through the spider's web, after the beetle and the bumble bee had failed.

Mister Fox was watching for the rabbit, and while he was still a long way off saw him coming and ran down to meet him.

"Well, well," said the fox, "I am certainly glad to see you and looking so well, too. One would scarcely think that you had been ill at all. I hope that the walk has not tired you too much."

When they got to the door of the fox's house, he said: "Come right in and sit down, for I know that you must be tired, and perhaps a bite of something to eat will refresh you a little." The fox was thinking of the nice large dandelion which the rabbit had set out for him, and he was almost inclined to offer the rabbit something to eat but the meat of a fat turkey, which had been missing for days from a neighboring roost.

"But," said the fox to himself, "that would be an unkind thing to do, for the rabbit since he has been ill, and I suppose he forgot the other day that food is not eat green vegetable."

So instead of the turkey he brought out some green pea pods, which he had gathered the day before, and the rabbit thought he had never tasted anything more delicious.

"They are the finest I ever ate," he said to the fox, as he finished the last of them, "and it was exceedingly kind of you to be so thoughtful."

They sat and gossiped the news of the wood for an hour or so before Jack Rabbit rising said: "Well, I think that it is about time I was going for the walk home to pretty little one and I have to go rather slowly. I shall have plenty of time to think over whatever bit of wisdom you have to give me on my way home, although I may not be so fortunate as to see any application of the lesson."

"I would be diverting," said the fox, "and you had perhaps better take two days to apply the lesson I am about to tell you. There are a great many men and a great many animals who are never happy, and, for the most, they are themselves to blame, for they have not learned the lesson that contentment with what we have is the greatest source of happiness."

"That, then, is the lesson I am to apply," said the rabbit. "Well, I will see how well I can do it," and saying good-bye to the fox Jack Rabbit started for home.

All the way home he did not see a thing which furnished any sort of application of the wisdom that the fox had told him, but the next morning he was awakened by the sound of voices outside his burrow, and peeping out of the hole, he saw a small boy holding in his hand a cage which was worn and frayed, and he was saying to himself: "I wonder what that old cage was longer. My father has got to pay me a new one, and to make sure that I—does I am going to throw this one away," and, drawing back his arm he flung it as far as he could toward some bushes, where it landed in a hollow of the ground, well covered by a thickly leaved branch of a small tree.

"What an unhappy boy," said the rabbit, "and it because he is discontented with what may be the best that his father can afford."

A few hours after Jack Rabbit thought he would go over to where the cage lay and take a look at it, and just as he got near to the cage he thought he saw something in it move, and going a little closer, he saw it was a bird.

"What are you doing here?" said Jack Rabbit as soon as he recovered from his surprise.

"Why I have found the finest nest in all the wood," said the bird. "I had hunted for days and days for bits of string and cloth with which to build my nest, and then late morning, right here, under this tree, I found a nest all built for me. Every bird that has seen it envies me and I shall have the best home for my children of any bird in all these parts. I cannot understand how anyone who owned so fine a cage as this would ever have thrown it away."

"It certainly is a fine nest," said the rabbit, "and I am sure your children will appreciate it."

And then as he walked away Jack Rabbit said to himself: "How could I have found a better application of the wisdom that Mr. Fox told me yesterday, when he said that contentment with what we have is the greatest source of happiness."

PROPELLERS FOR HAND SLED

Two Medium-Sized Buggy Wheels Made Use Of to Transmit Power—Pointed Nails Help.

Desiring to propel my hand sled with power transmitted from buggy wheels, I set about to procure the necessary materials. Two medium-sized buggy wheels were found in the back yard of a blacksmith shop, which were procured for a nominal price. The felloes of these wheels were removed, the tenons cut from the spokes and nails substituted, which were driven in their ends so that about one-half inch of the body with the hub projected, writes Justin Stewart in Popular Mechanics. In the hub were then removed and the nail ends sharpened.

The frame was made of two pieces of wood, whittled to tightly fit the holes. A hole was then bored exactly halfway between each plug for a cast half inch rod. This also rod was procured and bent to form a crank, the bearing and being threaded for a distance equal to the length of the hub.

Two pieces of wood about two inches square and four inches long were used as bearings. These were bored centrally through the long way, to receive the one-half inch rod just mentioned, and then a hole was made in each of the two pieces of wood, which was of good material and free flaws, in order to make a good bearing. These bearings were supported by a pair of braces made of strap iron about one-quarter of an inch thick and three-fourths of an inch wide. The length of the iron will depend on the size of the wheels and the height of the sled runner. The braces were shaped as shown. The center of the bearing must be at right from the surface of the ground as the distance the spokes are from the center of the hub hole.

The crank is then run through the bearing hole and a nut run on the threads and a washer placed against the nut. The wheel is then slipped on the axle, and another washer and a nut run on the other. Both wheels, bearings, cranks and brackets are made alike. The brackets are fastened with small bolts to the sled top.

AMUSING PASTIME FOR BOYS

Any Number of Players May Engage in Game of Duck on the Rock—How It is Played.

All boys and girls have played ducks and drakes at some time or another. The game is too well known to describe here. The modern variety of this game is called Duck on the Rock.

It is played like this: First pile up a heap of stones, each piece being piled with a "duck" (stone), and in turn pick the "duck" on the top of the pile. A little way behind the pile stands the "kick" or sentry. When a player has placed his "duck" on the rock he others try to knock it off with their stones.

Should a player miss he must be careful to pick up his stone and pass the sentry touchou him before he can return to the mark from which the stones are thrown. If he is caught he becomes sentry and places his own duck on the rock to be thrown at.

If the duck is knocked off the rock the players may pick up their stones to throw, for no one may be touched until the duck has been put in place by its owner.

BOOKS FOR A BOY'S LIBRARY

"Allan Quatermain" and "King Solomon's Mines" Are Good Stories of Mystery and Adventure.

Amid a multitude of suggestions for the twenty-fifth book in Librarian Lerona list of books for boys we have noticed two that, in our opinion, ought to be included in the library of every normal boy, says Chicago Evening Post. They are not books of instruction or moral improvement, but they are just rippling good stories of mystery and adventure, the first one being written by Rider Haggard. The boy who has not read "Allan Quatermain" and "King Solomon's Mine" has a treat in store for him. If he is not afraid of a little shivering and cold shudder occasionally, he will be delighted by the exploits of the British hero.

Gov. Locke Craig was talking in Raleigh about the difficulties of the profession of politics.

"I am in hearty sympathy," he said, "with the ward leader who answered to his friends the other day that his new son—a nineteen-pound baby—looks fair to grow up a very successful politician.

"How can you tell that already, Jake?" they asked him. "Why, the kid can't talk yet."

"No," said Jake. "But he has already started in trying to kick and shake hands at the same time."

Concerning the Remaking of Suits

Sled Propelled by Wheels, Pointed Nails Doing the Pushing.

It is a good idea to buy an extra yard or so of the material selected for a tailored suit, in order that the coat or skirt, or both, may be altered and the suit remodeled. Good fabrics cut last styles, and a suit is often regretfully consigned to the discard, not because it is worn but because styles have changed since it was made.

A suit that is required to do more than one season's service without any alteration should be conservative in style. A plain skirt of medium fullness, and a box coat or one of the plain, semifitted models, if of a good quality of material and free flaws, is never out of the running.

A good model to follow in remaking a suit is shown in the picture given above. The skirt is made with an inverted panel set in at the back and front, and a narrow skirt may be widened by the addition of such panels. Another good plan for widening a narrow skirt is to split it up at each side to the swell of the hip. Here it is trimmed to form a yoke, and an extra piece is set in at each side by shirring or plaiting it to the yoke. The fashion for short skirts help make the way easy in altering them, and borders at the bottom and bands set on are useful for the same purpose.

Coats have been brought up to date this season by the addition of full skirts, set on at the waist line, and by belts and pockets made in the new mode. A collar and cuffs in another fabric help out in the transformation, and buttons supplement those with the scarcest of finishing touches.

It is a great satisfaction to convert an old style into a new one. Whether one is compelled to be economical or not a remade suit made of good cloth adds variety to the wardrobe and admits of the exercise of the individual taste in dress.

Little Ministers of Vanity

Quaint Runner Design.

Someone whose occupation, or business, in the thinking up of pretty things must have turned her attention recently to artificial flowers, for these enticing copies of nature's beauty wonderfully compel attention everywhere where because if they are used in new and unusual ways. We are used to seeing them in corsage bouquets and replacing natural flowers in the hair, etc. We are familiar with them in girdles about the waist and in wreaths about the hair, but these are only mere beginnings of their usefulness as it has been lately developed.

Everywhere little bunches of them in bows and rosettes of ribbons or lace, ornamenting collars and cuffs, they dangle in place of ribbons in hanging sprays from the girdle. They are perched in bright sprays on the party or the shopping bag, and they adorn the parasolette, the perfume bottle and the powder puff.

A small bouquet set in a frill of green and brown leaves, like narrow ribbons that are tied about the wrist to the latest adjusted hat are of early prominence. And that one is the spray of flowers which adorns an article of use, ankles of silk hose that is tied above the slipper to fly with the feet of the youthful dancer. Only one ankle is allowed this final touch of color and coquetry.

The corsage bouquet and the flowers for the limousine have other business in hand besides their important mission of beauty. They are determined to be useful as well as ornamental. A bouquet for the limousine is shown in the picture, made of two orchids and many sprays of delicate sprigs of the valley. In the heart of one orchid, concealed by flower petals, is a tiny box of cosmetic powder and the other dares to harbor in this secret way a box of rouge. Flower perfumed are the small powder puff that slips in each box and the omnipresent little ring that is the handle of the puff is covered with the rouge.

The stems of the flowers are tied with a bow of ribbon matching one of the shades in the orchid's color. Over ribbon loop is sewed up along the edges to form a case for a tiny mirror. Inside lodged in the tunnel that can be increased or decreased at will. Step by step the operator notes the weights shown by the scale for width of various identity and with the plans set at various angles. From his data he then plots the curve of the lifting power of the plane and the power necessary to drive it at various speeds, and finally the point at which it will rise in the air, at any desired speed. The results also will show the surface friction of the air against various kinds of material used in plane construction.

DEVELOPING WOOD PULP INDUSTRIES.

The Canadian government, through its department of forests, is receiving bids from pulp and paper interests for use of a certain tract of forest. It is stipulated that every ton of pulp must be prepared in event of receiving the grant to build a pulp and paper mill, to employ a stated number of men in the woods and in the mills, and to turn out a certain tonnage of paper each day, the receiver of the grant also promising to invest a certain amount of money in the plants. The Canadian government has adopted these means to bring within the confines of the Dominion paper and pulp plants, so that domestic labor can be given employment, using as the fare its enormous wealth of woodlands.

Naturally this move is unpopular with United States manufacturers—our quotation is from the United States trade paper—since there is, of course, no desire abroad to build up our industries at the expense of those of other lands.

EVIDENTLY A THRIFTY SOUL

Would-Be Talker Over Telephone Balked When Called Upon to Drop a Nickel in the Slot.

A correspondent of the Cleveland Plain Dealer tells this story:

"I was called to the telephone and a long distance operator asked, 'Is this Garfield 0064?' and since that is indeed my number I told her so. She called to the party on the other end of the line. Drop a nickel, please.

"'Yes?' came a male voice.

"'Drop a nickel, please.'

"'Yes?'

"'Drop five cents, please,' said the operator. Finally it dawned on the caller can't get it though his head that he must part with a piece before he can talk. Then I took a hand—or a voice—in the conversation.

"'What's the matter with you?' I shrieked. 'Drop five cents in the slot, and then you'll be allowed to talk to this number.'

"There was a long pause, and then this came:

"'O-oh! Well, neither mind. I gets me another nickel.'

"'Probably,' concludes our informant, 'he kept calling till he got a cheaper one.'

Uncle Sam Educating the Country Schoolmarm

BECAUSE "the future greatness of the American nation depends in large measure upon the prosperity of the 50,000,000 men, women and children in its rural communities," the federal education bureau has started to educate the country schoolmarm, so she can educate the 50,000,000 in her little red schoolhouse, which is intended so equip them to become prosperous.

Every state, county, township and village in the country and the National Education association are helping Uncle Sam in this education of educators, with a view to promoting national prosperity.

The first step in this campaign was the organization of the National "Teachers" Training Circle, through the co-operation of the National Education association and state departments of public instruction. H. W. Foght, specialist in rural school practice, is directing the work from the bureau of education. Branches have been organized in 34 states, giving an opportunity to 350,000 rural school teachers to have a hand in this work.

A two years' reading course of nonprofessional books of culture value, educational value, general principles and methods of education, rural education and rural life problems, has been outlined. Those who give satisfactory evidence of having read intelligently 17 books from the lists given will win their diploma, which will be signed by the president of the United States and the state school officials.

Navy Yard Wind Tunnel Tests Model Aircraft

THE largest plant in the world for aerodynamical experiments is at the Washington navy yard, and it is there that the navy's airplanes are tested. It is worked out by navy designers, and a huge weight-carrying biplane soon to be constructed at the yard will be built on data gathered from the tests made in the big wooden box, where an 8-foot model of the plane, of the exact size of the planes of a proposed aircraft, can be weighed to within 1/2,000 of a pound.

The present tunnel is a temporary one, and navy officers hope that congress will authorize the construction of a permanent aerodynamic experiment plant when the value of the scheme is fully realized. The tunnel is eight feet square inside and at one end is an electric fan, driven by a 550-horse power motor. At the success end are shutters, or carefully built apertures to allow the blasts created by the fan to escape without generating a back pressure to destroy the value of the experiment.

Center does, through the roof of the tunnel is a metal lever, to which are attached the model planes to be tested. These are about a foot long, representing the full area of a 60-foot lifting surface. They are modeled in exact replication of the real planes and can be set at any angle. Above the tunnel is the weighing machine, an intricate system of levers and fulcrums, leading finally to a dial, which, when the model is placed in the quadrant, where the divisions are so minute that they must be read with a magnifying glass, the pressure of the model upon the scales, to the extent of 1-2,000 part of a pound will be noted by the vibrations of the needle.

When the plane model is to be tested has been set, the fan is started and a wind force is developed in the tunnel that can be increased or decreased at will. Step by step the operator notes the weights shown by the scale for winds of various intensity and with the plane set at various angles. From his data he then plots the curve of the lifting power of the plane and the power necessary to drive it at various speeds, and finally the point at which it will rise in the air, at any desired speed. The results also will show the surface friction of the air against various kinds of material used in plane construction.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

White House Has Many Military and Naval Aids

WASHINGTON.—When President Wilson marched down the grand stairway at the White House to preside at the first state reception of this winter he was preceded by the longest line of military and naval aids ever seen there. When the four buglers of the Marine band approached the foot of the steps to sound the usual fanfare for the approach of the president and his cabinet 14 officers in full uniform of blue and gold lent luster to the event.

President Wilson had 13 aids during his first winter in the White House, and it is rather significant that he has added another aid. It is suggested that the superstition of a fair Virginia woman had something to do with it. Col. W. W. Harts, engineer corps, U. S. A., superintendent of public buildings and grounds and the Washington monument, is at the head of the list as chief military aid.

Commander Daniel W. Wurtzebaugh, U. S. N., is the chief naval aid. Considerable jealousy has existed in past years as to which should have the greater branch of representatives on the distinguished list, the army or the navy, and to settle the affair justly President Wilson has both branches of the fighting contingent equally represented.

Guinea Hen Entertains a Crowd in Washington

SOMEWHERE in this wide and expansive city a lone guinea hen is at large, unless she has been trapped by a wily huntsman from the frontier of the District. The hen gave an audience of four or five hundred people a grand afternoon, and as a comedy and entertaining performer the little squawking fowl had scored another matinee queen looking faded.

She reached the city in a coop along with several other guinea hens, and was given a prominent position on the sidewalk in the middle of some region. At some time during the afternoon the hen was given a chance to a bright young fowl and slipped through. As she wriggled out to freedom she saw her sister hen in the coop, but the hen flew shrieking to the top of a wagon, where the boss couldn't grab on account of his rolling shape.

He detailed a shuffle-footed colored boy to the chase. The boy took a long pole with a wire hook at one end and began to fish for the bird. The pole attired up the guinea fowl and sent her to the boughs of a tree.

With pole in hand the boy shinned the tree, while the guinea fowl kept one eye on him and edged out to the end of her bough as the pole and wire hook came nearer. The crowd was highly appreciative and began to show directions. The pole got within six inches of the bird, the boy nearly fired through the tree to the sidewalk and the guinea sailed flapping and squawking to a higher limb.

"I'se gon' ter git dat baby yit," murmured the colored boy, as he prepared to climb higher.

The limb sagged, the bird yelled again and flew to another tree, while the huntsman again all but fell headlong to the sidewalk.

All lots in the crowd below were now on the bird. She was a prime favorite and the boy was but an object of derision.

The colored boy slid down to the ground and cautiously attacked the next tree. The hen was far up near the top and fluttered and squawked with consternation. John had found a method of eluding the pursuer and seemed ready to adopt that course indefinitely.

And that is exactly what she did. At soon as the boy got into that tree, the bird flew into another, and so from and so on, and at the time dusk fell the bird was sleeping somewhere in the open, with her head under her wing.

Prepared-ness

By REV. J. H. RALSTON
Secretary of Correspondence, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.

TEXT—Prepare to meet thy God.—Amos 4:12.

Preparedness is the watchword of the hour. Its application is to preparation for the world to come. Many newspapers and many patriotic citizens are now urging the United States government to prepare for war in the time of peace. This application of the idea to the nation has a very strong conviction for consideration and that is preparation for man's eternal welfare. The preparedness first spoken of is in connection with a possible enemy of greater present military strength. It is very strong, and if it is possible for man to so act that he encounters God as an enemy, he is able to meet him.

Meeting God.

What is it to meet God? Man meets God in his ordinary obligations. Some of these are communal, while others are individual. Men are as communities and as individuals meeting God and they are suffering or reaping the consequences. There is a certain meeting of God in death, the soul standing naked before God. There is a very common expression in connection with the death of a man, "he has gone to meet his God." When a judge in court sentences a prisoner to death he adds, "and God have mercy on your soul." But the chief thing to be said in the matter of God in the final judgment. Neither taking a classical education, nor measures of religious will make this preparation, only belief in the Lord Jesus Christ as Savior will do it.

The Outcome of Preparation.

One outcome of such preparation will be an immediate blessing, the establishment of peace with God and the experience of the peace of God. There is the realization of man's true place in the universe. He was created in the image and likeness of God and he can never be the whole or complete man until he gets the correct reading of Ecclesiastes 12:13, unless he believes in Jesus Christ. There is also deliverance from the power of death, which, while as a line in the universe it may terrify, is chained. This outcome means the ultimate perfect individual and also the perfect social order. Man is not "whole" until he has a sound mind in a sound body, and both of these are the inheritance of the believer in Jesus Christ. A man who does not believe in Jesus Christ as his savior is not of a sound mind. The prodigal was not in his right mind when he commanded his father to go on and when he was spending them in riotous living, and it was only when he came to himself that he, when he resumed rationality and determined to return to his father's house, that he became of sound mind. This sound mind will also be in a sound body. It is the story of the Christian religion that it promises a body that is incorruptible, powerful immortal, glorious and like Christ's body. The bible tells that the dead, the deformed and those lacking members of the normal body, can certainly believe that they will have perfect bodies some day if they meet the conditions that God places on them.

When Shall Man Prepare?

Many who acknowledge the necessity of preparation, put it off until after death, but while there is a most dangerous indifference to this fact on the part of those who do not profess it, it is true that preparation must be made before death. "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment." That preparation can be completely made now. He says someone, "that is too rapid, that is practically impossible. It is a creative act." Precisely so, and nothing less. There is no evolution in regeneration. Jesus, in his talk to Nicodemus, settled the matter of man's right relationship to God in regeneration. It is a new birth. That preparation can be made this moment by believing in Jesus Christ.

TOOK DRINK AND BOUGHT A CITY

North Carolina Planter Wakes Up to Find Himself Owner of a Town.

APPLE BRANDY DOES IT

Meets Various Friends With Apple Brandy and Then Drinks Into a Real Estate Auction—After That the Awakening.

Wilson, N. C.—W. H. Tomlinson, a well-to-do planter of this city, took a drink of apple brandy and bought a whole city. The details were told in an action in the county court here before Judge Rountree. J. D. Taylor was the defendant.

According to the story told in the courtroom, Mr. Tomlinson took one drink of apple brandy. Then he went out and met a friend who had some apple brandy. Then the two met a friend who had some apple brandy. After that the three met a friend who had some apple brandy. After that things are a little vague. Judge Rountree didn't insist on the witness being altogether too accurate about his recollections. But this he learned:

Mr. Tomlinson drifted, or kicked, along to a real estate auction. There was a hand to stimulate those who needed that kind of stimulation. Mr. Tomlinson says he didn't, although he evidently got some, too. Mr. Tomlinson says he remembers the hand but he had no recollection whatever of the deed to three and three-quarter acres of property which he found in his pocket the next day. He looked the document over, and not being sure whether he was drunk or bright he called in his daughter. She figured out that her father had bought the three and three-quarter acres of land, a mile from Wilson, giving thirty-day notes for $2,800; that the property was all set out with trees of three years' growth; streets had been laid out, sewers dug and, in fact, that the place was a city, laid out and waiting only the touch of a magic hand to become a rival of Wilson.

The magnitude of the proposition somewhat overcame Mr. Tomlinson. He has plenty of money but he didn't exactly want the city. Still, he went out and looked it over. It looked pretty good. There were two men getting ready to arch themselves over the four or five streets. They looked like real live trees—but they weren't.

"There's where the rub came." The trees died. They not only died, but they fell over. And then Mr. Tomlinson discovered that they were not trees; that they were mere sticks, stuck into the ground up. They had been carried somewhere off in the woods, sharpened on the end like a stake and driven into the ground.

Mr. Tomlinson put the finishing touch to the story in court:

"I really wouldn't have cared so awful much about the whole thing," he said. "But I watered those trees all summer long."

COYOTES ARE IN CONTROL

Rabid Animals Are So Numerous That Men Are Afraid to Venture Out at Night.

Winnemucca, Nev.—From the tollhouse, north of the Oregon line in Humboldt county, the hills are reported to be alive with mad coyotes, making it extremely dangerous for persons to travel without being armed. While riding his horse, George Ward killed four mad beasts with a club, and Frank Lamb also clubbed one to death recently.

At the Gerlach ranch, near Golconda, the rabid beasts are said to be in control of the situation, and are so plentiful that one feel to traverse one night. A rabid animal attacked a teamster near Golconda and forced him to take refuge on the seat of his wagon. The crazy dog was chewed to pieces when he gave battle to the intruder and the animal kept the team, star on the wagon all night. It, at killed in the morning.

TRENCH COOKING BY GIRLS

Woman's College in London Gives a Special Course for Woman War Workers.

London.—Cookery lessons in a trench dug in the grounds of the new King's college for Women (University of London, at Campden [illegible]) is among the features of a special course on camp cookery inaugurated at the college recently and open to nonstudents.

This course and one which opened recently on "Economic Housekeeping in Wartime" will, it is thought, be especially useful to woman war workers, in view of the fact that the employment of women as cooks, porters, orderlies, etc., is now permitted in the military hospitals.

The practical work in the camp cookery course will be undertaken out of doors whenever possible and will include the building and making of outside fires, ovens, etc., improvising of camp cookery implements, the boiling of meats, etc. Attention will therefore be directed to cooking in large quantities, stewing, soup making, bread making and the making of boiled puddings.

IS GRANDPA OF ALL WOLVES

Animal Trapped in Wisconsin is Largest of Variety Ever Seen in That Section.

Rhinelander, Wis.—The largest timber wolf ever seen in the county was trapped by Deputy Sheriff Andrew Anderson near Twin lakes.

The deputy brought the animal's body to Crandon where he had it on display for several days. Mr. Anderson who has realized more wild animals than almost any man in the state, declares that he has never before seen a wolf anywhere near as large.

Weighing 119 pounds, the body measured six feet from the end of the nose to the tip of the tail. The animal was three feet in height and had been caught in a trap before, the right forefoot having been clipped off.

Virginia.

The area of Virginia is 9,564 square miles, its population by the 1910 census 2,061,612. Its chief agricultural products are tobacco, apples, peaches and other fruits; corn, wheat, oats, buckwheat and barley; peanuts; cabbages, potatoes and other vegetables and the native and cultivated grasses and clovers which yield an abundance of hay. Virginia is "essentially an agricultural state." The mean temperature for July, 1913, was 77.4, for December 37.7. The annual rainfall is from 40 to 60 inches, fairly well distributed through the entire year. The population of Norfolk is 85,666.

The THOUSANDTH WOMAN by ERNEST W. HORNUNG

SYNOPSIS.

Charlet, on the steamer Kaiser Fritz, homeward bound from Australia, sees the young girl who is being trailed by two young men. Charlet, to foil Raffles and himself, is dead, and finds that Miss Tova, who has been engaged to Raffles, knows Charlet and also Raffles. Raffles, who is daily expecting a wire from Scotland Yard, leaves the steamer at Southampton. Tova reads that Charlet's death occurred at Adelaide, and Charlet, who has been detective work for the case himself in the rain in town they discuss the murder, which was committed at Charlet's house, and Charlet's suspicions of Raffles and the suspicion of Raffles's friend, who has been released from prison. Charlet goes down the river to see her father, who lives in Tova's cottage, and finds that Raffles has been arrested, but as he doesn't believe the evidence he is going to prove out the mystery. Raffles and Charlet, with Tova's father, Peter Jay, and Detective Inspector Lord Yard, Charlet goes with Drinkwater to the place where the murder was committed, shows him a secret passage he knew of as a boy.

CHAPTER VII—Continued.

"Oh, that was as easy as pie; I'd often explored them. Do you remember the one I got lost in? I'm taking you with me once and simply running round a bit."

"I remember the frock!" said Blanche.

It was her last contribution to the conversation; immediate developments not only put her into the shade, but exhausted all anxious memories, but resuscited a presentable appearance by removing Charlet from the scene with the two detectives. Almost with one warning all three disappeared down the makeshift trap-door set by one of them as a schoolboy in his father's floor.

We hardly even know how it happened. The little place was so small that she never saw the hole until it had escaped me of the trap, the third explorer, Mr. Drinkwater himself, had very courteously turned her out of the library before following the others. And he had said so very little before had for her to hear; and so quickly prevented Caralet from saying anything at all, that she simply could not think what any of them were doing under the floor.

Under her very feet she heard them moving as she waited a bit in the hall, she which the house by way of the servants' quarters, of course without binding any communication with those mutineers, and only indignant that Mr. Drinkwater should have requested her not to do so.

It was a long half-hour that followed for Blanche Malmain, but she passed it characteristically.

She turned her wholesome mind to dogs, which in some ways she knew better and trusted further than men. There was a dog at Ulfranda, and at yet she had never thought of him. He lived in a large kennel in the yard, for he was a large dog and rather friendless. But Blanche knew him by right, and had felt always sorry for him.

The large kennel was just outside the back door, which was at the foot of the cellar stairs and at the bottom of two or three leading into the scullery; but Blanche, of course, went round by the garden. She found the poor old dog quite disconsolate in a more canine kennel in a corner of the one that was really worthy of the more formidable carnivora. There was every sign of his being treated as the dangerous dog that Blanche, indeed, had heard he was; the outer bars were further protected by wire netting which stretched like a canopy over the whole cage, but Blanche—as her self in with as little hesitation as she proceeded to bind the poor brute to his inner lair. And he never even barked at her; he just lay whimpering with his head on one paw and his forefront paws, as though his dead master had not left him to the servants all his life.

Blanche coaxed and petted him until all the almost wept herself; then and dealt and without warning the dog showed his other side. Out he leaped from wooden sanctuary, almost knocking her down, and barking horribly yet but not at Blanche. She followed his infuriated eyes, and the back door was frained a dusty and army figure, just climbing into full length on the cellar stairs, which Blanche had some difficulty in identifying with that of Caralet.

"Well, you really are a Sweep!" she cried when she had stripped out first in time, and the new savage was still bolting and clawing at his bars.

"How did you come out, and where are the others?"

"The old way," he answered. "I left them down there."

"And what did you find?"

"I'll tell you later. I can't bear my voice for that infernal dog."

The dreadful barking followed them out into the yard, and round to the right, past the tradesman's door, to the verge of the drive. Here they met an elderly man in a tremendous hurry who notable detail who instantly abandoned whatever purpose he had form, and came to confer in front of them with clearly eyes and twinch his eyebrows.

"Why, if that isn't Miss Blanche!" he quivered. "Do you hear our Roy mina? I don't heard that go on like that since the night that Raffles broke!"

Then Caralet introduced himself to the old gardener whom he had known all his life, and by rights the man should have regn outright, or else claimed a very handsome lump with wise humour. But old Savage nailed from silly Suffolk, and all his life he had belied his surname, but never the alliterative thing or his native country. He took the wanderer's return very much as a matter of course, very much as though he had never been away at all, and was demonstrative only in his fortnight use of the Essex Anglian pronoun.

"Thank a long time since we faced to see you, Mur Walter," said he, "thaks a right long time. And now here's a nice little pot of fish for you to find! But I seen the man, Miss Walter, and well bring a that home to him, never you fear!"

"Do you mean that you saw him?" asked Blanche, already under Caralet's influence on this point.

Savage looked cautiously toward the house before replying; then he lowered his voice dramatically. "Thore Miss Blanche. Why, I see him that night as plain as I fare to see Miss Walter now!

"I should have thought it was too dark to see anybody properly," said Blanche, and Caralet nodded vigorous to himself.

"Dark, Miss Blanche? Why, there was broad daylight, and if that wasn't more than the holes thats cut to see him by!" His stage voice fell a sepulchral semitone. "But I see him again at the station this very afternoon. I did! I promised not to talk about that—you'll keep that a secret if I tell o somethin'"—but I picked him out of half a dozen at the first time of asklin'"

Savage said this with a pleased and vacuous grin. Looking Caralet full in the face, his rheumy eyes were red as the sunset, his lined and Caralet drew a deep breath as Blanche and he turned back toward the river.

"First time of prompting, I expect," he whispered. "But there's hope if Savage is their conspirator! Well?"

"Only listen to that dog," said Blanche, as they passed the yard.

CHAPTER VIII.

Finger-Prints.

Hilton Toye was the kind of American who know London as well as most Londoners, and some other capitals a good deal better than their respective citizens of corresponding intelligence. His travels were mysteriously but evidently interwoven with business; he had an air of employing himself, and at the same time making money to pay for his employment. Wherever he went his hotel days were much the same all over Europe: many appointments, an abundant leisure. As, however, he never spoke of his business or where he was there were also those of the inner—and not always then—half his acquaintance who knew that he was a man his money, and the other half wondered how he spent his time. He had his more interests, which were many. Toye was an arch-secret, but it was quite impossible to deduce a main industry from the products of his best-headed speculations.

Criminology, for example, was an interest which Toye had inherited from taste in Hilton Toye, but a scientific hobby that appealed to his mental nature, and made it as hard work as with strange simplicities; gravely and dignified, yet addicted to the extreme style phraseology of his less enlightened countrymen, strangely sincere and yet always capable of some ingenious duplicity.

The aspect of a Blanche Magnair so such a soul needs no analysis. She had even through all complexities of the core such as it was or as she might make it. As yet she could only admire the character the man had shown, though it had upset her nerves and made her shudder and propound to her inside of two weeks, as he had admitted without compunction at the time. It had taken him, he said, about two minutes to make up his mind; but the following summer he had laid more deliberate siege, in accordance with some odd idea that she had let fall to soften her first refusal. The result had been the one only more explicit on both sides. She had denied him the least profession of love, and he had valued her that she had not heard the last of him by an unseen and never would till she married another man. This had increased her at the time, but a great deal less on subsequent reflection; and such was the position between that pair when Toye and Caralet landed in Ulfranda from the same steamer.

On this second day indeed, as Caralet over a late breakfast in Jermyn street, Toye sent in his card and was permitted to follow it, rather to his surprise. He found his man frantically divided between business and the morning paper, but in a heart-rending mood indicative of something far great best in yesterday's sunshine.

"You should say what kinds, not what kind. she corrected him gently. "I think I'll try every kind there's go Blanche. Won't that I'" "Ta'ra!" "You mustn't!" he cried.

"Why mustn't I, sir?" she laughed merrily. And she started by ordering chocolate, persimmons and rhubarb.

"Let it go at that, please," he pleaded her. "It's not being done by the best people."

But she just laughed lightly and began on the rhubarb. When she was half way through the second order, of consequence, glycerin, olive ice and tapioca. Blanche Bagbigs "leaped to his feet in desperation.

"Excuse me a moment," he said hastily and ran out of the place with not stopping for his hat and without leaving behind with the ice cream bill.—Detroit Free Press.

Ambiguous.

"Have a pretty girl as Isabel is and she has no brains!"

"You see her father had the reputation of being such a hinker."

A platner indication was the downright yet sunny manner in which Tova had at once returned to the contentious topic.

"Well, my dear Toya, what do you think of it now?"

"I was going to ask you what you thought, but I guess I can see from your face."

"I think the police are rotters for not setting him free last night!"

"Perhaps!"

"Yes. Of course, the case'll break down when it comes to trial—it took but they oughtn't to wait for that. They've no right to detain a man in custody when the bottom's out of their case already!"

"But—but the papers claim they've found the very things they were searching for!" Toya looked now pleased, as well he might, by an apparently perverse jubilation over such intelligence.

"They haven't found the missing cap! cried Caralet. "What they have found is Craven's watch and keys, and the silver-mounted truncheon that killed him. But they found them in a place where they couldn't possibly have been put by the man identified as Berdoe!"

"But where was that?" asked Toya with great interest. "My paper only says the things were found, not where."

"No more does mine, but I can tell you, because I helped to find 'em."

"You don't say!"

"You'll never grasp where," continued Caralet. "In the foundations under the house!"

Details followed in all fullness, the listener might have had a part in the hideous act of yesterday's drama, might have played in the library scene with Raffles and Miss Blanche, so vividly was every minute of that crowded hour brought home to him. He was not so sure that he had any very definite conception of the foundations of an English house.

"Ours were like ever so many little tiny rooms," said Caralet, "where I couldn't stand nearly upright even as a man when I was about giving my head a crack against the ground floors. They led into one another by a lot of little manholes—light fits and force a boy.

"They Haven't Found the Missing Cap!" Cried Caralet.

but nearly fatal to the boss police man yesterday!"

Hilton Toye, edging in his word, said he guessed he visualized—but just where had these missing things been found?

"Two or four compartments from the first one under the library," said Caralet.

"Did you find them?"

"Well, I kicked against the truncheon, but Drinkwater dug it up. The watch and keys were with it."

"Was anyone there buried?"

"Only in the loose rubble and brick dust stuff that you get in foundations."

"Say, that's bad! That murderer man has always something, or else it's a bully fluke is his favor."

"I don't believe you, Toya."

"I'm thinking of fingerprints. If he's just've laid those things right down, he'd have left the print of his hand as large as life for Scotland Yard."

"The devil he would!" exclaimed Caralet. "I wish you'd explain."

"Remember I'm a wild man from the woods, and only know of them things by the vagarest kind of hearsay and stray paragraphs in the papers. I never knew you could leave your mark so easily as all that."

Toya took the breakfast menu and placed it face downward on the table cloth. "Lay your hand on that, palm down," he said, "and don't move for a minute."

Caralet looked at him a moment before complying; then his fine, sensitively sunburnt hand lay still as plaster under their eyes until Toya told him he might take it up. Of course there was no mark whatever, and Caralet laughed.

"You should have caught me when I came up from those foundations, not fresh from my fight," said he.

"You wait," replied Hilton Toye, taking the menu absently by the edge, and putting it out of harm's way in the empty toast rack. "You can't see anything now, but if you come round to the Savoy I'll show you something."

"What?"

"Your prints, sir! I don't say I'm Scotland Yard at the same, but I can do it well enough to show you how it's done. You haven't left your mark upon the paper, but I guess you've left the sweat of your hand; if I sow a little French chalk over it, the chalk'll stick where your hand did, and blow off easily everywhere else. Say, come to lunch and I'll have you prints ready for you. I'd like anything to show you how it's done."

Congressional Directory Shows Work of Censor

WASHINGTON—The proclivities of new congressmen to advertise their past exploits and their future aspirations have been severely dealt with by the venal appointed by the joint committee on printing to edit the autobiographies submitted by statesmen for the new congressional directory.

One of the features of the new directory is the brevity of many of the biographies. Consecration refused in the government printing office several years ago when Representative Lindbergh of Minnesota sent in his biography thus: "Lindbergh, Charles A., Republican, Little Falls."

There are more than a dozen similar items in the directory that sound. One of them is the biography of Senator Lane of Oregon, who records himself as "Harry Lane, Democrat."

Senator Du Pont of Delaware takes up two thirds of a page reviewing his military and political careers. Senator Sanisbury of the same state takes up the other third of a page. Representative Baker of California also records himself as "Cyclone" Davis of Texas each take up more than two-thirds of a page.

Congressman Brittain of Chicago modestly reveals that he was the only Republican to defeat a sitting member for election to the Sixty-third congress.

Senator Thompson of Kansas, who predicted a glorious future for himself in the first directory printed after his election, has evidently changed his view, as the new issue contains nothing even related to the subject. Similar high personal mention which stood out in a former sketch of Representative Gillespie of Texas, is also missing.

Harry E. Hull, Republican, of Iowa, says he had only ten days to make his campaign as the successor of the late Mr. Pepper, and that he "made a run that was accepted by the whole country as proof of how the farmer would vote and of the weakness of the Progressive cause."

Representative Kahn of California is described as "a bachelor and a newspaper man." He also prospected for gold in 1879, but "did not make a strike." Mr. McLemore also says that he "had but little schooling because of his aversion to teachers."

David H. Kinchelos of Madisonville, Ky., proudly says he is married and "has one girl now seven and a half months old."

Uncle Sam Now Boosting the Goosefish as Food

THE bureau of fisheries is doing its best to exploit the commercial possibilities of the goosefish and has issued a bulletin upon this unprepossessing fish which gives its recipes by which it may be converted into a delicious and appetizing food.

So little is this fish valued by the fishermen of the Atlantic coast that every year they throw away about 15,000,000 pounds but it makes even a higher nutritive value than the famous New England codfish.

This angler, or monkfish, as it is also called, is a most unsightly monster. It has a very large head and mouth, entirely out of proportion to the rest of its body. It is abundant along the Atlantic coast down to the Carolinas, and on trawl lines and in nets with other fish there are gathered more than 400,000, weighing on an average of 25 pounds each, and giving, when cut into steaks, food that in tenderness and qualities is equal to sirloin steak. All of this splendid food is either thrown overboard or left on the shores to decay, and if it were sold even at the low cost price it would pay the fishermen for their trouble and more besides.

The appearance of the fish is against it. It averages a length of about three feet, with huge, depressed body, and the powerful jaws are provided with a double row of strong teeth.

The first spine of the dorsal fin is detached and inserted on the snout, and bears a tuft, which serves as a lure for its prey. Its loose, mottled brown skin is covered with numerous short pags, which are regular in size and good deal better than their respective critics of corresponding intelligence. His travels were mysteriously but evidently interwoven with business; he had an air of employing himself, and at the same time making money to pay for his employment. Wherever he went his hotel days were much the same all over Europe: many appointments, an abundant leisure. As, however, he never spoke of his business or where he was there were also those of the inner—and not always then—half his acquaintance who knew that he was a man his money, and the other half wondered how he spent his time. He had his more interests, which were many. Toye made no such secret, but it was quite impossible to deduce a main industry from the products of his best-headed speculations.

Criminology, for example, was an interest which Toye had inherited from taste in Hilton Toye, but a scientific hobby that appealed to his mental nature, and made it as hard work as with strange simplicities; gravely and dignified, yet addicted to the extreme style phraseology of his less enlightened countrymen, strangely sincere and yet always capable of some ingenious duplicity.

The aspect of a Blanche Magnair so such a soul needs no analysis. She had even through all complexities of the core such as it was or as she might make it. As yet she could only admire the character the man had shown, though it had upset her nerves and made her shudder and propound to her inside of two weeks, as he had admitted without compunction at the time. It had taken him, he said, about two minutes to make up his mind; but the following summer he had laid more deliberate siege, in accordance with some odd idea that she had let fall to soften her first refusal. The result had been the one only more explicit on both sides. She had denied him the least profession of love, and he had valued her that she had not heard the last of him by an unseen and never would till she married another man. This had increased her at the time, but a great deal less on subsequent reflection; and such was the position between that pair when Toye and Caralet landed in Ulfranda from the same steamer.

On this second day indeed, as Caralet over a late breakfast in Jermyn street, Toye sent in his card and was permitted to follow it, rather to his surprise. He found his man frantically divided between business and the morning paper, but in a heart-rending mood indicative of something far great best in yesterday's sunshine.

Valley of the Rio Negro

THOMAS PALKENER, in his book, speaks of the Rio Negro as the largest river of Patagonia. It is not only the largest river of Patagonia but, next to the La Plata and its two large tributaries, which do not, however, belong to Argentina alone, the largest of the Argentine Republic. Navigable, it drains a large triangular piece of territory lying between 36 and 42 degree of latitude south, with the base following the line of the watershed between Chile and Argentina, and the apex resting at the mouth of the river on the Atlantic ocean, between the fourth parallel of latitude. Palkener gives quite a list of names for this stream, of which the Indian name of Curu Leuvu has been retained to this day in the Spanish translation of Rio Negro.

It is not to be wondered at that the Spaniards neglected the inhospitable coast of southern Argentina in their early days of conquest and settlement. No one could be expected to settle down in an unattractive and desert country while there was an unlimited supply of more favorable lands closer at hand and to be had only for the asking or taking. It is only when the good land has become exhausted and when rainfronts and science make the desert more accessible and more easy of survival or remunerative development that the eyes of the colonist are turned toward the less attractive, says Walter Pischer in the Bulletin of the Pan-American Union.

The most convenient method of reaching the valley today is for the traveler to take the train which leaves Buenos Aires at 6:32 in the evening, arrive at Bahia Blanca at 8:15 the following morning. Leaving Bahia Blanca at 9:15 on one of the tri-weekly trains he reaches Neuquen at 10:35 that night; there he passes the remainder of the night, leaves Neuquen in the morning and gets to the end of the line on a mixed freight and passenger train at either 10:30 or 12:45 the following day, according to which of the two such trains he happens to have taken.

River in Dark and Swift.

We are more particularly concerned with the valley of the Rio Negro extending eastward one degree of longitude, or about sixty miles, from the junctive of the two rivers to the small station of Chichelcas. The valley is narrow here, not more than two miles from bluff to bluff, with the fertile irrigable land north of the river about half that width at its widest and narrowing down to almost nothing where the river approaches the Andes. The river is dark and silent, deep and rapid, stream a steamer is said to have once on as map, boats to make the down trip are abundant in the valley, while other species of game are common in the mountains not far away, in the larger part of the valley.

The inhabitants are as cosmopolitan a lot as is to be found almost anywhere. As in the greater part of Argentina, the Italian predominates on the frontier and the Scandinavian in the small towns; there are a few German colonies, and a number of Jews, with lemon juice and place a spoonful of mayonnaise on top. Serve very cold.

Date Charlotte.—Store a half pound of dates. To a cupful and a half of water add a tablespoonful of honey, the juice of an orange and a heaping tablespoonful of gelatin, add the dates, cook until the dates are soft, pour into a ring mold and set away in a cool place. Turn out and fill the center with sweetened whipped cream.

Date Loaf.—Sift three cupfuls of flour, a half teaspoonful of salt into a warm basin add a cupful of chopped dates and half a cupful of sultana raisins. Warm half a cupful of milk, add a half cupful of butter, cool and add one compressed yeast which has been softened in a little warm water. Pour into the flour, add two beaten eggs, knead lightly and allow to rise one hour. Knead again and put into a buttered tin. Allow it to rise for half an hour. Bake in a moderate oven one hour.

SHELL FISH AND OTHERS.

Oysters should be as carefully cooked as eggs, as they too contain a large per cent of albumen.

Oysters and Veal Chops—Dice one cupful of veal, chopped veal or chicken with one cupful of butter, pepper, celery salt, onion juice moistened with a thick white sauce; cool; parboil a pint of oysters; drain, and put on each oyster one chopped mixture. Dip in crumbs, egg and crumbs, and fry in deep fat.

Oyster Sausage.—Chop fine a half pound of cooked veal; add a cupful of oysters, also chopped and an eighth of a pound of suet; mix with three tablespoonfuls of broad crumbs moistened and seasoned with the oyster liquor; add the beaten yolks of two eggs, pepper, salt and mace to taste. Stir and make into croquettes, fry as usual.

Sea Turtle.—Take a five-pound can of turtle meat, cut in pieces; cook in a quarter of a cupful of butter with a bit of chopped onion; add a pint of cream, two hard-cooked eggs cut fine, the juice of a lemon, a tablespoonful of flour, mixed with a little cold milk. Season to taste with salt and paprika; add a small glass of grape jelly and serve on squares of toast with slices of lemon.

Shrimp Salad.—Cut in small bits one quart of boiled and two cans of shrimps, washed and picked in pieces; one dozen minced olives, one-half pound of a pound of grated cheese, one pint of mayonnaise, and one half pint of tuna. Line a salad bowl with the lettuce and mix the ingredients. Garnish with parsley and plain olives.

Fried Sardines With Hot Mayonnaise.—Dip the sardines in boiling water to remove skins and oil; sip in batter and fry in deep fat. This sauce is not a mayonnaise, although called so. Make a cupful of rich white sauce; add chopped capers, pickles, parsley and olives, a teaspoonful of lemon juice and a teaspoonful of a cupful of mayonnaise. Stir the dressing in when the sauce is hot but do not boil.

WINTER GOOD THINGS.

One need not fancy themselves days, because of the season, of meat. Good juicy steaks from grass eggs were only in the summer. With excuses easy transports and refrigerators, fresh and ripe, green peppers and fruits of all kinds from the southern states.

Good corn and is properly fattened.

Pork Salad—Take a cupful, as chicken salad. If carefully prepared Chop roast pork, fried pork, rather fine; to one cupful of meat add two cupfuls of celery and a half-cupful of onion, chopped very fine, also chopped, season with salt and pepper, use a teaspoonful of grated onion. Serve with boiled dressing on lettuce.

Goulash of Pork—Try a tablespoonful of suet in a stewpan, add a tablespoonful of fat until a golden brown, then add two cupfuls of water, salt, pepper and paprika to taste. Toss over the heat until the meat is hot, then add a cupful of hot stock, flour and milk to thicken. Cook five minutes, add minced potato, cover and cook 15 minutes. Then serve.

Escalloped Pork.—Put a layer of cold boiled pork, chopped fine in a baking dish, season with salt and pepper and minced onion, then a layer of crumbs; moisten with a little milk; add another layer of pork, finishing off with a layer of crumbs. Cover closely and bake ten minutes before uncover and brown.

Pork Rolls.—Cut cold roast pork in thin slices, season with salt, pepper, minced onion and parsley, roll up tightly and fasten with a wooden toothpick. Dredge each in flour and fry in a little butter. To the gravy add a little stock or milk, boil up once and pour over the rolls.

Pork Chops in Sour Milk.—Pork chops should be laid in the frying pan with a little lard, cook slowly on one side, turn and fill the center with sweetened whipped cream.

Date Loaf.—Sift three cupfuls of flour, a half-teaspoonful of salt into a warm basin add a cupful of chopped dates and half a cupful of sultana raisins. Warm half a cupful of milk, add a half-cupful of butter, cool and add one compressed yeast which has been softened in a little warm water. Pour into the flour, add two beaten eggs, knead lightly and allow to rise one hour. Knead again and put into a buttered tin. Allow it to rise for half an hour. Bake in a moderate oven one hour.

NO ROMANCE IN BUSINESS?

Treasurer of a Big Powder Company Is a Living Denial of the Statement.

A few years ago the man who was the dominant interest in a certain big powder company used to live in Dayton, O., on business, writes Edwin Lefevre in the Saturday Evening Post. He got on a trolley car there and gave the conductor a five-dollar bill. The conductor didn't happen to have the change, as he had just taken in another large bill from a passenger, so he told his fare please to wait until he could make change. The powder man arrived at his venue and set off, forgetting the change that was coming to him.

Several months afterward he again found himself in Dayton on business, and again took a trolley to reach his destination. Before the powder man could find the author of the conductor said with a pleasant smile, "You're not going to give me another five-dollar bill and forget your change, are you? It's been waiting for you."

The man was interested into conversation with the conductor, became fascinated by the young man and offered to give him a job with the powder company. The conductor accepted. He was young, married and had several children. Also he was a student of economics. Not long ago that he was ringing fares on a Dayton car; today he is treasurer of the powder company and has put through some of the big deals.

The man who owns the company had $22,000,000 in cash and securities. The directors had decided to appoint a committee to invest the money. The committee was instructed the committee with the job and bought large blocks of stocks in companies that they knew to be good material. Those large investment purchases were made from the floating supply of many of those stocks that it is easy to understand why relatively few people with whom you can cause fluctuations of thirty or forty points. Thus the committee bought stocks that cost in worth today $1,000,000. No romance, what?

Peculiarity of French Flag.

It is a matter of comment that the three strips of color that make up the French national flag are not equal in width. When the tricolor was first authorized, 1792, the positions and proportions of the three colors were to not stated, and such a variety of flags was seen that two years later the national assembly declared that the national standard should be formed of the three national colors in equal bands placed vertically, the hoist being blue, the middle white, and the fly red."

For years the flag was made in this way, but though the bands were equal, they never looked equal owing to an optical illusion, the blue apparently wider than the white, and the white wider than the red.

At last, after many experiments, it was officially decided that in every tricolor the blue should be thirty, white thirty-three and red thirty-seven.

The Optimist.

Gilman Hall, magazine writer of New York, said of the war:

"It doesn't pay to be optimistic in considering this horrid war. Yet, it's a pretty safe bet that it will end for a war like this.

"Optimists, anyway, come to a bad end. A preacher in a poorhouse was asked by another pauper how he came to be there.

"Oh, what an optimist the world loses in deceased! Once he failed in business, but thinked heaven he had his health. Another time he failed in health, but thinked heaven he had his business. Then he lost his wife and buried her, he failed in health and business simultaneously and said:

"Oh, well, what good is the one without the other?" — Washington Star.

Shark Pulls Man's Tooth.

The shark commonly known as the "hog shark" in another, or, if he is unskilled in a dentist; or, in other words, the big fish recently pulled a tooth in the leg of a man. A good naturalist was the man who underwent the experience of being bitten tooth whinked out of his face. Here's the way it happened:

He is F. F. Jameson of the Germania bank force. He was in a launch in Pensacola harbor. While fishing he placed the line in his mouth, holding it between his teeth. There was a sudden terrific tug as a shark grasped the bait and the tooth, exactly in the front upper jaw, was torn out.—Savannah Dispatch to New York Sun.

Both Smiled.

The editor sat at his desk. A candidate entered the room and handed him a manuscript. The editor smiled. The candidate smiled. They both smiled. However, their smiles emanated from entirely different sources. The candidate was smiling because he wanted, and really thought his manuscript was going to get into print. The editor was smiling because he knew there wasn't a chance in the world.—Pennsylvania Punch Bowl.

Information.

"I'm just beginning to understand the meaning of the window information."

"Can you find out what you want?"

"No. But it's a place where you can always go and inform somebody about what you happen to have on your mind."

No Longer Thrown Away.

Soap-boilers used to have great difficulty in getting rid of a thick, evil-smelling liquid which was the chief by-product of their industry. They ran it into streams and sewers. Frequently someone began collecting it and refining it. The result was glycerin as it is known today.

Lost Labor.

Convincing a man that you have the right in an argument does no good if he happens to be in a position to have the right of way.

IN THE LIMELIGHT

JAPAN'S LEADING FINANCIER

The "foremost business man of Japan," Baron Eiichi Shibusawa, to whom more than to any other his nation owes her commercial and industrial transformation, baker of Jingoes, friend of peace and of America, has been making another visit to the United States.

A stocky little man, broad-shouldered, round faced, few gray hairs at his large, well formed head, although he is only a trifle short of seventy-six years; small eyes, that twinkle in conversation; frequent smiles, revealing minus gold dentistry—such is the baron.

Forty-two years ago, when Japan was emerging from feudalism and irresponsible government into the world of light, Eiichi Shibusawa threw away his brace of swords, all privilege and high office to stand for honest business honesty. Holding a prominent office in the treasury under the mikado and government at Tokyo, he found that secret and medieval methods still prevailed in national finance. His soul became insurgent. In a bold move in 1872 he denounced the irregular and antiquated methods of bookkeeping and of handling the public money.

He founded the first national bank of Japan, established commercial training schools, organized the Tokyo chamber of commerce, and also aided houses and philanthropic institutions. He served his country as president of the chamber of commerce. The direct result of his thorough a day and night activity of over forty years, he has helped to make the business man and his calling respected and measurably ennobled.

In Japan he recreated the whole social situation. Today the merchant, manufacturer and lawyer hold the place they deserve.

JACOBUS, JUNK EXPERT

Ever hear of a junk expert? Up to the time that William Jacobus, the scrap metal expert, stepped into the limelight by showing how Uncle Sam could save millions on the scrap usually sold as "junk," very few people, if any, knew that there was a specialist on junk and become a metal expert.

In 1917 Mr. Jacobus, who probably knows more about the scrapping and junk business than any one else, went to the "powers that be" in Washington and placing his finger on a leak said: "Here's where millions of dollars go every year because nobody knows anything about the business of selling the government's junk to the best advantage."

At that time there was what was known as the junkmen's gentlemen's agreement. Simply explained, the agreement amounted to this: A clique of junkmen agreed that they would pay a certain price for the junk offered by the government at that period, the junkmen, as planned, got the junk at a low figure, and then resold it to other junkmen at a profit. Through Mr. Jacobus' instrumentality the saving of the navy department was conservatively put at ten million dollars. He rendered similar service to the lighthouse bureau and war department, and respectfully declined a position from Colonel Goethals to handle the scrap at the Panama canal. Only recently he showed the city of New York that it was doing about two hundred thousand dollars a year in its method of disposing of discarded material. He not only showed the city how to do it, but proved it by acting as the expert at a sale, which brought in about two hundred thousand dollars more per annum than was usually obtained for the same amount of junk.

DIAMONDS HIS TOYS

In a busy office on Broadway, New York, there sits, day by day, a man who plays with diamonds as a child with the radiant gems as a scientist might handle himself with some new theory, as a child might extract joy from the possession of an abnormal array of wonderful playthings. And he are playthings.

Thirty full cots of gems, worth $1,000,000, make up the glittering, dazzling bewildering treasure store. For the most part, they are hidden in the gloomy, chilly, steel cave of a neighboring vault. Twice a day they are brought out for the inspection of their master.

Each night he selects one set, and, bedecked with the scintillating jewels, he walks from his office. All sorts of things to pick up the incandescent rays of the brilliant white way and to dart them back, transformed into wonderous macro-hued, prismatic-tipped fractured vibrations, through the anthracite of the gloom. The man who thus plays with fire—the fire of first-water gems—is James Buchanan Brady, Broadway knows him as "Diamond Jim."

Diamond Jim goes about among his fellows with freedom. He knows that he is an institution and that any "rearing" guy among his local cronies would as soon think of stealing the arch from the statue of Liberty and would as soon think of stealing the lower from the "hocking" it as old bronze, or of taking Horace Greeley's bronze shoe from its park pedestal, as of dimming the luster of an essential part of New York's exterior decorative effect.

He is at every first-night performance. He is dancing with the latest favorite of fox trot the theater on the roof. He dances with the latest favorite of fox trot the theater on the roof. He is a member of the Lambs club, and he is a member of the Friars club, and he is a member of the Friars club, and he is a member of the Friars

O. E. Phelps and W. H. Carter, president of the S. & S. Carter company have signed the agreements whereby the Carter company will be re-organized and will manufacture the Phelps refrigerator show case which will have the Phelps system of refrigeration installed in it. The manufacture of these show cases has already begun, and by the first of March it is expected that the company will be working to its full extent. Additional workmen will be put on at the new factory which will be known as the Carter-Phelps Manufacturing company.

"Mr. Phelps has been manufacturing his show cases on the contract basis and on a small scale. The case has become so popular that it has become necessary to go into the manufacture of these on a larger scale. Mr. Phelps chose Keokuk because of the live travelling men who are 'plugging' for Keokuk, as he expressed it. His proposition was taken up by members of the U. C. F's from Keokuk. They brought the project to the attention of the industrial association. The association took the project before Mr. Carter, and on investigation found that the Phelps refrigerator show case lived up to every claim made for it, negotiations were immediately begun. This was a month ago. The articles were signed today."

ANOTHER STATE

MOVEMENT ON FOOT TO MAKE NORTHERN PENINSULA NEW COMMONWEALTH

Plans are being formulated for a campaign, to carve the forty-ninth state of the union out of the "upper peninsula" of Michigan, under the name "Superior." Mr. Anurews, editor of the Menominee Herald, spoke at the annual banquet of the Columbus Business Men's association and backed up his arguments by statistics, comparing the size and resources of the "upper peninsula" with those of various other states admitted to the union. He asserted that the assessed valuation of the district exceeds that of one of 11 states, which he named, and laid particular stress upon the fact that it is isolated, geographically, from the rest of the state.

THE EASTLAND INDICTMENTS

Six Michigan men under United States indictment on charges of negligence arising from the sinking of the steamer Eastland in the Chicago harbor July 24 were formerly arrested today by the United States Marshal Daniel Hanley and were brought into United States court in Grand Rapids (Saturday). They will appear before Judge Clarence W. Sessions Jan. 20 for preliminary examination. Each furnished bail in the sum of $5,000.

The men are: William H. Hull, of St. Joseph, George T. Arnold, of St. Ignace, superintendent and manager of the Chicago Steamship company, owners of the Eastland, and Reid and Schiff, U. S. local inspectors.

AN ISLAND MYSTERY

Marooned or What? Charlevoix Fisherman Deserted by Partners on Fox Island

Is William Duba, fisherman, dead or alive? This is a question that is haunting the people of this community, and the question cannot be answered until South Fox Island can be reached.

During the fall Duba bought the H. L. Brady outfit, which included the gasoline boat "Bed Devil." He was induced to take in as working partners Fred Siminow and George Fay, and the three have been fishing out of this port, with a base at North Fox Island.

About ten days ago, when the boat came here with fish, Duba was not on board, which naturally caused some comment. The explanation given by Siminow and Fay was that Duba refused to come and was left at the Island. Inasmuch as the outfit belonged to Duba it was thought very strange. After selling their share of the fish the two men left, town, and their whereabouts is unknown.

Three attempts have been made to reach the Island, but the boats have been driven back by storms. As we go to press another attempt is being made.

Duba came here last fall from Bellaire. He has a wife and children here.

VICTORY IN CRASP, ERRORS LOST ALL

Hamilton Admits That Mistakes Caused Dardanelles Failure.

BLAMES BRITISH OFFICERS.

Kitchener Failed to Send Reenforcements at Critical Time—Without Water, Unpacked by Artillery, Men Were Disorganized—Generals Fell Fighting in the Ranks.

General Ian Hamilton's report on the British operations on the Gallipoli peninsula tells the story of the fighting from the landing of May to the middle of October.

Probably no more important contribution to the history of the present war has yet been made. The report throws light upon the great landing at Anzac cove and sayla bay, Aug. 6, which takes on, the subject of strategy, as upon the military administration of the government, the operations regarding the combined action of the army and the navy.

The Suvla bay landing failed to accomplish its object, the report shows, partly because the forces consisted of untried troops under generals who had proved in the new warfare and partly through the failure of the water supply, which made it impossible for the lack of water made painful reading.

"On the 11 your message that Kitchener cabled asking me for an estimate of the number which would be required in the evacuation of the peninsula," says General Hamilton. "I replied in some anxiety that I would be able to do so on the following day. On the 13 I received a cable recalling me to London for the reason that the naval experts government decided from the distant opinion from a responsible commander upon the question of early evacuation."

Turks Make Grand Assault.

"The most striking passages of the document describe the ill fated landing at Suvla bay and Anzac to secure command of the heights on the middle of the peninsula and cut off the Turkish forces in the lower extremity, where the allied armies made their first landing.

"The Fifth Lancashire men were simply overwhelmed in their shallow trenches by sheer weight of numbers. Some the Worcester, who had come out to the open, were bayonetted and annihilated," declares the report.

"Still the Turks poured down the western slope of Chunuk Bair as if determined to gain everything they had due. But one corpse were over the crest they became exposed not only to the full blast of the guns, naval and military, but a battery of two New Zealand machine guns, which placed upon their crested ridge at close range, laid their barrels very red hot.

General Fight to Finish.

"Unhesitatingly our men plunged again into the struggles, in which generals fought in the ranks and men dropped their scientific weapons and caught one another by the throats.

"Toward this supreme struggle the absolute last two battalions from the general reserve were now pressed, but by 10 o'clock in the morning the effort of the enemy was spent. Soon their battered remnants began to trickle back, leaving a track of corpses behind them. By night, except for prisoners or wounded, no live Turk was left upon one side of the ridge.

"By evening the total casualties of General Birdwood's force had reached 12,000 and included a very large proportion of officers.

"The Warwicks and Worcesters had lost literally every single officer.

"The old German saying that no unit could stand the loss of more than 25 per cent has been completely disproved. The Thirteenth division and the Twenty-ninth brigade of the Tenth Irish division had lost more than twice that and in spite were game for as much more fighting as might be required.

"The grand coup had not come off. The narrow strip of Anzac and the round field gun range, but this was not the fault of General Birdwood or any of the officers or men under his command."

The Suvla bay expedition, which has been the subject of the greatest criticism, suffered various misfortunes. Although elaborate plans were worked out by the army staff with Vice Admiral de Robeck, commander of the naval expedition, the troops were landed in the darkness of night, and were unable to find their way to the rendezvous. Many of the officers were killed or wounded, and the men were disorganized.

In the middle of August General Hamilton estimates the Turks had 100,000 rifles to the British 10,000. The Turks had plenty of ammunition and "reserves, while the British divisions were drawn below their minimal strength."

General Hamilton asked for 50,000 fresh rifles, believing that with them fortified at once—he underlines "at once"—the issue could clear a passage for the fleet to Constantinople.

"It may be indeed how deep was my disappointment," he says, "when I learned the scantiest drafts of reinforcements and munitions could not be sent, the reason given being one which prevented me from further insistence."

Barnard Doings.

Mrs. Wm. Shapton is still quite ill, barely recovering.

Michael Garber returned Saturday from a two week's visit at Constantine.

A local report from Muskegon, visiting his uncle, Peter Block and family.

Miss Leana Stevens, of Phelps, has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Tony Clarke, the past week.

The many friends of the Fred Gorsell family will regret to hear of the removal to Charlevoix, this week.

The Ladies' Aid will have a quilting bee this week Wednesday for Mrs. Geo. Dougherty.

Robert Gregory continues to improve at the Petoskey hospital, and is able to be round slightly in bed. Mrs. Gregory spent Sunday at the hospital.

There will be a meeting of the S. S. Board on Friday of this week at the home of Wm. Shapton. It is expected and hoped that every officer and teacher will be present.

The epidemic of la grippe prevailed throughout the state—has not let Barnard alone in its clutches at Barnard, among the unfortunates are Mrs. John Clarke, and A. B. Clarke.

A new industry for our little burg—Mr. Carlos Himebaugh is operating a saw mill near Phelps, with Dan Kipp, Rapids as head sawyer and Hiram Starr as engineer, and is now ready for custom sawing.

What kind of a S. S. would our school be, if every member were just like me? Are my shortcomings looking after your part of the wall? We are after the 100 mark, now everybody pushing we will reach it. Are you boosting?

The twin babies recently born to Mr. and Mrs. Herman Himebaugh have passed away, one being buried Tuesday and one Saturday. Mr. and Mrs. Himebaugh have the sympathy of many friends in their bereavement.

The Ladies' Aid held their regular monthly meeting Wednesday, Jan. 5th, with Mrs. Peter Block. After enjoying a fine dinner the regular business was taken up. Owing to the illness of the president the annual election of officers was postponed. Mrs. Wm. Burns will entertain the society in February.

It surely was some supper—the game supper served by the Royal Oaks on Friday evening at the church, and the class have a neat little sum in their treasury. Some of the rabbits almost walked into a pie. One fine fellow drawing about the supper, and that Will Burns was a pretty busy man, waited outside Mr. Burns' bedroom window, on arising he noticed Mr. rabbit, securing his gun he raided the window and "bif bang" all was over, and Mrs. Burns still sleeping.

Worth Thinking About.

But if a man turned over a new leaf every time his wife wanted him to he would have but little time left in which to earn the price of her bonnets.

Novel Theatrical Scenery.

A method has been invented by a German artist for painting natural theatrical scenes on the same canvas, the pictures changing as the light thrown on them is changed.

County Normal Notes

All the members of the class returned from their vacation ready for work.

Catherine LaLonde has been doing some special work in the training room.

The class attended the annual school meeting last Thursday and enjoyed the talk given by Mr. Orswell, assistant state superintendent.

Miss Grace Megrigan, member of the class of 1906 and Miss Ethel Sanford of the class of 1910, visited the normal room last Friday and told the class about their schools.

Miss May L. Stewart visited the normal room Friday and gave a very interesting talk on standard schools.

STORIES THAT DO NOT MIX

Tales of Spooks and the Valuation of Real Estate Should Be Told on Separate Pages.

The ghost story ranks with the immortals. Science, education, a strong skeptical view of the supernatural, have been unable to banish it. It clings to us in and hangs on though all the winds of progress try to blow it out of existence.

A New York newspaper gives a first-page column to a ghost story. A fine old mansion in Connecticut is about to be torn down because the spooks and shades have rendered it untenable to the ordinary mortal. Until two years ago the house was occupied by an amiable and unexciting matron. She heard ghosts clanking their chains in the halls. But she never bothered her head about it. The swish of invisible crinolines did not disturb her. When cannon balls came rolling down the stairs she merely said "Dear me," and rolled over and went to sleep again. Only one thing made her peevish. There was a trap door in the kitchen and when the cook made apple pie, that door would rise slowly and the cook would depart suddenly. It was always a lot of trouble hunting for new cooks. The lady said all this spectral playfulness was nothing to her, because it was carried on by her ancestors, and they couldn't possibly do her harm. But she is gone and no one as courageous or indifferent has appeared on the premises. So the house has to come down.

Ghost stories are interesting reading. They will probably always be entertaining. But when they get mixed up with the real estate business an appeal ought to be made for an injunction.

THEIR DUTIES TO "SOCIETY"

Women Would Find It Hard to Answer Why They Assume Responsibilities of Position.

Everyone knows what "society" is, although to anyone who did not it would be difficult to explain. Mostly it is a thing to be laughed at and laughed at. With a power as strong as the church, or stronger, it has about us, impalpable, whimsical, almost irresistible. It may take all a woman has to give, and give little back; it may give everything it has to give, and demand little. Whether it is woman's duty, or her joy, has apparently not been decided. Whether those who give themselves to it most entirely do so in an abandonment of selfdulgence or in a spirit of high sacrifice, one cannot say. The inveterate habit, common to all people, of dressing up whatever they are doing in a cloak of morality, has in this case so confused all the phraseology of social rules that it is impossible to tell what is pleasure, and what is cruciffixion. Women dress, not because they like to look pretty, but because they "owe it" to their husbands, or their children, or to society. They make calls and give dinners, not because they like it, but because they feel themselves obliged to, and they are glad when it is over. They go to parties, not because they expect to have a good time—they profess to be bored by them—but because for various reasons it seems necessary so.—Atlantic Monthly.

The Rising Generation.

"I'm afraid that youngster of mine was born with the instincts of a rooter at heart." The graphophone must play and the music dance or he won't eat his oatmeal."

"Is it possible?"

"Yes; think of a mere infant insisting on cabaret features with his meals."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Horton's Bay—The marriage of Miss Avrah Ester Howe, third daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Philip Howe, of this township, to Earl Sosathen, of the same place, took place at the Evangelical parsonage at Horton's Bay, Rev. G. C. Heximer officiating. Archie Howe and Miss Eva White acted as attendants.

John C. Wright, of Harbor Springs, is rapidly making a name for himself in Michigan as the leading lecturer on the Indian. Monday evening he spoke before a large audience in Grand Rapids on the cause of that city devoted considerable space to praising his efforts there. Mr. Wright has spent many years securing the data which he makes the basis of his lectures until now he is without a doubt the best informed person on the Indian in Michigan. His lectures everywhere have proven not only interesting but very instructive.

Boyne Citizen: Harriet Kiser, age 15 years of Boyne City was the first victim of Pine Lake since the skating season opened. The boy skated into an air hole while playing with companions last Friday. The youth held on to the edge of the thin ice while his companions tried to reach him with planks and poles. Finally the ice broke in small pieces so he tried to raise himself high enough to reach the bank in about twenty feet of water. Chief Cadwell immediately sed for the grappling hooks and the body was recovered within a half hour. At that time no hopes were entertained for life. The boy was the son of W. H. Kiser, engineer at the iron furnace.

The Boyne City Chemical company, which made an eight per cent cut in wages September 1, 1914, because business was slack, has begun the new year by not only restoring the men's wages to the 100 per cent basis but has added an extra eight per cent on top of that. The additional amount is to continue until the company has refunded to the employees the difference between the regular and reduced scale of wage. The pay roll of the plant is about $6,000 per month and the sixteen per cent addition will distribute approximately $1,280 per month more. After the difference has been made up, the wages will be restored to the figure that prevailed before the cut. While some of the workingmen may have said "There is no soldier," none of them asked for time to consider the acceptance of the offer.

Lord Sandwich's Drum Room.

The eccentric Lord Sandwich had, according to his biographer, a strange passion for the thunder of big drums, for the gratification of which passion he had erected the entire side of one large music room in his mansion at Hinchinbrook to be covered with parchment, so that when it was struck with a massive stick it gave out a roar sufficient to terrorize any sensitive soul. Many who heard this drum once struck positively declined ever to enter the apartment again lest they should be given a second performance, says the St. Louis Republic.

PERE MARQUETTE

Talk Number One

FOR some time I have had it in mind to tell you frankly a few important facts about Michigan's greatest transportation agency, the Pere Marquette Railroad—facts gleaned from personal experience, not so much from the standpoint of a railroad man but as the Court's Officer in charge of the property.

"My idea is that a great many of the troubles of railroad companies are due to misunderstandings and lack of information about the problems of railroading, which might be very properly given fully and freely to their patrons.

"You will be interested, I am sure, in knowing about the origin and growth of the system; why it is indispensable to the further development of the state; how it became involved in financial trouble; the problems of the Receivers in straightening out its affairs, the progress they have made and what they hope to accomplish.

"I am going to give you the benefit of my study of the situation and tell you what, it seems to me, ought to be done about it, both by the railroad and by the people of the state, so that both the state and the Pere Marquette can properly perform their full duties to each other.

"These are matters of importance, I think. If you think so, watch for the next talk. In the meantime we will be very glad to give you service, and we hope we may have your support and patronage."

Operating Receiver,
Pere Marquette Railroad.

Night and Dawning

By H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright, 1916, by W. G. Chapman.)

"I don't know what to do with my best evenings," sighed Ronald Cray, leading out of the back window of his bachelor apartment and surveying the gloomy flats around him.

Two months before he had been summoned home from New Mexico, where his power dam had made him famous, to take charge of the engineering department of his company at headquarters. His salary was ample, he had wealth, he was only twenty-five, yet he had managed to make no acquaintances in the big city.

A free life in the West had made him different from the average city bred young man; he thought the metropolis stiff and its people devoid of interest.

Suddenly, as he leaned out, surveying the huge buildings and speculating how many thousand lives ran on in them, a light sprang into being in the building opposite, on the fifth floor, on a level with his. Behind a drawn shade he saw the silhouette of a man.

He was stooping over a table and as Cray watched, he saw the shadow of a woman behind him. Suddenly her hand plunged downward. The elongated object in it looked like a poniard. It struck the man in the side of his neck and he rolled over.

The woman stood looking at him for a moment; then, with a gesture of triumph, she flung the poniard out of the window, raising the shade a little. Cray heard a metallic tinkle in the court below. Then followed darkness.

He leaned out, astounded at what he had seen and hardly believing it real. How long he waited he did not know. Suddenly the bell rang.

He went out into the passage and saw standing outside the door, one of the most beautiful women whom he had ever met, she was twenty-three or four. Her eyes gleamed with fearless intensity, her hair was disheveled and her hands were red.

"Save me! Hide me! Help me!" she pleaded.

Cray did not hesitate an instant. He pulled her through the doorway and led her to the bathroom. He filled the basin and washed her hands, drying them on a towel afterward. Then he took her into his spare room.

"You're quite safe here," he said in a low voice. "Nobody will you come in. You can stay as long as you want to."

She crouched in a corner, glaring at him like a hunted beast. He bestirred, then he closed and bolted the window and withdrew, leaving the door open.

For half an hour he sat quiet, feeling that he would hear the bell sting, that she would try to plunge down into the court below. But barely a sound came from the room. When at last he returned she was lying on the floor, asleep.

He placed her on the couch and she did not awaken. Her sleep was of profound exhaustion. All night Cray sat up, waiting, sometimes he stole in to look at her, but she never stirred. It was not till the sun was well in that he heard her moving.

She came forward unsteadily and looked in at him as he sat by the window.

"Where am I?" she cried. "Who are you?"

Cray rose and took her by the hands. "I am a friend," he answered. "You are safe here—safe to come up to me."

She burst into hysterical sobbing. When at last he had quieted her the girl told Cray her story.

She had met a man in her home in Virginia, had married him and, when he had asked her to be his wife, her parents mistrusted him; she followed him secretly, to learn the truth. At all that had been said about him was true. He was a gambler, a swindler. She remembered those three months with loathing. Her horror of him had grown. He had deceived her with a mock ceremony, lied to her—at least she had thought so. He had a wife already.

She had written home, but her letters were returned unanswered. She had nowhere to turn, she was ignorant of any trade, and the man held her by his lying promises. He had almost got her to Mexico, he said, he loved her, for her sake he would reform, if only she would trust him.

She had waited for him the evening before; then there was a dreadful blank in her mind, and she had recovered to find herself standing over the body. And she had sped wildly for shelter.

Cray patted her hands. "You stay with me until the trouble blows over," he said. "I want a housekeeper. You will be quite safe here. I shall let it be known that you answered an advertisement. When all is ready I will help you to a new life. You trust me?"

She looked at him helplessly. "I am so tangled," she said. "I must trust you. I have nobody else."

"You will not regret it," said Cray. And he knew the girl was safe there. Nobody came to call at his little apartment.

The murder occupied two columns of his morning paper, but the only clue was that afforded by a negro janitor, who had seen a woman ascending the steps a few minutes before the tragedy. And he stated that her hair was fair. The unknown woman's was ebony dark. Cray felt safe.

The poniard was found, but gave no clue. And gradually the interest waned. Nobody knew the murderous man, who had very good reasons for disguising his identity.

As the days passed Helen Ware came to trust Cray absolutely. She cooked for him, mended his clothes, resolutely refused to take the money he pressed upon her. "I can never forget what I owe you," she would say. Her sometimes there would be spells of weeping. "I did not mean to kill him," the girl would moan. "I do not remember anything, except sitting at home waiting for my father's letters of court; then I heard him come in and went to him—and I was standing over him with the dagger in my hands."

"You don't recall the dagger?"

"Yes. It was a relic of his, some friend from a savage country had given it to him. I must have snatched it from the wall and stabbed him."

As the weeks turned into months Cray found himself torn between two impulses. He wanted to let the girl go to some scene where she would be able to take up her life anew and develop drive that he loved her. Her helplessness, her charm, the bond between them had created an intimacy that was infinitely sweet. He had been offered a new position in the West. One night he took his courage in his hands and asked her to be his wife and go with him, where all memory of the past would be forgotten.

He knew by her looks that she loved him. But she would not.

"It is your pity for me, Ronald, not love," she said, sighing. "I love you, but I can never be your wife, so long as this curse of blood lies on me."

"You acted rightly," he cried. "No jury would have convicted you. Helen, dearest, forget it and come with me."

"I cannot," she answered sadly. "I must leave you, and you must forget!"

But on the next day something happened which drove all thoughts of parting from their heads. The wife of the murdered man was arrested charged with the crime.

It was known that she had been in the city that day. She had denied seeing him; the negro janitor identified her as the woman he had seen mounting the apartment house. And Ronald and Helen watched the unfolding of the grim web with dismay.

On the evening before the last day Helen spoke to Ronald about what lay uppermost in her mind.

"I cannot let that woman be convicted," she said. "I must go down to the court and offer my confession."

Ronald could not dissuade her. He knew that it was the only possible thing.

And all day they sat in the dreary courtroom listening to the interminably long summing up. The jury had at last retired. Ronald had persuaded Helen not to speak unless the verdict was "guilty."

It was hours before the jury returned. A murmur spread through the courtroom. The face of the foreman was deadly white. He trembled and looked away from the prisoner's straining eyes. There could be no doubt what the verdict was.

Suddenly Helen sprang to her feet. Ronald rose and held his arm about her. She faced the prisoner and stretched out her hand.

But before a word could leave her lips she was lifted bodily back stricken and received, clutching at the air.

"Yes, I am guilty," she cried. "He tried to me, deceived me. I learned that he was supporting another woman, who was passing as his wife. I dogged him to his home. I entered after him. I saw him in the hallway and over his head a dagger hung. It seemed placed there for me. I struck him—and then the other woman came—and she stands there!"

And she collapsed unconscious upon the floor.

Helen fell into Ronald's arms.

"It is true! It is true!" she cried. "I remember everything!"

The verdict of "manslaughter" was further eased by a mercifully light sentence and with the disorder in their marriage removed, Ronald and Helen went West, where they started upon their new life together.

Fairy Lightness in Party Frocks

Party frocks for the young maid could not symbolize more clearly youth and gayety and irresponsibility than they have this season. The thinness and most variety of materials have divided honors with lace in point of favor for making them. And everywhere silver and gold-dressed laces lend sparkle to the general radiance of white and light colors in the sheerest materials.

One of the prettiest is made of white net and venice lace. A fine quality of voile might be used instead of the net, with good effect. Two-inch tucks, with spaces of equal width between, are bonnifitched in the material, covering all the surface. The skirt is short and round and the bodice is cut in the surplice fashion, with the tucks in both running around the figure. There is a crushed girdle of soft white satin ribbon about the waist. Very short sleeves that hardly amount to more than a cap over the arms are finished with a frill of lace which extends only half way round them.

Over this dress a long straight hanging and sleeveless coat is worn, made of venetian lace. Bows of satin ribbon with floating ends are caught to the coat at the shoulders. They are of narrow ribbon, matching the girdle in color. Black velvet ribbon is used for them and for the girdle if a touch of dignity is needed to relate this gown to an older wearer.

In the party gown pictured above, silver-thread lace edges the underskirt of thin crepe or satin. A wide overdress of chiffon is edged with a satin covered cord at the bottom. Chiffon roses decorate the bodice and are repeated in a wreath in the hair. This is one of those very dainty frocks whose usefulness begins and ends with evening dress. The gown previously described may be worn both for afternoon and evening.

In January the new "lingerie" gowns will appear for the use of those who journey South. They are in the making and evince with the keenest interest, for they are the most adaptable and refined of dainty things. Not there will not disparage the party frocks of tulle and lace, given over to silkiness and sparkle which make a grace of being gay.

Some Pretty Ribbon Things

There is actually no part of the apparel of women, from head to feet, in which ribbons are not playing a prominent part this season. The parlor saint of weaving, or the goddess of the loom, appears to have turned special attention to the fostering of this particular article of adornment. The result is that the beauty of ribbons has compelled attention and inspired their universal use. They crown the head and clothe the feet and touch up all the belongings of womanhood.

Just a few of the pretty things that have kept the ribbon business brisk are shown in the picture given above. These include a pair of boudoir slippers with heels, and a pair without them, a pair of gaiters with small buttons and buttonhole loops and a ribbon bag.

The last is suited to many purposes, but is found chiefly useful for carrying their lives, if deprived of light. The sensitive plant is a popular example of "curves." A tap on its stem is sufficient to cause it instantly to wilt, the leaves folding inward and stiffened. Concerning the remarkable sensitiveness of plants to light Professor Gasong says: "Evidently some such structures advance pretty far in the direction of the special sense organs of animals, such as eyes."

Statistics as to Twins.

Take 900 average babies. There will be one pair of twins among them. This proportion holds true in the United States and England. In Italy or Israel the proportion would be much less. For some reason that nobody knows, infants in duplicate are not nearly so common in warm latitudes as in cold countries. Relatively, the population, twice come into the world in Russia three times as often as in Spain.

Dress Luxuries.

Elegance has superseded the simplicity of the last few years, and is the chief herald of the return of the luxurious in dress is the ostrich plume, so strangely and unexpectedly barred by the world's greatest designers of clothes for some time past. Ostrich "fancies," tips and plumes are all in order. True, the plumes are not all of mammoth proportions, nor are all tips promise to be worn by really high society women, unless pillows should unexpectedly enter millinerydom into play and pretty that it is hard to believe their intention to be useful in serious.

Ready-made soies are bought for making the ribbon slippers, and they are covered on the inside with plain satin ribbon. Flowered and brocaded patterns lined with the plain satin ribbon are used for the upper part. This is cut in the proper shape and sewed by hand to the soles. A very narrow ribbon quilling usually finishes the edges of these gaily attractive slippers.

The gaiters are made by shirring narrow satin ribbon (usually in two colors) over rat elastic. Bows and rosettes finish them and the addition of tiny sachets is a new touch.

THE SANDMAN TELLS A STORY

By Mrs. F. A. WALKER

THE MAGIC KETTLE.

Once upon a time a little girl lived with a wicked old uncle. Her father and mother were dead. She was a very good little girl and did not complain, but one day when she did not have any breakfast or dinner she went into a grove not far from the house and cried.

Presently she saw an iron kettle walking toward her, and its short legs moved so quer ously, along the ground she laughed.

There was a spoon in the kettle, and it made a clatter as the kettle walked along. It stopped in front of her. "Don't cry, little girl," it said. "Dry your eyes and do as I tell you. Then the kettle jumped up and hung by its handle on a bush. "Now get some water from the well," it said, "and pour it into me. Then go to the end of the path and take three steps forward and four to the right. There you will find some potatoes under a bush. From there take five steps to the left and you will find a basket of meat and onions. Bring it here."

The little girl did as the kettle told her, and when she had brought them the kettle said, "Put them in the kettle and then put some leaves and dry sticks under me, clap your hands three times over and say,

Fire, fire, brightly burn,
Cook my dinner to a turn."

So the little girl obeyed and soon had a nice hot soup. "Look behind the rock," said the kettle, "and you will find a bowl and spoon. After this when you are hungry come here and clap your hands three times and say:

Kettle, kettle, come to me,
So I shall not hungry be."

One day the wicked old uncle noticed that the little girl was growing fat, and as he had given her very little to eat, he wondered where she got her food, and he watched her. He heard her call the kettle and build the fire and then find the food. The next day he locked her in the house and went to the grove himself. First he called:

"Kettle, kettle, come to me,
So I shall not hungry be."

Then he found the meat and vegetables and made the bed in the fire, clapping his hands and saying:

"Fire, fire, brightly burn,
Cook my dinner to a turn."

But when he stirred the soup it flew up and burned him, and then the kettle turned over and spilled the soup and put out the fire.

The burns pained him and he was very angry and took a stick and ran to the house. He unlocked the door. "Come out here!" he said to the little girl. "You made the kettle burn me; now I will whip you."

Just as he lifted his stick a fairy appeared and touched him with her hand, and he became an iron tea-kettle one branch, which looked like a stick lifted in a hand. "Now," said the fairy, "you can be happy."

The kettle came running along and went into the house. "You will always have plenty to eat," said the fairy. "If you have the magic kettle and you know the magic secret of building a fire.

The little girl lived alone and gave food to all who stopped at her door, but the tree always made her feel sad and she wished it was not there.

One morning the tree was gone and in its place was a big document tree and under it sat an old man with a staff in his hand.

"Will you please give me a cup of water?" he asked. The little girl saw him the water and also a nice break-fast. "Stay here and rest," she said when he started to go.

"No," said the old man, "I must walk on! I have a long journey before me. I must walk until I find the river of goodness. I dreamed it in my room and now I must walk back and bathe in it before I can rest."

The little girl watched him as he walked away and wondered if the fairy had changed the old man into the old man who was looking for the river of kindness.

Art and Doll Painting.

The latest work for the woman art student with commercial instincts is doll painting. Several girls from the Slade and other schools who used to earn fair money in hand-painted work for big publishers are making much larger sums now by painting eyes, eyebrows, cheeks and lips on little collapsible faces. They get the masks from London doll manufacturers and are paid so much—it is not very much—for a thousand, but as it only takes seven ticks of a practised brush to make a quite expressive face, they can finish about 1,500 heads in a day, and that is worth more than 4d.—Manchester Guardian

WHO WAS ROBINSON CRUSOE?

Not Much Known of Alexander Selkirk, Born in Largo, Scotland—Was Extraordinary Man.

One is sometimes tempted to parody Stevinson's famous words, and ask: "What do they know of Crusoe, who only Crusoe know?" For it is a sad fact that, apart from a hazy notion that the original of this world famous character was discovered on an island under Selkirk, little or nothing is known of a most extraordinary man. London Answers states.

Selkirk was born in the little Fife, shire village of Largo, in 1676, and from almost his earliest days the unconventional adventurous spirit of the boy brought forth the wrath of his neighbors.

When he was about eighteen he decided that he would go to sea and, having refused utterly to follow his father's trade of shoemaking, he quit his native village. Two years later we find him (at his own request) being marooned on a lonely island after a violent quarrel with the captain of the ship on which he was making his second voyage.

For four years and four months he remained there, but finally turned up again at Largo, while his parents were at church. So to church went Alexander, and seated himself near where he had his father and mother. The good folk, on turning round and recognizing her son, caused the service to be interrupted by her cries of astonishment.

While at home, Selkirk fell in love with and married a girl named Fair, who lived with his parents. After a very short while they both disappeared from Largo.

Nothing more was heard of them until one day, years later, a young woman arrived in Largo, saying she was Alexander Selkirk's second wife, and had come to claim his belongings.

She proved that Selkirk's first had died some years previously and that now Alexander himself had also passed away on the upper part, ship Weymouth, on which he was a lieutenant.

PUPILS LEARN POULTRY CARE

In Schools of Washington State Children Also Keep Books and Take Care of Livestock.

School children in King county are putting all sorts of new kinks into their old fashioned curriculum, to their own enjoyment and profit and with the connivance and approval of the King County Farm-Teacher Association, the Seattle Post-Intelligencer says.

These new aspects of education were dealt with at the seminannual meeting of the association.

The pupils of the Ham district school, so Miss Vera Rimagn, their principal, told the audience, are learning how to manage automobile, poultry and dairy accounting.

"Our pure-bred white Leghorns are the pride of the district. Every pupil in charge every one of them interest at ten per cent, because we can get ten per cent on the money in our district. There is no depreciation on a chicken that I know of, so we don't charge any interest on the chickens. We use one with the food it eats and the value of the eggs it lays, and credit it with the value of the chicks it hatches and the tips it gives turkeys, ducks, geese, etc., and sell them to you city folks by parcel post. This is a cut rate for the pure-bred stock.

"The members of the Ham School club have drawn the plans and made specifications for the equipment of the school's poultry shed, and will install manual training and domestic science equipment, doing the work of installation themselves. They did all the work connected with a school ex hibition at which they raised $15 to ward the expense of these things. I sincerely hope the value of these school clubs, both to the children and the rural schools, will be appreciated, so that there may be many of them. The whole secret lies in letting the children do the work themselves."

Quite similar to the enterprise method of taking care of a real live baby is part of the course of the Foster high school, according to Miss E. M. Gullstine, teacher of domestic science. It was a natural development from the needs of the community and the tendency of modern education, she said.

The School Pig.

In a county in Texas the farm demonstrator—the county official whose business it is to show farmers how to get the best returns for their working capital—has a school pig. This is a pig. The children are to have the care of the animal, feeding it with scraps from their lunches. At the end of nine months the pigs are to be weighed and the school whose pig shows the greatest gain in weight is to have a cash prize that the children may expend as they choose.

FROM ONE YEAR'S CROP HE PAID FOR HIS LAND IN WESTERN CANADA

Remarkable as are the reports of the yields of wheat in Western Canada, the marketing of which is now under way, they are none the more interesting than are those that are vouched for as to the value of this grain crop to the farmers of that country.

Some months ago the Department of Interior, at Ottawa, Canada, wrote to those in the United States who were owners of land in Western Canada that was not producing, advising that it was purchased crop. The high prices of grain and their probable continuance for some years should make it advisable for the owners of the produce of the farm commanded good figures, and the opportunity to feed the world was great, while the profits were simply alarming. The Department suggested that money could be made out of the idle lands. Many could produce enough wheat from 25 to 45 bushels of wheat per acre. A number took advantage of the suggestion. One of these was an Illinois farmer. He owned a large farm near Calgary, Alberta, Canada. He decided to put one thousand acres of it under wheat. His own story, written to Mr. C. J. Broughton, Canadian Government Agent at Chicago, is interesting.

"I had 1,000 acres in wheat near Calgary, Alberta, Canada, yielding 44,000 bushels, being an average of 34 bushels to the acre. Last Spring I sold 20,000 bushels at $1.11 per bushel of land for $9,000, or $37.50 per acre. Now, I ask you if there is any other place where land can be bought and sold, and have the crop harvested, drawn to the market, and put in stock or stock.

"As a first payment I was to take all the crop raised. When he threshed he had 3,300 bushels of wheat, which is worth $3,300. I paid for wheat, thereby paying for all the land that was in wheat and more, then the balance of the crop, 20 acres at $40 per bushel, in wheat he could have paid for the land and money left."

That is a story that will need no comment at this time, when no matter which way you turn, you learn of farmers who had actually yields than these.

G. E. Davidson of Manitou, Manitoba, on the area of breaking and 14 acres of older land, he got 2,186 bushels of wheat, or 43 bushels per acre.

Walter Tukner of Darlingford, Manitoba, had 3,514 bushels of a 60 acre field, or over 58½ bushels per acre. Many other yields are but from one district, and when it is known that from almost any district in a grain belt of 10,000 square miles, yields which not as large generally as these quoted, but in many cases as good, is it any wonder that Canada is holding its head high in the air in its conquering career as the high wheat yielder of the continent? When it is pointed out that there are millions of acres of the same quality of land that has produced these yields, yet unbroken, and may be had for filing upon them as a homestead, or in some cases may be purchased at from $12 to $30 an acre from railway companies or private land companies, it is felt that the opportunity to take part in this marvelous production should be taken advantage of by those living on land much higher in price, and yielding infinitely less.—Advertisement.

The Fitting Hour.

"Mary!"

Father's voice rolled down the stairs and into the dim and silent parlor.

"Yes, papa, dear."

"Ask that young man if he has the time."

A moment of silence.

"Then ask him what is the time."

"He says it is 11:45, papa."

"Then ask him if he doesn't think it about bedtime."

Another moment of silence.

"He says, papa," the silvery voice announced imperiously, "he says that he really goes to the office on, but it seems to him that it is a matter of personal preference merely, and that if he were in your place he would go now if he felt sleepy."—Harper's Bazar.

Holland Fish Kitchens.

Fish kitchens are the latest concern of the Dutch government, which, to promote the consumption of fish and encourage the native fishing industries, is establishing public kitchens, where fried fish is sold at very low prices. Public demonstrators have been appointed to teach the women how to cook fish. Between June and July the government sold 1,000,000 pounds of cooked fish.

STORIES from the BIG CITIES

Semiannual House Cleaning of Lobby Squatters

NEW YORK.—They held their early winter house cleaning at the Waldorf-Astoria the other day, and a particularly good time was had by House Detective Joe Smith. Twice a year the Waldorf-Astoria gives a house cleaning to its lobby squatters, and early winter is becomes necessary for George C. Boldt to remind unscrubbers that the Waldorf does not provide nice big leather chairs exclusively for the comfort of persons with designs upon the cash of respectable beings; that Peacock alley is decidedly more than a cleaning house for house artists, and that while the Waldorf is always hospitable it exists under the privilege of choosing its company.

It was all accomplished smoothly and quietly, with no scandal or uproar. Perhaps some of the patrons of the hall observed Mr. Smith about the middle of the afternoon gently ease down the corridor that leads to the men's safe and bar Baron Heinrich Schmidt (at least that is what the individual calls himself) and crowd the baron through the revolving door giving upon Astor court. Perhaps some lookers-on heard the baron's high indignation drown the mutter and hum of taxi traffic, for the baron threatened Mr. Smith with the vengeance of the kaiser and promised personally to commend the firing squad that would some day back Mr. Smith up against a wall.

More than half the men who were compelled to leave have pretended to be war brokers anxious to make big deals with manufacturers stopping at the hotel. Several of them displayed papers purported to be credentials from England or France or Russia, documents that were obviously forged. Their method was to make lavish promises of contracts and lead up to this topic, or how quickly large fortunes were made in these days, if one were on the inside of things, and then offer to swing a big contract for war supplies or munitions.

Others of the evicted ones were just cheap grafters, leading about in the hope that something would come of it. Some of them were Mr. Smith's old friends, nimble-minded and nimbled-fingered, whose trade has been ruined by the war and the consequent interruption of steamer traffic. And all of them were well dressed.

His Many Weapons Didn't Daunt Chicago Robbers

CHICAGO.—When Francis Emanuel Wettberg, aged pickpocket, tramped into Chicago the other night he looked like the ex-sergeant of preparedness or the Spirit of '76 with modern improvements. Mr. Wettberg was got up similar to a shipment of munitions for the allies. As an axe and a knife bayonet were fastened to his belt, a repeating carbine was over his shoulder, and a full cartridge belt crossed his breast.

The true situation could not have been apparent to three young men who stood at Chicago and Milton avenues, for there is a sparse sprinkling of lights in that neighborhood. They probably thought Mr. Wettberg, fresh from Winnipeg, Manitoba, that went 53 bushels per acre.

One of the most remarkable yields in this old settled portion of Manitoba was that of P. Schaff of Manitoba, who threshed from 15 acres the phenomenal yield of 78 bushels per acre.

These reports are but from one district, and when it is known that from almost any district in a grain belt of 10,000 square miles, yields which not as large generally as these quoted, but in many cases as good, is it any wonder that Canada is holding its head high in the air in its conquering career as the high wheat yielder of the continent? Abraham's Supreme Trial

By REV. B. SUTCLIFFE
American Superintendent of Mem. Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.

TEXT—God did tempt Abraham. Gen. 22:1.

God cannot be tempted with evil, and neither does he tempt any man to do evil. Yet God tries his own from time to time to strengthen their faith and so give them more of himself and lead them deeper and richer spiritual experience. He expressly says in the book of James, "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life." Abraham had been tried by the Lord many times, but this last supreme trial has characteristics which are common to many Christians' experience.

Unexpected.

It is said that "after those things God did try Abraham." After a life journey of nearly one hundred and twenty-five years. After all the experiences which were packed into his life. After the birth and coming to age of the promised son. At a time when it would seem as though the life was completed and only needing the final touch of heaven's glory away from the scene around him. He may have felt that now he could rest in the land his old age and, like Job, "die in his nest." But there never is perfection in this life and there never is a resting place in never done. Today's goal is but the starting point for tomorrow's race. Many of the Lord's people come to a time when they feel as though they have fulfilled their mission and have done their work. They have come over rough paths and hard ways. Trying experiences have been had, but it seems that these are all in the past and now, having passed them, they think that now they have an end of the test, trings and they had come to rest. But God's way is always a harder test than any before. It comes all unexpected. Or they think they have conquered some part of the old nature and need not watch it longer. Then one day there comes the fierce attack, unlooked for and unexpected. But blessed is the man that endureth the unexpected temptation.

Unexplained.

As far as the record goes, the Lord gave Abraham no word of explanation concerning the offering of Isaac. God simply told him to take his son whom he loved and offer him a burnt offering. Abraham was human, like ourselves, so we can readily believe that into his mind, as so often into our own, there sprang the question, Why? God's desire to know so much of the Lord's desires before we are ready to obey him. What a mark of unconscious humility it is when we try to inquire as to why God does this or that in his dealings with us. He applies the test and then, before we meet it, we want to know the "why" for it. We show so much distrust when hanging back from doing as he says because we do not understand. But God's trust is not all explained. He seldom lets us know why, for if we knew it we would lose the opportunity for faith to operate.

Unreasonable.

God has promised Abraham that in Isaac should his seed be called. Isaac was the heir of the promises. Through the years of Isaac's youth Abraham knew that nothing could possibly take away Isaac's life. In Isaac was centered the hopes of a great multitude. If anything happened to him, therefore, the promise of God would be of none effect. We can imagine Abraham saying, when sickness or accident threatened the life of his boy, that it was impossible for him to die—he is God-promised, God-born, God-sustained, God-fulfilled! How unreasonable then it seemed for God to tell him to take Isaac and slay him. Would he not be tempted to say, "How then will the promise be kept?" Would not the temptation be to think that either God had forgotten his word or he was making a mistake in his dealings with Abraham and misunderstood the message? How often we are tempted to question God's wisdom, goodness of God's actions. But here again, if we understand all that God was doing, the walk by faith would be changed to sight. God wants not reasons but believers. And blessed is the man who endureth temptation even when it seems unreasonable.

And Abraham met this test with supreme faith. The book of Hebrews declares it was by faith he offered. His obedience was prompt, unquestioning, unremitting, deliberate. He did not hesitate to obey. There was no hesitation into the room to offer the sacrifice. He knew such a thing would seem. He did not wait to see how God would fulfill his promise, but by faith he offered up Isaac, of whom it was said, that in Isaac shall thy seed be called." The secret of such faith leading to such obedience is found in the fact that he knew God and the victory won. God said to Abraham, "Lay not thine hand upon the lad, for now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son from me." The fear of God is the secret of obedience. Faith receives the promise and fear obeys the precepts.

Blood Donating an Odd Profession in New York

NEW YORK.—Many are the strange professions practiced in New York, but the weirdest of them all, perhaps, is the one which has become known as "blood donating." Seven years ago it was unheard of, but now, to the mean squeeze, it is quite commonplace. Blood transfusion has come into existence, and people sell their blood as an industry have systematized and organized their business so that it supports them in comfortable living. A well-known doctor, who was first to transfuse blood, and who certainly there are professional donors. Some of them have undergone over 100 times. They pride themselves on their record. As to the professionals, they are few and the field is their monopoly. Hall an hour later Mr. Wettberg fumed into the room to offer the sacrifice. It is quite commonplace. HARD LUCK HITS BUSY BURGLAR Illustrates Conditions Under Which Leading Second-Story Workers Are Striving.

SOFT FOR THE POLICE

After Getting Away With Suitcase in Taxicab Burglar Checks It at Hotel Where Owner is Stopping.

New York.—The way luck is breaking against conscientious union burglars these days they might just as well go to work or else insist upon letting the police department when they arrange an evening of diverting crime.

As evidence of the perfectly abominable conditions under which some of our leading second story workers are striving just beaten to a standstill fate handed to Edward Winkler, thirty-seven years old, who says he is a salesman.

According to the rare which the police says he spun for them Winkler possessed himself of a suitcase containing $200 worth of jewelry, some French lingerie and a new hat belonging to Mrs. Mabel Connors. He entered Mrs. Connors' apartments according to the police, by means of a key known in police parlance as "a skeleton."

Suitcase Disappears.

Mr. William V. Dine of Bridgeport, Conn. newly arrived in New York, on his way to the Hermitage, hailed a passing taxicab in which he was riding in front of the Astoria restaurant in 34th avenue near Forty-second street. While he was inside his suitcase disappeared, and he reported the matter to the police and breathed the affair to the Hermitage hotel clerk.

Mr. Dine, passing the Hermitage hotel check room on his way to break fast, reported a familiar looking suitcase. It was his. He identified it, and under the eye of the manager opened it. Previously he had told the manager about having a silver mounted tooth brushes and some new shirts in that missing grip. So it was natural that when he opened it and found that he was looking into some pale blue lingerie there were some embers of amusement behind him.

Remains Hard Luck.

Once more the police were notified, and Detectives O'Connell and McLaughlin took up their pose near the check room, waiting for the man who checked the grip to put in an appearance. Winkler entered. He was arrested and taken to Second branch detective bureau.

"Sir," he asked, "how many hotels are there in New York?"

"About two thousand or more," said O'Connell.

After calling on profanity to his hit street deputy, Winkler concluded.

"And to think I picked out the one that I was staying at to check his grip!"

Mrs. Connors identified her possessions, but missed the hat and some silk stockings.

Winkler, now to my sweetheart," Winkler explained.

NECK BROKEN IN INITIATION

Candidate Tossed in Blanket by Lodge Members is Fatally Injured.

Dithots, Pa.—Thomas Lyon Reed, twenty-one, is dead at his home at Olanta, Clearfield county, as a result of an accident sustained while being initiated into the mysteries of a secret order.

Reed, a strapping six-footer, was the last of nine candidates to be initiated into a side degree of the order, and when it came his time to take the degree was required to walk, blindfolded, on a narrow plank at the end of which he was required to jump off into a blanket held by the members of the order, after which he was tossed into the air several times.

In falling into the blanket young Reed, after being tossed the third time, struck on his head and broke his neck. He was taken at once to his home where he died two days later. A coroner's jury gave a verdict of accidental death and exonerated the members of the order.

Too Big For Cell.

St. Joseph, Mo.—The criminal court here was compelled to take judicial cognizance of a physical peculiarity of Mrs Clara Cochran. She was fined $50 and costs for selling liquor and was unable to pay.

Her attorney presented her incarceration in jail and she was given time in which to raise the money.

BROTHER WASN'T REALLY TIGHTWAD

He Didn't Know That Man He Found Sleeping on Lawn Was Brother John.

Oklahoma City, Okla.—John McElwain came from California to visit his brother, Thomas, whom he had not seen for 20 years. Having arrived in the night, he had his brother's house pointed out to him, but did not awaken the family.

John's accustomed to sleeping out of doors, so he lay down outside on the soft bermuda grass, placed his hand on his handbag and slept there all night. He preferred it to a bed in the house.

Tom came out in the morning and saw his brother asleep on the lawn. He did not recognize him, although he knew his brother was coming from California soon.

"What are you doing here?" he demanded, not recognizing his brother.

"You must be a tightwad to object to a man sleeping on your grass," John retorted.

"That's all right," said Tom, "but you'd better go on your way now."

John refused to go and was headed over to a policeman. Not until after they had reached the police station did he make himself known. Then Tom bought two boxes of cigars for the police officers to quiet their laughter and said he would buy every man a drink if they had not already blowed him to one.

John will hereafter have his choice of a bed in the house or on the sleeping porch.

HUFF FOOLS THE THIEVES

California Farmer Incidentally Provides Some Food for His Hogs.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Martin V. Huff, who raises hogs watermelons and alfalfa near Compton on the edge of Burbank, is the author of a device for foiling night melon thieves or golf course pirates.

He owns a herd of healthy and hungry swine, and for their sustenance raises each year a large patch of what are called "watermelons," which look exactly like long, green watermelons, but are absolutely inedible by human beings.

Suffering in the past from watermelon thieves, Mr. Huff this year planted his pie melons just inside the fence along the road. Every night scores of these deceptive melons are stolen by motorists making a detour from the San Fernando boulevard for the purpose—evidently directed to the "the melons patch" by others previously stung.

In the morning Mr. Huff takes a wagon and collects from the roadside ditches enough of the melons to fill his home several hundred pounds of choice hog food nicely broken up for the use of his swine.

WIFE HAS RIGHT TO TANGO

Justice Bostwick Assails Charge Against Husband Who Boxed Wife's Ears.

Peekskill, N. Y.—Police Justice C. E. The Frame of Mount Kisco, now been settled a dispute between Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Osborne of Mohegan concerning whether she has a right to tango despite his objection. The justice ruled that she has.

Mr. Osborne rebuked his wife for going to a dance in Mount Kisco. When she insisted tangoing was one of a wife's privileges, she alleges, he cuffed her ears, she summoned him to court and asked the justice if she hadn't a right to tango if she wished. Wanting her point, she laid a complaint of assault against her husband.

Mr. Osborne was found guilty and placed upon probation or six months. Mrs. Osborne chuckled, doubtless as she left court that she will dance now

WHITE HOUSE BRIDE

Mrs. Galt Is a Woman of Manifold Interests.

Will Not Follow Precedents in Wedding Ceremony—Society Breathes Easier Over Resumption of White House Functions.

Washington.—Twice before presidents of the United States have taken unto themselves wives while in their term of office. It is safe to say that Woodrow Wilson and the winsome Edith Bolling Galt will follow neither of the two precedents set.

President John Tyler evidently desired his public. Two years after the death of his first wife in 1841, he came to New York, and to the people were still under the impression that his wedding to Miss Julia Gardiner of New York was several weeks off, they learned suddenly that the chief executive had led his bride to the altar in the church of the Ascension. It was simple, but elegant.

There was a similar lack of warning. Though not quite so extreme, when President Grover Cleveland married Frances Folsom, probably the most beautiful of all the brides of the White House, in 1886. The engagement was published two weeks before the day when the ceremony actually took place; but the day and the hour were not announced until about an hours before the arrival of the bride-elect and her mother by special train. They had just come from several months in Europe.

The guests at the Cleveland wedding numbered fewer than forty. The only officials present were the cabinet and the president's private secretary, the scene was set in the blue room.

Those in confidence of Mrs. Galt here believe she will arrange everything for a fine old Virginia wedding, not an unwieldy affair but on the other hand nothing hurried or ill-considered.

Those who have visited the Galt house in Pennsylvania avenue agree that the famous "first lady of the land" is a queen of hostesses and a marvel of forethought and graceful tact.

All in all, Washington society has learned of the president's coming marriage with a feeling akin to relief. The capital is a distinctly loss lively and gay affair with no White House social season to set the pace.

With Mrs. Galt at the head of the president's establishment Washington's great hostesses will breathe easier. She has never figured large on the society pages of the newspapers but she has a large circle of friends and these agree she can be depended upon as a worthy successor of a long line of gracious presidential wives.

All Washington winter functions are arranged so as not to interfere with White House engagements. For instance, no other invitations can go out until the White House schedule is known.

The second Mrs. Wilson is an attractive dresser and she may well set the fashion for season of her age.

When walking about Washington Mrs. Galt was seen in a white serge tailored suit, the jacket decorated in military fashion in white silk braid, white kid low shoes, white silk hosiery and a small black velvet hat.

For a woman of about 50 years Mrs. Galt is strikingly handsome. She has dark eyes and wavy dark hair, splendid teeth, a peach blooom complexion and regular features. It is when she smiles, however, that she is irresistible.

Her exceedingly warm, sympathetic nature makes those who have the honor of entering her home immediately at ease and she has the faculty of the great French dames of ceiasing those concerning with her to feel they have never before been so brilliant.

The president is not a poor man, but it is probable that Mrs. Galt will bring him a fortune greater than his own. Her husband is understood to have left her about $250,000. As her expenses have never been large, this has been increased considerably. She owns the centuryold Galt jewelry store in Washington, which two of her brothers run for her.

Mrs. Galt is a woman of manifold interests. Her home is full of good books, which share with her music the long winter evenings. She is fond of the theater. She drives her own electric automobile about Washington.

She plays a fair game of tennis and her golf has improved rapidly under Mr. Wilson's tuition. She proved an ardent baseball "fan" at one of the world series games and it is said that the president arranged to see the contest at his fiancee's suggestion.

Mrs. Galt has not devoted herself to her own amusement by any means. She is active in St. Thomas Episcopal church, where she was for some time chairman of the Rector's Aid society. Besides other local charities she has done much work for the mountain whites of the south, an activity in which the first Mrs. Wilson was also a leader. Mrs. Galt's efforts have always been most unobtrusive.

IN PRAISE OF THE ONION

One Writer, at Least, Brave Enough to Defend the Healthful But Odorous Vegetable.

Why is it that so beautiful and delicious a vegetable as an onion causes such horror among humankind when it has once been consumed?

Why is it that one's wife shudders when she sees her husband gnawing at the juicy interior of a big Bermuda, when the scientific chaps so strongly recommend the onion as a most healthful and proper form of grub?

Why—oh, why—does an onion taste so much differently in the morning?

Nobody knows!

There are a few people who absolutely detest the mere idea of an onion, but the antagonistic attitude is generally a precautionary measure.

Many people would like to eat onions, if they dared, and only refrain from doing so when under heavy pressure. They are told that the odor of a mild and companionable onion upon one's breath stamps him an one of the rabble.

If he reeks with the perfume of a 15-cent cigar it is O. K. Likewise it is all right if he has been reveling in some of the more deadly varieties of cheese, but as for the onion—never!

Onions are mighty handy vegetables in the kitchen of the elite, and are used to flavor most salads and dressings and things, where they are duly appreciated, but, like the common workingman, while useful about the house, they must not be brought into the drawing room unless in disguise.

This outrage against the onion—spring, Bermuda and Spanish—when properly studied, is likely to make a socialist of almost anyone.

Vive l'onion!—Omaha World-Herald.

NEW THEORY OF EVOLUTION

Points Evolved by Author May Give Rise to Some Most Interesting Hypotheses.

In a book entitled "The Natural Theology of Evolution" J. N. Shearman pointed out that nothing in the Darwinian theory precludes design; it only requires the supposition that the designing grind works slowly through many ages. As to those variations which have turned out failures—like flying reptiles and other extinct creatures of early periods—the author makes the suggestion that the direction of varieties may to some extent be deputed by God to angels, in the same way as free will and power is granted to man; and that these failures are the experiments of the angel-subordinates.

"But," writes the editor of Nature in recommending the book to scientific readers, "the author is not in the least a crank, and he puts forward this fresh and interesting hypothesis (which some would call fantastic) as a speculation only. His main point is that though the Darwinian natural selection is a true cause of change in species, the variations which tend to progress toward greater complexity cannot be attributed to chance. They are evidence of a guiding mind which sees and knows before it produces the final plane."

Science has ceased to sneer at the spiritual, and many of the deepest thinkers of today are turning to the "supernatural" for explanation of phenomena they cannot understand.

History.

The first writer who is definitely acknowledged as a historian was the Greek Herodotus, who wrote in the fifth century, B. C. The very earliest of ancient records, sacred and secular, are merely lists and tables of rulers dynasties, and the next step toward the development of the continuous narrative which we know as "history" is in the expansion of such lists to include events. The most notable early examples of these historical records are the Old Testament books of Kings and Samuel, which date back to the seventh century, B. C., and the book of Chronicles, which, though equally notable, was compiled three centuries later. Ancient Egypt has similar records, and there are notable early fragments of Japanese and Chinese chronicles. The first actual written narrative "history," however, is Greek. The Old Testament, as stated, goes back to extremely early Jewish records. The New Testament, which was written in Greek, is, of course, much later; much history had been written before the beginning of the Christian era.

Alcohol a Useful Antiseptic.

Alcohol is a splendid general antiseptic, though in most cases it is better to use it in a solution of cold water because of its stimulant effect, quiet worry that comes in all medicine is the discovery that the boy across the street, with whom the children have recently been playing, has some contagious throat disease. If a solution of half alcohol and half cool water be allied and used as a gargle and nose spray, it will generally dislodge any germs of the disease. It is also a good mouth wash, and while very severe it is excellent for cuts.—Pictorial Review.

GREAT RECLAMATION PROJECT

U.S. GOVERNMENT ENGINEERS HAVE JUST FINISHED DAM THAT WILL TURN 180 SQUARE MILES OF DESERT INTO FERTILE FARMS IN SOUTHWEST.

In the valley of the Rio Grande on the border between the United States and Mexico, engineers of the United States have almost finished the greatest reclamation project ever attempted. At a cost of $10,000,000 the Elephant Butte dam in New Mexico, which will turn 180 square miles of almost worthless desert into fertile farms, has been constructed. For three years from the time the water was turned into the gigantic reservoir, the entire flow of the Rio Grande will be required to fill it. This artificial lake is forty miles long and from three to six miles wide. It will hold 600,000,000 gallons, or enough to cover 1,000,000 acres of land with water to a depth of one foot.

The work on the dam was started in the spring of 1911, and more than one thousand workmen have been employed on the construction ever since that time. When the project is finally completed 110,000 acres of land in New Mexico, 45,000 acres in Texas and 25,000 acres in old Mexico will be irrigated. Five hundred and fifty thousand cubic yards of solid masonry will have been put in place. This masonry would, if it were all placed on a tract of land of the dimensions of an ordinary city block, would cover the tract for a distance equal to that of a 12 story building. This masonry has been placed at the rate of 1,250 cubic yards daily.

All the cases of the dam have been put in place and the water in the reservoir stands at 25 feet above the old river bed. When it is filled it will have an average depth of approximately 60 feet.

The Elephant Butte dam project far surpasses in magnitude the Assuan dam on the Nile in Egypt, which has in the past been regarded as the climax of possibilities in [illegible]. As a matter of actual figures, the Nile dam holds only half as much water as will be contained back of Elephant Butte dam.

The dam itself is 1,200 feet long and will be 301 feet high at the highest point. A permanent roadway 16 feet high is being constructed on top. The dam gradually widens to the base, forming a concrete foundation, against which the raging torrents from the streams of the Rocky mountains will beat for centuries without effect.

In the construction of the reservoir it was necessary to wipe out three small towns, and although the population was not large, the property values, which were made good by the government, are represented in the aggregate a considerable sum. Another town sprang up for the army of workmen. A railroad 15 miles long was built to land materials to the place where the dam was erected. In fact, the preliminary work was not a small part of the undertaking. Plants for the manufacture of the materials for the housing of the workmen, a store, power station, transformer station and a complete system of irrigation in the little northwest of the dam proper had to be provided.

Construction of main flumes, cuttingans, excavation in the river bed and the building of roads were among the preliminary tasks provided to the engineers. The cost, with the exception of $100,000, will eventually be paid back into the government reclamation fund by land owners who will benefit by the dam, and will again be used by the government for reclamation work in some other section of the country.

The $1,000,000 was appropriated outright and is being used for that portion of the work which will benefit farmers in old Mexico. The appropriation was made to furnish this water in settlement of several million dollars in claims which the Mexican government had presented to the United States for damages to land on the Mexican side, as a result of the water from the river being used in small irrigation projects on the American side, thus robbing Mexican farmers of water which naturally would have gone to them.

Something of what is to be expected as a result of the work is demonstrated by the small tracts that have been brought by private irrigation systems. The great dam of course will benefit many rights of way are characteristic, especially of the officers who come under observation in the ranks of the service of conflict had impressed themselves upon the vision and had etched an expression free of sentimentalism at the asperities of destruction witnessed. Then gradually as the eyes became weary and accoutrined the signs of slaughter and misery mirrored the full picture of the horrible.

The condition is followed by one of uncanny calm and fixity of expression, which, vitellike, retains its demonic hold upon the face, causing the eyes to sink deeper into the head, to become dimmed and the lower lid marked with the shadow and weariness within. The eyes lie down in their bony sockets as in those suffering from insomnia or those who have been cowed by life's miseries. This expression of the face we find even where the individual returns to his home uninjured.

Under solicitous care the rigidity and look of distress disappear in the course of a few weeks, but on their arrival from the field these men are all shakily changed—as though they had learned to shudder and no longer know the unrestrained joy of joyous laughter. They have seen the Gorgon's head. This distinct expression of the face, this deadly serious look, this aging of the features is a short period of time is well known to relatives and friends. It is the expression of a condition which the technical physician characterizes as chronic shock of the sympathetic system, expressed particularly in the arteries.

The effect of the war is felt not alone on the pulse, but also on the heart itself. Under the constant impulse of its contracting muscle the heart becomes dilated and hypertrophied. This physical condition results in that psychic unrest which makes life seem unattractive and gray, and the future veiled in sudden mists and without hope, while all the time the recent past is lived over in the mind and seems like an unreal, not quite tangible dream.

Insomnia is the worst of the psychic disturbances that follow in the wake of the heart condition, and it may become a severe form which cannot be alleviated by the known remedies. These haunted people lie awake at night racked by their memories, staring with open eyes into the dark. They will hear the rattle and roar of artillery, the crack of the machine guns and an echo of imminent danger; these memories will pass in review before the flight of the iron birds of destiny.

We have a clearly defined psychosis of war with constantly characteristic symptoms. The occasion of war may serve to develop the latent predispositions of mental degenerates, and in this a habitual misuse of alcohol may play a considerable role, but true psychic disturbances, as such, have their roots further back. In other words, it is the latent indication of psychic abnormality which is brought to rapid development through war, but war in itself does not develop a symptom complex of its own or a true psychosis.

Some unusual instances of hysteria have come under observation, patients in whom functional derangements were effected by purely psychic means. One in the case of a corporal of an excitable, wild and unrestrained disposition.

He came to the hospital with bent shoulders and with profuse inflammation of the shoulder joints. After four months he was almost restored to health and was assuming himself by playing upon his mouth harmonica, the childish and individual musical instrument of the army. Opposite to him in the hospital lay a soldier suffering from the effects of a shot through the head, with aisper and violent convulsions. The indications for a cranial operation were being discussed, and the remark was made: "It may be a case of tetanus."

It proved not to be tetanus and the spasms were relieved by the removal of a bone splinter, which resulted in progressive recovery. The neighbor, the corporal with healed shot wounds in the arms, after three days developed typical symptoms of tetanus, without fever.

The manifestations continued for several weeks and disappeared finally under suggestion, on the emphatic assurance that no tetanus was present. —New York Sun.

A Military Surgeon's Experience in Berlin

BY PROF. CARL LUDWIG SCHLEICH.

They who return from the field of battle are changed men, with a peculiar expression of the face which has become characteristic of those who are fighting for their country. Though there is a uniformity of desire to serve the fatherland further after a period of recovery, it may be possible, on the features of all these members of the giant organism lies the stamp of the horrors are what which they have witnessed and this expression is in direct relation to the culture of the individual.

Notwithstanding their iron purpose to return when their injuries have healed, these fighters are all, psychologically speaking, not quite normal. A tragic look in the frequent eyes, almost many rigidity of the face are characteristic, especially of the officers who come under observation in Berlin. In all the horrors of conflict had impressed themselves upon the vision and had etched an expression free of sentimentalism at the asperities of destruction witnessed. HANDICRAFT FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

AN ICE PUSHMOBILE.

For coasting along an icy sidewalk or over a frozen pond the ice pushmobile shown in Figs. 1 and 2 is a splendid home-made contrivance. Any boy will find its construction easy to carry out by following the simple directions printed below.

The pair of skates are clamped to the under side of the reach board in the same way that you clamp them to your shoes. That makes it possible to detach them quickly when ever you wish to go skating. To provide for clamping them in place you must have blocks of wood to the under side of the reach board, corresponding in size to the heel and sole of your shoe, for the projecting tips of the clamps to grip onto (A and B, Fig. 3) are made to take these blocks of wood as long as possible, so they can be nailed accurately.

Fasten the grocery box to the box end of the reach board, nailing down to fasten it to the center to the end of a stick cut small enough to turn easily in the hole in a stool. The upper stick slipped over the stick is grasped by the right hand, and the left hand starts the stool spinning and keeps it in motion by twirling the stick to which the cardboard strip is fastened. The boy and girl riders are shown in Fig. 7. On the stool is placed the pommel them upon cardboard, color them on both sides.

The cardboard (Fig. 8) is made of the same kind of a strip as that used for the merry-go-round (Fig. 4). Tack this strip at its center to the side of a spool, and mount the spool in a hole bored in the end of the stool. Fasten the top of the stick to the board. Then nail to the top of the box a broom handle or a stick.

Nor a racer, the lighter you make the pushmobile the faster you will be able to make it go. It is complete enough for that purpose at the stage of construction. But if you wish to use it in a snow battle game, as some boys do, you should provide a shield on the bow, as shown in Fig 2, behind which to duck your head to escape snowballs thrown at you. Make this shield of boards nailed to the box on the bow. Nail a board across the lower portion of the bow, as shown in Fig. 2, and you will have a "magazine" in which to keep snowballs.

By fastening a short pole to the bow for a mast and attaching a piece of cloth for a sail, it is possible to convert the pushmobile into a small ice yacht. This yacht can be improved by fastening a crosspiece to the mast to hold the sail out in place of the bow skate, and then clamping a skate near each end of the crosspiece. By the latter plan the yacht is more easily balanced. It requires three skates to carry it out, but you can likely borrow one if you own only one pair.

TOYS MADE OF BROOMS AND CARDBOARD.

The two-wheel cart, in Fig. 1, is made of a small box cover and one of the spools on which crochet cotton comes. Prepare a best piece of card and tack that shown in Fig 3, with ends A turned down at the proper points, so there will be only room enough between them for the spool. Punch a hole through the card turned down for a stick axle to run through. Then cut two slots through the box cover the same distance apart as ends A (Fig 3), covering the pair both crosswise and lengthwise of the cover, and stick ends A through the slots and glue parts B to the cover. Cut the wheel axle enough smaller than the spool hole so the spool will turn easily, then push it through the hole in the spool and the holes in ends A and a cardboard strip to the under side of the cover for a shaft.

The toy merry-go-round in Fig. 5 consists of a strip of heavy cardboard turned up at its ends (Fig. 6), which

Everyone Should Drink Hot Water in the Morning

Wash away all the stomach, liver, and bowel poisons before breakfast.

To feel your best day in and day out, to clear clean inside, no sour bile to coat your tongue and sicken your breath or dull your head; no constipation, bilious attacks, sick headache, colds, rheumatism or gassy, acid stomach, you must bathe on the inside like you bathe outside. This is vastly more important, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do, says a well-known physician.

To keep these poisons and toxins well flushed from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, drink before breakfast each day, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of Bisurated Magnesia. This will cleanse, purify and freshen the entire alimentary tract, before putting more food into the stomach.

Get a quarter pound of Bisurated Magnesia from your druggist or at the store. It is inexpensive and almost tasteless, except a mouth thing which is delightful. Drink phosphated hot water every morning to rid your system of these vile poisons and toxins, and to prevent their formation.

You will like young folks feel; like you felt before your blood, nerves and muscles became saturated with an accumulation of body poisons, begin this treatment and above all, keep it up! As soon and as sure as you do, you will fly, then push it through the hole in the spool and the holes in ends A. Make a cardboard strip to the under side of the cover for a shaft.

A small war which France is carrying on, but of which little is heard, is being waged in Tunis. The conflict consists chiefly of engagements with rest rubber bands crossing the frontier from Tripoli, which besides plunder the country, cut the telegraph wires and attack provision convoys to the French posts. Important fighting of this kind took place to the inshiet region from September 25 to October 9, during which time the French garrison of 200 men lost 1 a large number of soldiers at day until relief arrived.

The KITCHEN CABINET

There are no zonal blanks, there are no neutral cards, there is neither the power that sows and reaps, or the light that scatters and illuminates and the salt that slowly and surely permeates and adds savory that does nothing.

DISHES FOR OYSTER LOVER.

Oysters raw, or if properly cooked, are very easy of digestion. They are not especially valuable as food, but are priceless as a appetizing relish. Every one fond of them. Oysters are also illness carriers, or typical germs, and especial care must be exercised in their use when uncooked. The green matter they frequently consist has often caused a perfectly good eye ter to be refused admittance into good society. The green tint is caused unclean from the vegetable matter on which the oyster is fed and is not at all objectionable.

Oyster and Carrot Stew.—This is an economical dish. Cook carrots and potatoes until tender, season with salt and pepper, add milk and at as many oysters as desired, with plenty of butter to add richness to the stew.

The vegetables should be cut in dice.

Oyster Pie.—Put the liquor from a quart of oyster in a white boiler with two cupfuls of milk; season with salt and pepper, and two tablespoonfuls of butter; thicken with bread crumbs until creamy; add the oysters, let them warm, and the beaten yolks of two eggs to the mixture. Make a rich pie crust. Line a dish with it, and place a piece of buttered paper between the two crusts. Bake until a light brown. Take off the upper crust, pour into the shell the prepared oysters, replace the crust and put into a hot oven for ten minutes. Serve at once.

Oysters a la Poulette.—Make a rich cream sauce of a cupful of milk; add to the other seasonings a teaspoonful of onion juice, and the same of chopped parsley. Take a half cupful of mushrooms, fresh, when obtainable, simmer in the white sauce for ten minutes, then for ten minutes before serving turn in a pint of well-drained oysters. When the oysters curl, the dish is done. This is nice for Sunday night supper, prepared in the chafing dish.

ECONOMY FOR THE TRADE.

It is hardly necessary to repeat what we have the following and yet housewives either do not know, do know over or are deliberately willing to allow expenses to mount unnecessarily regard to saving: Begin a meal with a clear soup made from vegetables or with milk and cream, vegetable soup for dinning. The family will eat far less of meat and dessert, which will be large saving when counted up at the end of the month.

Vegetable soups of course are the cheapest, then cocoa those made of milk and cream, and the cocoa made from water. Serve the soup made of milk and other things. A good potato cream soup to begin the meal, and for its main dish croquettes or a fish dish is an excellent meal with some simple dessert.

Milk soups are made with a pint of water and a cupful of any sort of vegetable, cooked together; the milk is added when the soup is to be served somewhat, then a thickening of flour and butter is added to bind it, the seasoning added and it is ready to serve.

Cream Pea Soup.—Drain and wash a can of green peas, reserve them in a small saucepan, adding a scant of mint, a little onion juice, a pinch of sugar, salt and a dash of cayenne. Cover with a pint of cold water and cook until the peas are well cooked, mashed. Press through a sieve, return to the fire and stir in gradually a half pint of cream, then add a dash of salt, and a half cupful of butter. Mold in cups and when ready to serve sprinkle with chopped nuts and serve with sugar and cream.

Honey Nut Sandwiches—Mix a cupful of honey with two teaspoonfuls of lemon juice, then stir in enough finely chopped nut meats to make a thick paste.

Honey Candy.—To a quart of honey take six tablespoonfuls of butter, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar and boil until it hardens when dropped in water. Flavor with two teaspoonfuls of lemon extract and a half teaspoonful of soda. Pour into buttered pans to cool. Mark off in squares before you have.

CAKES FOR FESTIVE OCCASIONS.

For light refreshments for an afternoon or an evening entertainment the little cakes are always a good and popular choice. Cylinder shape pieces are especially pretty; they may be dipped in melted fondant, then rolled in chopped nuts and they will look just like croquettes. The most successful frosting and the easiest to handle is fondant made by boiling water and sugar together with a pinch of cream of tartar until it makes a sort of ball when dropped in cold water, then when cool is stirred until white and waxy. When wanted to use, it is at a time is melted over hot water and poured over the cakes. This fondant may be kept in a dish covered with paper and kept from the air in a cold place, for weeks.

If plain green or yellow cakes are wanted, in fact any color, the fondant may be tinted the desired shade; for chocolate a little is melted and stirred into the fondant.

Cup Cakes.—Take a cupful each of molasses and sour milk, a half cupful of brown sugar, three cupfuls of soft butter, one teaspoonful each of soda and ginger, a pinch of salt and flour to make a drop batter, bake in a moderate oven in small gem pans.

So many people enjoy cream puffs and find them difficult to make and bake. The real secret of the making is in the baking. Let a half cupful of water come to the boiling point, add four tablespoonfuls of butter and when boiling stir in three tablespoonfuls of a cupful of flour all at once, cook and stir until it leaves the sides of the pan. Remove from the heat and cool; add three eggs, one at a time, beating between each one. Drop in a spoon on a baking sheet, leaving space to puff, and bake until the puffs feel light when lifted from the pan. Cool, cut and remove the pastry center before filling.

HONEY SWEETS.

Honey is reasonable in price and plentiful in many places, and should be considered in more combinations. If sugar is scarce, sometimes we may be glad to use honey in many of our dishes.

Honey Fruit Cake.—Mix one and a half cupful of butter, add three-quarters of a cupful of honey, a half cupful of a cupful of apple jelly, remove from heat and add two well-beaten eggs, one teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, a half teaspoonful of grated nutmeg, all sifted with four cupfuls of flour, except two tablespoonfuls of baking powder, add a half cupful of Sultana raisins, a quarter of a cupful of chopped citron, a half cupful of preserved cherries, cut in halves; then melt a half cupful of butter, add three-quarters of a cupful of honey, two eggs and a quarter of a cupful of milk. Beat well and turn into a well-buttered tin and bake.

Honey Blanc Mange.—Moisten six tablespoonfuls of cornstarch with a cupful of cold water, add one pint of milk and two cupfuls of boiling milk and cook eight minutes, then add a dash of salt, and a half cupful of honey. Mold in cups and when ready to serve sprinkle with chopped nuts and serve with sugar and cream.

Honey Nut Sandwiches—Mix a cupful of honey with two teaspoonfuls of lemon juice, then stir in enough finely chopped nut meats to make a thick paste.

Honey Candy.—To a quart of honey take six tablespoonfuls of butter, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar and boil until it hardens when dropped in water. Flavor with two teaspoonfuls of lemon extract and a half teaspoonful of soda. Pour into buttered pans to cool. Mark off in squares before you have.

THE SANDMAN STORY

By Mrs. F. A. WALKER

SNOWBALL PERFORMS.

One day, while Snowball was in the city, he saw a sign which read: "See Pro! Anastasius Papadopoulos' trained cats."

"Trained cats!" said Snowball. "I wonder what they can do? I'll go in and see." With his curiosity had risen to lunch that day Snowball went to the thinker. There were cats big and little. One walked a tight rope, another very handsome cat waltzed to the music of the orchestra and one cat wheeled a kitten in a cart. "I should not care to be the kitten in the cart," thought Snowball, as the cart tipped from side to side.

The thing that pleased Snowball the most was the cat that walked across the stage on its front paws while its hind feet were raised in the air and steadied by a little stick which the professor held. "If I could do that," said Snowball, "I should be the most powerful cat in the neighborhood. They are very smart kittens," said Snowball, as he went out, and all the way home he wondered how he could practice the wonderful things he had seen without Kit and Puff seeing him until he was able to perform perfectly.

The next day, when Kit and Puff were asleep in their basket, Snowball went to the barn. He walked on his hind legs and found that he could walk very well, or he felt sure he could if he had the music, but to walk on his front feet with his hind legs up in the air was a very difficult thing to do, he found. He could stand on his front feet with his hind feet against the side of the barn, but when he tried to walk he could not balance himself. "I could ask Puff or Kit to hold the stick as the professor did," he thought, "but they would be sure to claim all the glory. I'll try walking the clothesline first and practice this again." He ran up the clothesline and tried to walk on it on the line, but he moved in the most unsteady manner. "If it were flat," said Snowball, "it would be easy, for I can walk on the top of a very narrow fence."

He stood on the fence by with his front paws and buried his sharp claws in it, then he stood on the fence and carefully from the post, but just as he put it on the line it swung and poor Snowball turned over and fell to the ground. He landed on his neat and looked around to see if anyone saw him, but no one was in sight. "I guess I'll try turning somersault," said Snowball, "one of the professors cats did that, but the post in too high to practice on. I wonder if I can do it by tiny rope-walking, either, but still to the other rope I will have to ask Puff to hold the stick under my hind feet, I suppose, for I must do that trick alone."

All the tabbies and kittens for miles and miles were talking about Snowball in his wonderful three-act performance. The tabbies were filled with some of the younger kittens climbed into the hay loft.

Kit announced that Snowball would first perform his wonderful act of somersaults he had just learned, and came from behind a horse blanket curtain, which was hung in front of a stall. He was dressed in his red sweater. He bowed to the audience, and exclaimed proudly, "Isn't he handsome?" was heard from all parts of the barn. Puff and Kit felt that he would score another victory. Snowball jumped into the air and landed on his hind feet, then he looked upside down across the barn floor.

"Oh! he is just too lovely for anything!" said one old tabby as Snowball disappeared behind the curtain to the storm of applause.

Kit announced that Snowball next would walk on the music of a music box turned by Puff. Snowball appeared from the curtain with a music box in his collar and tie showed to advantage. Round and round he whirled until he thought that he had lost his feet and resired to his stall dressing room.

"Wonderful, wonderful!" said the tabbies, while the kittens were speechless with admiration.

"And now," Kit announced, "Snowball will walk on his front feet with his hind legs held in the air." Puff appeared with Snowball for this act, and when Snowball placed his hind legs against the side of the barn, Puff held the stick under his feet to steady him. Snowball walked across the barn and back to the curtain and then gave a spring and landed on all four feet.

But what was the matter with his hind legs? They did not seem to be cold not move them. Puff pushed him behind the curtain. The audience applauded and called for Snowball, but he could not walk. His hind legs were cold fast by the stick.

Puff and Kit were smiling and bowing and getting all the glory one in front. What should he do? And what had happened? He put his nose around and felt something sticky. Then he knew Puff and Kit had put glue on the stick and it was stuck fast to the fur. They had stopped long that they would be in front of the curtain always to receive the applause and congratulations of the audience.

"Poor Snowball! He looked and licked at the stick, but by the time he had moved the sticky bobbin the cats and kittens had gone.

Snowball went into the house and stretched himself behind the kitchen stove to think over his unjust treatment, and how he could punish Puff and Kit for the trick they had played on him.

DECORATING A GIRL'S ROOM

Furnishings Should Be Kept Simple and of Such Material That They May Be Easily Cleaned.

The decorations and furnishings in a girl's room should be kept simple. The curtains, hangings, dresser scarfs and pincushions, even the toilet articles, should all be of such material that they may be cleaned easily. Thin, sheer materials make the daintiest covers for dressers and tables, while the side curtains may be of heavier cretonne or linen over thin white muslin. Toilet articles of cut fulold are in better taste than those of heavily embossed, plated silver. Linen should be trimmed.

The woodwork is always nicest when painted cream-white, while the floor should be either stained or painted, and covered with a large rug or small ones. Rag rugs are as fitting as any floor covering, and they come in lovely colors. You may sew the rugs and have the rugs woven to order and obtain just the shades desired by having dyed the colors yourself. The walls may be papered in a plain, striped or flowered paper, or tinted, or even painted, in a clear, light tint. Plain colors are always most restful, and if figured walls are present it is best to have the hangings plain also.

BOYS DEMAND GOOD STORIES

Give Youth Plenty of Books, Let Him Read and Browse and Have His Fill of Adventure.

To say that boys do not demand adventure stories is a mistake, and shouldn't have this demand supplied would be ridiculous, Walter Pitt-hard Dotson writes in the Woman's Home Companion.

Any good teacher or wise parent knows, of course, that mere prohibition is as ineffective and silly nonsense. Not "don'ts" but "do's," not prohibition but suggestion, is the method to apply. Give the young boy books, give him plenty of books, let him read and browse and have his fill of adventure—but see that these books are the right sort. Find out what they are like yourself before you put them into your son's hands. They may be dynamite, as Frank Merriwell proves to know your boy's brains out. Don't sacrifice his brains, his imagination, all his chances of future literary taste, sense of style, appreciation of good writing, for the sake of saving 15 cents.

HOW TO MAKE A RABBIT TRAP

Illustrations Given of Three Contrivances That Will Interest Boys During Winter.

I. W. Frank of Pleasanton, Kan., sends the description of three rabbit traps to Farmers Mail and Breeze, that boys will be anxious to try this winter

He says that rabbits like to run through a hollow log, etc., and the first trap shown is built on this plan. Bury a barrel in the ground so the top of it will come just level with the top of the ground. Make a box about four feet long to the lower side of this box and place the lower side of this box through curiosity or for food. Mr. Rabbit unnoise the spindle and the door slides down. The third trap is something like the second one but not so good, as mice can spring it and bait is necessary. Bait can also be used on No. 2, but the rabbit can be caught without it, because, in crowding past the spring, the rabbit unhooks it and lets the door fall.

Not a Jollier.

Charley and Nancy had quarreled. After their supper mother tried to re establish friendly relations. She told them of the Bible verse, "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath."

"Now, Charlie," she pleaded, "are you going to let the sun go down on your wrath?"

Charlie squirmed a little. Then: "Well, how can I stop it?"

TAKE SALTS TO FLUSH KIDNEYS IF BACK HURTS

Says Too Much Meat Forms Uric Acid Which Clogs the Kidneys and Irritates the Bladder.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.—Adv.

Bumper Grain Crops
Good Markets—High Prices
Prizes Awarded to Western Canada for Wheat, Oats, Barley, Alfalfa and Grasses

The winnings of Western Canada at the Soil Products Exposition at Denver were easily made. The list comprised Wheat, Oats, Barley and Grasses, the most important being the prizes for Wheat and Oats and sweep stakes on Alfalfa.

It is less important than the splendid quality of Western Canada's wheat and other grains, is the excellence of the cattle fed and fattened on the grasses of that country. A recent shipment of cattle to Chicago topped the market in that city for quality and price.

Western Canada produced in 1915 one-third as much wheat as all of the United States, or over 300,000,000 bushels.

Canada is proportion to population has a greater exportable surplus of wheat this year than any country in the world, and at present prices you can figure out the profit accruing to the producer. In Western Canada you will find good markets, unlimited acreage of productive soil, climatic conditions and a sure crop.

At a recent meeting of the Local Tug Men's Association, Capt. Geo. Weaver was appointed a delegate to the grand body, which meets in Detroit.

O. D. Hammond, only recently recovered from a severe attack of grippe, is now laid up with a very annoying case of blood poisoning in his right hand.

A flake Sale and Ten Cent Tea will be given by the ladies of the Catholic church, at the store of Ben Yettaws, Wednesday, Jan. 25th. All are cordially invited to attend.

Last Monday morning the mercury at both Chicago and Detroit registered eight degrees below zero, while at southern Michigan points a like record was made. Charlevoix has not yet reached zero.

On Friday evening at the local skating rink, in a basket ball game, Charlevoix defeated Ellsworth in a score of 48 to 10. Next Tuesday evening, at the same place, Charlevoix will play Harbor Springs.

The coldest weather of the year thus far came upon us Friday and continued for four days. On Sunday a fierce blizzard raged all day. The lowest temperative yet recorded was four degrees above zero.

Hon. H. S. Emerson, former representative from the Antrim district in the legislature, and now auditor of the land department of the F. M. railroad, is in the city. He is accompanied by Hon. J. F. Wilkinson, deputy auditor general of Michigan. Both are here on official business.

Capt. Peter McCafferty, of this city, has received notice from the Dunham Towing Co., of Chicago, that he has been re-appointed master of the tug he sailed the season of 1914. John Kelly goes back as engineer with Capt. McCafferty.

County Treasurer Weaver requests the publication of the following: Owing to an error made at this office during the rush, in trying to get the monthly statements out to the papers the cash balance was left out and as was shown by figuring up the receipts and disbursements as given in the statement, a cash balance of $2688.52 was left on hand January 1, 1916.

Word comes of the death lately, in the Northwest of Antoine Richards. Mr. Richards was a resident of Charlevoix for a number of years, keeping a saloon on the northeast corner of Bridge and Mason street. He removed to Traverse City a number of years ago, engaging in the same business there. He went to the Northwest about five years ago.

Word has been received that the post office department at Washington is going to standardize the mail boxes and that all rural patrons must adopt a new style containing a coin holder. The new order will go into effect about July 1, 1916. The specifications provide for two boxes for each patron. One 18½ inches long for mail and one 23½ inches long for parcel post.

The register of deeds of Mackinac county has received a deed for registry given by Lake Superior Chemical Co. by John S. Lawrence, special master, to the Charcoal Iron Co. of America, the price paid being four million dollars. Revenue stamps to the amount of $4,000 are attached to the instrument, which covers 16 printed pages of descriptions. The property is located in two Wisconsin counties, Luce, Schoolcraft, Gogebic Alger, Chippewa and Mackinac counties in the upper peninsula and Antrim below the straits, and has been recorded in all of these with the exception of Mackinac.

Grand Rapids Special:— Dr. J. M. Rayner has issued a warning to farmers in western Michigan against feeding horses and cattle silage which was cut after the killing frosts last fall, as it is likely to have moulded, and is liable to poison the stock to which it is fed. Thomas Earley, of Cascade township, has lost six horses this week by feeding them the silage. The only safe way to feed the silage according to Dr. Rayner is to kill dry it. The corn which filled the horses was frozen before it ripened, a mold formed at the base of the kernel on the cob, and is of a poisonous nature, and when fed to stock is sure to result in death.

D. H. Wood, of the electric supply company of Wood Bros. went to Indianapolis Monday on business.

The tug McCann came from the Island Friday, returning Saturday. Capt. McCann hopes to make one more trip.

Mrs. Wm Finucan was advised Tuesday of the death of her brother, at Ilion, N. Y. Captain and Mrs. Finucan left for that place Tuesday afternoon.

George McCartney, of Munising; Hugh McCartney, of Flint, and Mrs. M. J. Fox, of Iron Mountain, are here on account of the serious illness of their mother.

The Baptists have broadened 1916 plan. Once each month in a Sunday evening service the Pastor will discuss one of the World's famous paintings in Scriptural light. Next Sunday evening "The Gleaners," by Millet, will be given. This is Millet's masterpiece. Everybody welcome.

"Sure Pep and the Safety Scouts." This is the title of a book recently presented to the city library. The author is Roy R. Bailey, one of our summer visitors. Boy Scouts and others interested in the slogan "Safety First" will find this an entertaining treatment of the subject.

The United States suction dredge General Mead will not be transferred to the lower lakes, as has been rumored. According to the officers of the United States district engineer, the General Mead has been permanently stationed at Grand Haven to do duty as a sand sucker in all ports along the east shore of Lake Michigan.

Died, Tuesday afternoon last, Miss Lillian Brown, oldest daughter of P. S. Brown, at the family home, 404 Mason St., aged 50 years. "Deceased has been an invalid for thirty-five years. Besides her father, she leaves two sisters—Pearl of this city and Mrs. W. H. Cater of Chicago, and two brothers—Robert, of Milwaukee, and Herl, of Flint.

And still another successful Charlevoix boy. Cleland Mayne, son of Judge Mayne, a University graduate in Mining and Bachelor of Science, class of '15, has accepted a position on the medical staff of the mine hospital at Traverse City. Since his graduation Dr. Mayne has kept on digging for knowledge as an assistant in Harper hospital, Detroit, and is splendidly equipped in his chosen profession.

At a meeting of the owners of the Charlevoix County Bank held January 17, 1916, Honorable Archibald Buttars was elected President, Albert E. Bridge was elected Vice-President and Cashier, and Harry O. Mohrman was continued in the position of Assistant Cashier. The action of the members of the firm taken in November continuing the partnership for five years was ratified, giving the bank the combined support of Mr. Buttars, Mr. Bridge and the estate of John Nichols, bringing a total of Two Hundred Thousand Dollars of unincumbered property as part of the bank's available resources, thus continuing it as one of the strongest banks of northern Michigan.

Last spring Kalamazoo joined the column of Michigan's dry counties. Last week Hon. E. N. Dingly, of the society city, editor of the Michigan Progressive Herald, interviewed Chief of Police Struble of that city, and this is what the chief said: "I believe Kalamazoo is one of the cleanest cities and best behaved cities of the size in the county. Of course there are bad men and women and undesirable features, but they will take care of themselves, no matter what is done to prevent them. I believe prohibition in the county has helped to make a better condition of affairs. I always took the view that a county would be no better off, if anything a wet county, but I have changed my mind. The arrests in Kalamazoo are more numerous than when they were before the county went dry."

RELIEF FOR NEEDY FARMERS

MOVEMENT STARTED TO HELP OUT FARMERS OF THIS LOCALITY WHOSE CROP FAILURES HAVE HURT

It is a recognized fact that this section of Michigan, in common with other sections, suffered severely by reason of crop failures last season. Not only business men, but friends of Charlevoix living elsewhere, who have money and big hearts, are coming forward in a relief movement.

Of those latter, Samuel Bailey, of Cincinnati, comes forward with $200, S. M. Sos & Sons, Charlevoix merchants, have pledged a like amount. A local committee has been appointed to properly disburse this money, which will in all probability be increased by other contributions.

AMEN DEAR BROTHER

HARBOR SPRINGS MAKES BIG KICK ON TAX COMMISSIONERS ARBITRARY ACTS

The tax commissioners have come and gone, says the Harbor Springs Republican, and now that tax-paying time has come, we realize fully that they have been here, and we wonder where they were and where they came from to exercise such crude judgment in regard to many cases in fixing the valuation of property. We wonder if they know anything about the value of property, or if they were here because they had been appointed to a job to pay for some political service. We wonder what they know about property valuations in a resort section, where we have a three months' business.

Certain it is that some of the valuations fixed by them show very poor judgment, but they were dictatorial and would not listen to presentation of facts. We believe the tax burden is heavy enough without having a bunch of boys who sit in office a day and expense to come here and boost values that they don't know much about. It would be time for the people of Harbor Springs and the resorts to get together and make a protest against such a sort of thing? There must be some appeal from a great injustice in Michigan: If not, we ought to make one.

BURGLARY ON BRIDGE STREET

On Tuesday night, this week, the pool room of R. R. Mears was burglarized, the robber breaking a side window for entrance.

About twenty dollars in cash including a cigar box full of pennies, was taken, and probably a quantity of cigars from the show case.

There is no clue as to the identity of the robber or robbers, but Sheriff Novak has the matter in hand.

GRAND RAPIDS ART EXHIBIT

SUPT. H. A. CRAIG HAS SECURED THE GRAND RAPIDS ART EXHIBIT

The children of the Charlevoix Public Schools have been given a rare treat the past week. Supt. H. A. Craig has secured the Grand Rapids Art Exhibit. It is a fine collection of drawing and manual art work. The children have enjoyed examining the work, and have carried away with them higher standards of work which will be seen in the future work of the children.

The parents and the patrons of the school are invited to examine this exhibition of work from a neighboring town, in order that a good standard may be set for judging the work of our own school.

For this purpose Friday afternoon from 1:15 until 4:00 o'clock. It is hoped that a large number will avail themselves of this opportunity to see a fine art exhibit as done by the grade children of Grand Rapids.

LYMAN HOWE'S TRAVEL FESTIVAL

TO BE SHOWN AT THE MAJESTIC THEATRE, WEDNESDAY FEBRUARY 2ND

Howe's Travel Festival will present an entire new production. "Howe travelers" will cross the Firth of Forth bridge, Scotland—the most unique structure of its kind in the world and also one of the largest. It represents the labor of nearly 5,000 men continuously for seven years, and over sixty lives. Seventeen men are kept busy, year in and year out, keeping the fifty thousand tons of steel in fresh paint.

The itinerary also includes a visit to picturesque Madeira. On arrival at Funchal, the Island's capital, located on a rugged coast, the scene show groups of natives leaping into the water for coins thrown to them. A curious institution in this quaint land are the bullock carts which serve in lieu of taxicabs or the less dignified "jitney."

The next destination is Switzerland in its winter garb of ice and snow—where the girls of skiing are witnessed as well as the perils of climbing Alpine heights.

Then the journey proceeds over the rivers of France and continues to the serene beauty of pastoral Holland with its numerous windmills. Turkey, as Holland is, between the great contending armies creating carnage all around it, it seems strange that it has escaped the fate of other nations, and yet there are many signs of the ravages of war. Then comes a visit to Spain, the land of romance, and now that it is nearing time for the festival to close, we return to our own "sweet home America."

SCHOOL COMMISSIONER'S SPEECH TO DIRECTORS AT THE OFFICERS' MEETING

A common problem faces all school officers. Teachers are confronted with the same problems of school room improvement. We must work together and get results. We must work together from the beginning unto the end.

The annual report is a source of some annoyance but is a necessity to the state department. Let us group the mistakes of the year under three headings. First, you get your statistics at the top of your report from your teacher's register. These registers are of every kind and every description. Many of them do not even follow the directions of the state department in finding out statistics. If every director in Charlevoix county will buy A. Hamlin Smith's Combination Register from Henry Pattengill, Lansing, Michigan, for the merest sum of seventy-five cents, we will start the new year with a clean page. I can then assure you that every county normal graduate will have learned how to make out this report and will realize its importance. Every experienced teacher will have had experience also in handling a register just like yours and it will be easier for her to make a correct report. I am sure your teacher will be glad to copy her term reports into a new register and you will find that it is worth while. Perhaps you already have this register; if not that is what you want without delay and with uniform registers throughout the county, we can save time, labor, postage and temper. Second, no matter what system of books you as director may be keeping, if you should keep all your receipts and all your expenditures on two pages facing each other just as the department has recommended in the "Digest of School Laws." With everything altogether, you can compute your totals at a glance, you will save a great deal of inconvenience at the close of the school year, and no doubting elector can question your method. The mistakes of the school year are due to various causes but if we study the instructions carefully we can easily overcome this fault.

The one thing that I have been trying to hit the hardest this fall is the attendance record. There are many schools in which the attendance is not above 60 percent and nearly all of the absences are unjustifiable. You pay your teacher full wages every month to teach the children who are enrolled. Five times in a week by thoughtless parents who keep their children at home regardless of compulsory education laws. We intend to enforce these laws but we need your cooperation to raise the standard in your district.

The boys and girls are anxious to come in order to win the certificates of award and diplomas of honor given out by every teacher. Would the parents like a distinction of work done for a district prize? Would you strive for first place with your neighboring district? Would you cooperate with the county supervisors I hope to obtain permission to offer an award in money for the highest percentage of attendance during the next school year. This money would be sent directly to the school board of the winning district with the one proviso that the money be spent entirely on school room improvement leading to a standard plate.

The state department endorses potato vacations, we are glad to grant this time to help the farmer and to show our approval of hard manual labor. It is good for boys and girls, good for all of us but when the vacation is over every child should be in school, not part of the time but all of the time and not on the second or third day but on the first day after the vacation. We, you and I have a right to expect this much from the parents of this county in a square American deal. In October just at the close of the potato vacation, it was necessary for Mr. Dona to serve thirty notices in one week. Not a square deal, is it? YOU have the right to expect your taxpayers this when they ask for such a vacation again and you have the privilege of insisting on perfect attendance when school is in session.

Next year, thanks to our law-makers, every teacher must have 60 days experience or normal training or both. Your teacher cannot get her certificate renewed unless she attends a state normal at least one summer in three.

There are five reading circle classes in the county to give every teacher a chance to read the reading circle books. If your teacher is true trustworthy, she will belong to one of these and you have a right to expect her to do this.

A number of years ago our county had a uniform system of text books; Baldwin's Reader, Milne's Arithmetic, Redway and Hinman's Geographies, Overton's Physiology and Harrington's Spellers. But methods have changed a great deal since those times; our teachers are trained in new methods and those books follow the old. Teachers realize this difficulty and are asking for new texts. A few have succeeded. Where the books are old you need new books anyway. So when you change the books in your district, if you will adopt the recommended list in the back of the directory you will find that the teachers and pupils will both progress more rapidly. Very soon your neighboring school will have the same texts and with new uniform books in the county every teacher you hire will already be familiar with the texts you use. Thus you will save time and work in the school room. The recommended books are the books you want in the back of this year's Directory.

Let me take this opportunity to announce in person that I shall be in Boyne City in the Central School building 10-12 a. m. the second Saturdays of each month; in Charlevoix school building on the third Saturday 10-12 a. m., and in East Jordan, at home, on either the first or fourth Saturday. I have these office hours in order to learn how the schools in each vicinity are progressing and it would please me to have you or any of your patrons call to acquaint me with these conditions.

We want fifteen Standard Schools in 1916. But what is a Standard School? A Standard School is one that the state department is not ashamed of. It is a school that is properly equipped, has its pupils correctly and comfortably seated, has enough windows properly placed, and a good ventilating system. It is a school which the department openly endorses by placing on the front of the building a plate bearing the words "Standard School."

As we look over the boys and girls of our country schools can we realize what they mean to us? Is it the present rate in one out of every five will die of consumption? That of those who die three out of every four are infected in the school room before the age of sixteen? Can we realize that in the dust of the poorly swept, poorly ventilated room, 87 per cent of our boys and girls are already infected with the dread white plague? In the face of these figures is it too much to ask that every school be thoroughly cleaned every month just as you would clean your kitchens? In the presence of a representative from the state department I am proud to say that two thirds of our schools already have good ventilating systems. Surely in the face of these figures, the other one third will not postpone their action.

In Cheboygan county a few years ago a test was made of the vision of the country school children. The test showed that 41 per cent of the pupils had defective vision in one form or another. Causes are much the same in Charlevoix county; one half enough light or cross light for continuous straining of the eyes thru a period of six consecutive hours.

When school houses were first built three matters had not been investigated. We cannot help the fact that our school houses have been wrongly built. Years have come and gone without our knowledge of the steady advance of the slow creeping disease in our midst. Years have passed without our realizing the dreadful consequences of injured eyesight, but the results are known now. In the face of these facts a new era has dawned. Fathers and mothers throughout the land are demanding that their school houses be remodeled to meet the requirements of health. The department has made a careful study of conditions and has published the manual of remodeling old school houses. Write for it. We are glad to answer any questions that you wish to ask them at any time about your building. At your invitation a state inspector will come without any expense to you to tell you just what building lacks.

If every school board in Charlevoix county should that year vote a tax of $100 just for improvement and expend it wisely, we could have twenty-five new Standard Schools in 1916 instead of our goal fifteen new Standard Schools. All the remaining schools could complete their plans in one more year. Grand Traverse county already has as its slogan "Every School a Standard School." Shall we fail behind the mark? Get the improvement germ and the money will follow in the lead.

When your school has received its standard plate years may be a school about which your teacher may say "Here are boys and girls who became healthier and stronger, here their eyes are relieved from the strain of continuous study, and their lungs may daily and safely expand with fresh pure air. As you pass with pride at the plate above your door, you may hear the the teacher and pupils following in reading to you "It was not the thing that you did, but rather, out the thing that you left undone that gave you the bit of a heart ache at the setting of the sun."

Northern Michigan

Harbor Springs Special: Alvin Warner, seventy-six years old, died here Wednesday of heart trouble. He had for many years been a fisherman on north shores of Lake Michigan. He was the father of William Warner of this place and also leaves four daughters, Mrs. Minnie Kolsburg, of Ludington, Mrs. A. G. Center of Pentwater, Mrs. Lillie Middleton of Milwaukee, Wis., and Mrs. Nettie Freeman of Nashville, Tenn.

The body of Abram Jackson, who died in Tennessee while enjoying his annual tour of the south, will be brought to Manistee for interment. Grip killed Mr. Jackson while he was sightseeing at Chattanooga. Mr. Jackson was a pioneer of Antrim county and owned considerable farm lands around Mancelona and Bellaire. He was considered very wealthy and during the last ten years he had made an annual pilgrimage to southern points to escape the rigors of Michigan winters.

Petoskey News: Otto Powers, who has been in Petoskey for some time as manager for this territory for Grimell Bros., completed plans Monday to go to Port Huron or Lansing to locate. He will go to the former city and investigate conditions, look over the territory and if he finds conditions favorable will move his family there at once. If not he will go to Lansing and look over the field there. He will probably leave Petoskey the last of this week or the first of next week. His family will remain here until he decides in which city he wishes to locate.

East Jordan Enterprise: Chas. Hudkins this week received the word that his father, Marion Hudkins, had died on Jan. 7th, at his home at Alix, Alberta, after a short attack of grippe. Mr. Hudkins was one of the earlier settlers in Wilson township, taking a homestead there in the early days. He was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic,

SYNOPSIS.

—8—

Canalet, on the steamer Kaiser Pilsk, homeward bound from Australia, cries "Fire!" in the middle of the night. Nobody pays any attention, and finds that Hilton Toye, who shares his stateroom with him, knows Craven and also Blanche Kane. Canalet recognizes Craven as a man he met in Australia, who talked to him about at Southampton Toye finds that Canalet has been shipping, and that Canalet's dream scared sight. He thinks Toye knows Craven's real name and that they discuss the murder, which was connected with Kane's disappearance. Canalet, Toye and Craven are accompanied by Evelyn Holmwood, who has escaped from prison. Canalet goes down the ladder to the engine room and finds that Hilton Toye is not there. Canalet and Toye agreed, but he is down below and will come up soon. He is going to ferret out the murderer. Toye and Canalet go down to the engine room and find Hilton Toye in the hold with Lady Yarn. Canalet goes with Hilton Toye to the place where the murder was committed, among him a man passed Canalet and Toye. Hilton Toye tells Canalet about the murder, suggests finger prints in the room, and, fearing the murderer will attack him, leaves the room. Canalet goes to his stateroom.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued.

Canalet excused himself with decision. He had a full morning in front of him. He was going to see Miss Clarion's father, and to see the late head of his fathers's old firm of solicitors, and now one of the partners, to ask them either to take up Scruton's case themselves, or else to recommend a firm against whom he meditated a criminal practice. Canalet was always at his to be elaborate in the first professional interview, and in the past or in the future because, but he was more than usual in explaining his confidential intentions in this matter that day on very near his brain.

"Going to see Scruton, too?" said Toye.

"Not necessarily," was the short reply. But it also was unknown to Canalet on a moment's consideration. The fact was that he wanted first to know if it were not possible by the intervention of a really influential lawyer to obtain the prisoner's immediate release, at any rate on bail. If impossible, he might hesitate to force his self on Scruton in the prison, but he would see.

"It's a perfect scandal that he should be there at all," said Canalet, as he rose first and shared Toye out into the lounge. "Only think: our old gardener saw him run out of the drive at half past seven, and the clock went when the real murderer must have been shivering in the Michael-Angelo attitude in Wimbledon how the devil he was ever going to get out again."

"Then you think old man Craven's begging his pardon—was getting at some clues when the man—how ever he was, came in and knocked Hilton on the head?"

Canalet nodded vigorously. "That's the likelihood thing of all!" he cried. "Then the gone west—there may even have come a knock at the door—and there was that cupboard standing open at his elbow."

"With a hole in the floor that might have been made for him!"

"As it happens, yes; he'd scarcely gone half five a rat in a hole, yet, see, and there it was as I'd left it twenty years before."

"Well, it's a wonderful yarn!" exclaimed Hilton Toye, and he lighted the cigar that Canalet had given him.

"I think it may be thought one if the police ever know how they made their find," agreed Canalet, laughing and looking at his watch. Toye had never heard him laugh so often. "By the way, Drinkwater doesn't want any of all this or, over the page, he'd drawed his man before the beak again."

"Which you mean to prevent?"

"If only I could. I more or less promised not to talk, however, and I'm sure you won't. You know so much already, you may just as well know the rest this week as well as next. If you don't mind keeping it to yourself."

Nobody could have minded this particular embargo less than Hilton Toye. He saw Canalet off with a smile that was as yet merely pitiful, and not unfriendly until he had time to recall Miss Blackett and the strange affair of the previous afternoon.

Stay, weren't they rather intimate—these two, even if they had seen each other all their lives? He had it from Hilton himself (not wanting refusal) that she was not, and never had been, engaged. And a fellow who calls wife to her mother in a year—still, they must have been darned intimate, and the funny affair would bring them together again quicker than anything.

Say, what a funny affair it was when you came to thing of it! Funny all through, it was, and a little funny being on board ship with that dream of Canalet's about the murderer, too, leading to all that talk of the old grievance against him, and extending in his actually finding the implements of the crime in his inspired efforts to save the life of whose innocence he was so positive. Say, if that Canalet had not been on his way home from Australia at the time!

Jake Drinkwater, however, Toye thought like lightning, and had reached this point before he was a hundred yards from the hotel; then he thought of something else, and retraced his steps. He retraced them even as the table at which he had sat with Canalet not very many minutes ago; the waiter was only now beginning to clear away.

"Say, waiter, what have you done with the menu that was in that toast rack? There was something on it that we rather wanted to keep."

"I thought there was, sir," said the English waiter at that unbearable tone. Toye, however, prepared to talk to him with an Australian accent and English extraction.

"You thought that, and you took it away?"

"Not at all, sir. I happened to observe the waiter—pointing out the menu in his pocket, behind your back as you were talking, and he became in passed a remark about it to the head waiter at the time."

CHAPTER IX.

Fair Warning.

It was much more than a map of the metropolis that Toye carried in his ample head. He knew the right places for the right things. He passed directly at his hosts. He was not so good-looking as Canalet, but he was more to look at for both. There had been a young fellow aboard the Kaiser Pilsk, quite a little bit of a military blood, who had come ashore in a pair of spurs, and Toye had further perverted Mr. Toye's mind just on that one point.

Captain Aylmer had said he would like to have Toye see his club and to be was assume and cared to look in for lunch. He had said so as Toye was about to leave the ship, and suddenly Toye had a mind to take him at his word right now. The idea began with those boots with cloth tops, but that was not all there was to it; there was something else that had been at the back of Toye's mind all morning, and now took charge in force.

Aylmer had talked some about a job in the war office that Canalet had him to lunch daily at the Rag; but what his job had been aboard a German steamer Toye did not know and was not the man to inquire. It was no business of his, anyway. Reference to a card traded for his own in Southampton Water, and duly filed in a commission case, reminded him of the Rag's proper style and title. And there he was eventually entertained to a number of workmanlike, rather expeditious meal.

"Say, did you see the coroner's inquest?" suddenly inquired the visitor on their way back through the hall. A married head has been carried extravagantly before the queen."

"Never want to see it again, or Genoa either," said Captain Aylmer. "The smoke—smell of it this way."

"Did you say you were there two years?" Toye had asked before, and though it were a corn.

"Two whole days, and weld had a night in the Bay of Naples just before."

"Is that so? I only came aboard at Genoa. I guess I was wise." added Toye, with a laugh that was meant for something else. There was no sort of feeling in his voice, but he was quicking his left thumb.

"I say, you've cut yourself."

"I guess it's nothing. Knife too sharp! Grease don't worry Captain Aylmer. I was going to say I only got on at Genoa, and that couldn't give me a room to myself. I had to go in with Canalet; that's how I saw so much of him."

It was Toye's third and separate interrupted attempt to introduce the name and fame of Canalet as a natural topic of conversation. Twice his host had listened with admantine politeness; this time he was enjoying quite the second-best liqueur brandy he had at the Rag; and he leaned back in his chair.

"You were rather impressed with him, weren't you?" said Captain Aylmer. "Well, frankly, I wasn't, but it may have been my fault."

"I was only going to ask you one thing about Mr. Canalet," Toye said, and I guess I've a good right to—seeing though there's no time to state it now. What did you think of him, Captain Aylmer, on the whole?"

"Ah, there you have me. 'On the whole,' I can't say I liked him, at any rate, answering the straight question readily enough. 'I thought he was a very good chap as far as Naples, but after Genoa he was another being. I'm sometimes wonder what happened to him three or four days ashore."

"Three or four, did you say?"

And at the last moment Toye would have played Wedding Guest to Aylmer's Ancient Mariner.

"Yes; you see, he knew these Germans beside—spent a couple of days at Genoa, so he landed at Naples and did his Italy overland. Rather a good idea, I thought, especially as I said, he had friends in Rome; but we never heard of 'em beforehand, and I should have let the whole thing drop—he soon sooner if I'd been Canalet. Soon enough to take a hand-bag and a toothbrush, eh? And I don't think I should have run it quite so fine at Genoa, either. But there are run birds in this world, and always will be!"

Toye felt one himself as he picked his way through St. James' square. If it had not been just after lunch, he would have gone straight and had a cocktail, for of course he knew the only place for them. What he did was to shy round out of the square, and to obtain for the asking, at another old haunt, on Cockspur street, the latest little time-table of continental trains. This he carried, not on foot but in a taxi, to the Savoy Hotel, where it kept him busy in his own room for the best part of another hour, but by the time Hilton Toye looked more than an hour older than on sitting down at his writing-table with pencil paper and the little book of trains, he looked horrified, he looked distressed, and yet he looked crafty, determined and immensely alive. He proceeded, however, to take some of the life out of himself, and to add still more to his apparent age, by repairing for more inward light to a Turkish bath.

Now the only Turkish bath, according to Hilton Toye's somewhat exclusive code, was not even a hundred yards from Canalet's hotel; and there the victim of the morning again presented himself before the afternoon; now merely a little worn, as a man will look after losing a stone an hour on a warm afternoon, and a bit blue again about the chin, which of course looked a little deeper and stronger on that account.

"Did I Tell You I'd Any Friends There?"

"Canalet was not in; his friend would wait, and in fact waited over an hour in the little lounge. An evening paper was offered to him; he took it listlessly, scarcely looked at it at first, then took it in his anxiety to find something he had quite forgotten—from the newspaper end. But he was waiting so anxiously as before when Canalet arrived in tremendous spirits.

"Stop and dine!" he cried out at once.

"Sorry I can't; got to go and see somebody," said Hilton Toye.

"Then you must have a drink."

"No, I thank you," said Toye, with the decisive courtesy of a total abstainer.

"You look as if you wanted one; you don't look a bit fit," said Canalet, more kindly.

"Nor am I, sir!" exclaimed Toye. "I guess London's no place for me in the fall. Just as well, too, I judge, since I've got to fight out again straight away."

"You thinking—"

"Yes, sir, this very night. That's the worst of a business that takes you to all the capitals of Europe in turn. It takes you so long to fit around that the minute you know when you've got to start in again."

"Which capital is it this time?" said Canalet, his eyeglass in place and he had been dashed very visibly for the moment. But already his high spirits were reasserting themselves; indeed, a cynic with an ear might have caught the note of modest consolation in the question that Canalet asked so briskly.

"Got to go down to Rome," said Toye, watching the effect of his words.

"But you've just come back from there!" Canalet looked no worse than surprised.

"No, sir. I missed Rome out; that was my mistake, and here's the situation—been developing behind my back."

"What situation?"

"Oh, why, it wouldn't interest you! But I've got to go down to Rome whether I like it or not, and I don't like it any because I don't have any friends there. And that's what I'm doing right here, I was wondering if you'd do something for me, Canalet."

"If I can," said Canalet, "with pleasure." His smile were gone.

"I was wondering if you'd give me an introduction to those friends of yours in Rome?"

There was a little pause, and Canalet's face had showed between his eyes, motioning them. It was at that moment the only touch of color in his face.

"Did I tell you I'd any friends there?"

The sound of his voice was perhaps less hoarse than pointed. Toye made himself chuckle as he sat looking up out of sober eyes.

"Well, if you didn't," said he, "I guess I must have dreamed it."

Unpretentious Gown for Semi-Dress

The simply constructed and graceful gown pictured above makes no pretention to novelty, excepting little details of its finishing. It is a dignified and generally becoming design, without too strong a flavor of the present styles to outlive them. A gown so constructed would be a good model to select for copying in a dress which is to consist of a single season and prove useful in time to come.

The model as shown is suited to the stout or short figure. It should be made somewhat fuller for a tall woman, and the length broken by additional bandings. Very successful dresses like it are made of crepe or any of the supple satins, with several narrow bands of fur at intervals between the hem and knees. Chiffon cloth has been used in the same way. Fur bandings are not as becoming to the stout figure as flat bandings of velvet, and the latter must be used carefully.

The plain blouse corresponds with the skirt in simplicity of design, and is joined to it in a very graceful way. High, round buttons, covered with the fabric, provide a decoration and reappear down the front of the skirt. The shoulders are long, and the sleeves are in modified dolman shape, with a plain turn-back cuff.

When fur takes the place of velvet, it is discovered in the narrow belt of white sable, leather with ribbon set on at each side in cartridge-belt fashion. It fastens with a dark buckle at the right side.

A moderately wide straight band finishes the neck, affording a support for any one of the numerous new collars and accessories in vogue, and which the wearer may show her regard for "ashes" last word. One of the several advantages of a simply made frock lies in the fact that one may wear accessories of so many different kinds with it.

Hand-Made and Factory-Made Lingerie

Lingerie that is factory made is as good as that which is hand-made, so far as beauty of design is concerned. Its makers must design it with reference to the possibilities and the limitations of machinery. But the various stitches and the finishing touches may be equaled by machinery. It is possible to imitate much handwork very closely, but not all of it, and the variety of design possible in garments to be made at home would not be profitable in those made in a factory. The seamstress, on the other hand, may copy any of the factory designs and improve on them.

Two attractive new nightdresses are shown here for the consideration of those who make their underwear at this season of the year. One of them is entirely handmade, except for the seams, which are felled on the machine. It is cut from linen in the 36-inch width, of a single length, equal to twice that of the figure. This is folded over at the center and stamped for the embroidery at the neck and sleeves. The hemstitching is finished with a double scallop, and the sleeves are slashed on the upper arm with all edges finished with embroidered scallops.

Small sprays in a flower pattern are embroidered at each side of the slash in the sleeve and at the front of the neck. Eyelets are worked about the neck opening for carrying a narrow ribbon drawn in. This pattern is made in fine cotton batiste with a remarkably good result. For silk and finer flower sprays for decoration.

The machine-made gown is of raisin-colored batiste, with edging of lace and having inserts of Swiss embroidery. Either narrow val or ecluny lace is used for this work, the former being the more fine for wearing qualities. The very short sleeves are trimmed with insertion and lace.

This is a practical garment and the model might be copied in hand-crocheted lace and hand-embroidery for a very elegant gown. In this case the insertion would be introduced in place of one of the embroidered flower sprays, and a fine grade of organdie would be used instead of the one indicated for the Swiss embroidery. Also the flower sprays could be varied and two or three different designs used.

Hand-crocheted yokes and lingerie collars are not to be overlooked by those ambitious to own handmade underwear. Their beauty, durability and shapeliness commend them, inasmuch as the yarn goods to go with them, durability is to be borne in mind, and it is to be found in the sheer fabrics which they are well woven.

Cuff Trimming.

Cuff trimming on women's skirts is a fashion feature obviously borrowed from masculine styles. Man's trousers are hemmed with cuffs for many years but skirts have only recently adopted the practice. Present indications are the cuffed skirt in tailored costumes. The cuff turns up across the back only, from side seam to side seam, and is wider at its center than at the seams where it starts. Other garments have cuffs all around, the edge of the skirt turned up and stitched in the hungarian boot. The idea is not a bad one to consideration of possible longer skirts coming. It will be an easy matter to let down the cuff and attach a facing underneath.

For Blouses.

Georgette crepe is the most favored material for this dressy separate blouse, and the very pale tints, such as champagne, flesh-pink and ivory, are most in demand.

Flounces Rule the Day.

It is interesting to realize that lace and muslin flounces are becoming more and more popular. Just now these are chiefly applied to evening frocks, but later on, when the warm days come, we shall find flounced and pulled street frocks universally popular. Quite a number of dresses are flounced from waist to hem, one fashion of the kind having its opposite directions per well wide.

The flounces are made of the finest and softest lace or embroidered muslin, and is many cases the cost was one of a distinctly "home" job, simply gathered back and front and held in place by a sash made of black velvet ribbon or supple satin.

Naturally.

"Did you see where a husband in Pittsburgh accused his wife of that whenever his wife wanted him to give her money she told his false teeth on. Oh she got it?"

"Poor fellow! No wonder he was down in the mouth."

FETTERED BY CASTE

AMERICAN WRITER CRITICIZES SYSTEM IN BRITAIN.

High Governmental Places Reserved for Members of the Aristocracy—Fitness Considered a Matter of Little Moment.

In an old and stable land, governed by a monarchy, with social standards as fixed as the metal foundations, the conventions played no enormous part, and the conventions in England were strictly observed. Yet I have been amazed since that ruled, that inside my society, that held all the positions worth mentioning, I was the only man in it. I been assured by Americans, Canadians and Australians that what most impressed them in that England which has been killed by the war was the prevalence of the caste system. They were quite right. Sydney Brooks states in the North American Review. The caste system was beyond doubt the outstanding feature of the British structure. It was the caste system that made the West end of London the governing center of the empire. It was the caste system that in every British ministry reserved an enormous number of places for the aristocracy, whose fitness for them was based, plainly on the unfortunate fact of birth, manners and social position. Nobody pretended that they were the best men for the offices they filled or that the country would not have been running along far value for its money. They were there by birth, and they were born with the purple and could not be got rid of. Hence politics in England remained an affair of friends, and the ballotting business, as the war has shown best of all, was a game played by people with a set of charming, wealthy and comfortable manners, who were socially, and industrially rather than politically that the caste system worked most well. It was in the social tissue that made the English atmosphere between the middle classes so difficult to breathe (or breathe) for me. I, I believe, that he felt himself in a very high degree the victim of idea which then in his own country where a man's worth was in the circumstances expected, and was expected, to die in ordinary circumstances, where the scope of his efforts was traced beforehand by the accident of position, where he was hampered in all cases and crushed in most by the superior weight of overwhelmed "good form," and the dominating articulateness and intellectual ease of society.

That unmanageable buoyance which infects the American air like a sting and invigorates and drives every American with the inspiration that he has a chance in life; that here are open opportunities, unreserved possibilities, no battering at locked doors, no floundering down blind alleys that have, in short, it is the man himself who makes his career—is something which England lacks. It is not so much an absurdity but so to be hardly capable of realizing it. The number of things that an English "gentleman" and still more an English "lady" could and do without being social caste was so prodigious as to form almost a schedule of forbidden things. Trade, business, the trades and professions and occupations that ever "respectable" and city ones which were not. Only an Englishman knows what a sting, and how it knew it by an instinct which was born in him, which he never examined, and he could not define. Some fear, and conventional gradations exist, of course, to some extent everywhere, but nowhere were they so stereotyped, nowhere did they strike so deeply as in the caste system of England. I was not a single Englishman who had not the social privilege of despising some other Englishman, and the lower one generated in the social scale the more prompter and mysterious and the more rightly drawn did these lines of demarcation seem.

Prison Fare for Children.

Think of the little children, whether they are young or not.

Children are children always.

They cannot understand why people should be cooped up in jail. We have our consciences, it is a linguistic thing to spoil it and make the little ones old before their time.

Never let your cares pull you down, for your loss is not theirs. The little children are shut out of a pleasant home.

Break your heart if you will, but do not break the liberty of the family circle. Let their joy and laughs win you back to your home. Let their prattle and their pleasures be the solemn years come to them and our names then stamps to simple delights.

Remember that you had your children, and how you suffered from and nonsensures around you. Give them the strength of purpose and fightheart, remarks a correspondent of Farm and Home. Let them see the sunshine and the milk is goes' milk produced by a number of good dairies, one of which has a fine herd of Jerseys. These goes up their living from the surrounding hot, dry country, and they are not only moderately covered with sagebrush and cactus, a cow would starve to death, but the goats, though fed neither hay nor grain, are in an average as good condition.

With Money in His Stomach.

Before the estate of Albert Hallen, eighty-five years old, could be settled a post mortem operation was necessary to remove from his stomach a $10 gold piece which Hallen had included in his will bequeathing $200. Investigation showed the sum bequeathed had over the sum at hand, the gold had been swallowed several days by Mr. Hallen in excitement, apparently, in making his will.—Portland Dispatch Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

SYRUP OF FIGS FOR A CHILD'S BOWELS

It is cruel to force nauseating, harsh physic into a sick child.

Look back at your childhood days. Remember the "dose" mother insisted on—castor oil, calomel, cathartics. How you hated them, how you fought against taking them.

With our children it's different. Mothers who cling to the old form of physic simply don't realize what they do. The children's revolt is well-founded. Their tender little "insides" are injured by them.

If your child's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing, give only delicious "California Syrup of Figs." Its action is positive, but gentle. Millions of mothers keep this harmless "fruit laxative" handy; they know children love to take it; that it never fails to clean the liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach, and that a teaspoonful given today saves a sick child tomorrow.

Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on each bottle. Adv.

CURED OF BRIGHT'S DISEASE.

Mrs. A. L. When the doctors pronounced my case Bright's Disease I felt that it was a serious condition that they could not do anything for me. But I kept getting worse. My limbs from my ankles up to my knees swelled and my eyes were so swollen that I couldn't see. As a last hope I thought I would give Dodd's Kidney Pills a trial. Harm Done by Hertzian Waves.

Ever since the extensive commercial use of wireless telegraph, there have been many who believe that the powerful Hertzian waves seriously affect organic life. In fact, some have even suggested that laws or regulations should be enacted to protect organic life against wireless waves. With a view to determining the extent and nature of the radio waves' influence on organic life and climate, Dr. C. Abel-Musgrave recently asked several questions on the subject to be answered by a number of prominent German scientists. The answers to their questions were that wireless waves have no influence on organic life, nor do they alter climatic conditions, although it is true that certain electrical stresses are capable of affecting wireless waves.

What Was the Attraction?

"What's become of that young man who used to call on you, Tom?" asked one bosom friend of another.

"George Macpherson, do you mean?" answered Tom bitterly.

"Yes. He was always calling at your house, wasn't he?"

"I can't understand him," said Ethel, with a sigh of regret. "He was contrary fits and she was forced to give up the party.

"Oh, well, perhaps I am getting too far on the shady side of giffhood to join in with these young people's ventures," poor Una tried to cheat herself into believing—but she had not the vacity to realize her own rare beauty and grace.

"A dash of nutmeg and I'm through with the cake," announced Una a minute later.

She reached up to the cobbler over the kitchen table and took down a jar. It held the nutmegs but some sticky sugar arabia prevented them from shaking out. Una squeezed her shapely hand through the open top to loosen them.

"Oh, dear," she cried, "now I've done it. I can neither get my hand out nor down my nut."

The mouth of the jar was fitted to her wrist like a boxing glove. She was dismayedly deciding that to be released she must break the jar, when she turned like a shot.

"Hey, there, my pussy!" a gruff voice hailed her and the shadow of a tramish intruder fell across the floor.

Una stood petrified. The man was fierce looking, the vicious gleam of his eyes was hidden by a red and lacquered and inlaid box in his hand. He thrust his head, dear reader, in a small lady's jeweled watch and said hurriedly:

"Give me a dollar for that, young lady, and it's yours."

At a glance Una realized that the man must be a thief, for the little watch was brilliantly set with diamonds.

"No," she said, "I can give you no money."

"You'd have to, or I'll slit that pretty white throat of yours!" hissed the man warningly. Aha! there's a purse!" he shouted, as he made out a small pocketbook lying on the edge of the dresser.

He snapped the lacquered box close shut and placed it on the sink extension, starting for the purse.

"I've got, or get one of you quick—I've got to have money!" he muttered.

Redeemed From Bondage

By ISOBEL MUIR RANDALL

(Copyright, 1919, by W. G. Chapman.)

"No one had ever come after Una Prince—that is, to the very of a lower. She had never thought much about herself, for her life was a busy one. Those who knew her and esteemed her, however, marveled at the village swains who picked out all sorts and conditions of girls, passing over the jewel of the lock, to their satisfaction.

Una was an orphan and for two years had been housekeeper for the Wendells, husband and wife, rich, but parsimonious, cold, crabbed, exacting. They valued her, but they pinned her down to an irksome servitude. Mrs. Wendell was an invalid, and the manager of Una's heart was compelled her to be quite a daughter to her ailing, capricious old woman out of a pure sense of duty.

It was the social side of affairs that deprived Una. She had been used to company, entertainments, sleighing and skating in the wintertime, tennis and boating in their season.

When her father died she had to give up all these out of sheer necessity. Mr. Prince had left next to nothing and Una went to the city and found a position as typist in a stuffy crowded little office.

It took a year to drive the velvet bloom from her cheek and the vivacity of a naturally joyous nature from her eyes. She had a sick spell and her physician urged Una back to the pure air and unclouded sunshine of Brookfield.

Then the opportunity with the Wendells came her way. She was in the kitchen of their house, preparing a cake. She burned a pretty cheerful tune as she went about her work. Then a burst of girlish laughter from the next yard caused her lip to quiver slightly and her fair brow clouded. The resilience beyond the next dividing hedge was occupied by a wealthy young widow, a Mrs. Mallory, who had rented it for a summer home. She had invited numberless

Drying Hawaiian Race

TAKING FOR

T 18 announced that the territorial government of Hawaii will restore to their former grandeur the sanitorium established on Molokai island. Several impressive examples of three-twelfth century editions are said to be in such a state of preservation that work upon them may be undertaken with certainty as to the correctness of the restoration. The Mookini temple, one of the most strikes, is described as having walls aggregating over 50 feet with a breadth of eight feet and a height of 20 feet.

The Hawaiians are an interesting people, seemingly, in early distinction as a result of their contact with the invading and appropriating white man who brought them, along with the constitutions of his religion, decimating disease, devastating vices—to which the Kanaka took like duck to water—and advice "about the importance of statemonsucess and six days work a week." "'s has been neglected by the natives, as it is usually in bumpy climates.

Primitive Conditions Changed.

The Hawaiians, when their Eden was discovered, were as a race wholly unconventional, in the sense in which the term is used against what agitators of a sort term the sacrosanctodeuse of the conventions which covers the "sections of the sensible, intelligent, conservative conventions differing in detail, but based in common upon the requirement of chastity in women and fixing for failure to meet that requirement sindry social penalties. There was no word in the Hawaiian language for modesty. Children born the names of their mothers because that method of naming them was the only practical one where the question of paternity was so frequently unanswerable.

The habits of the people were extremely licentious," writes a chronicler, imbued with the spirit of the spiritual conquest of the pagans by the Anglo-Saxon with his sturdy virtues of honesty, thrift and industry and his moral austerity, "but this state of things was greatly modified by the missionaries."

How greatly the state of things was altered is indicated by figures less hopeful than the reports of the missionaries. Of the Hawaiians, "the pleasure-loving sport-loving, sincere, earnest yearning, affectionate, sensitive, shockingly life and care-free Kanakas soon began to disappear under the curse of European disease with air before a burning sun."

In spite of moral and material progress," says the chronicler, "in spite of better food, better clothing, better shelter and many other advantages of civilization, the race is dying out. "In spite of" should have been "because of," but how shall the Anglo-Saxon vindicate his moral conquest of the people and his appropriation of the land unless he sticks to "in spite of?"

Those who have children have few. The men who were, in pagan days nothing more than a loin cloth, wear European trousers and shirts. The women whose only clothing was a "tapa" petticoat, made from mulberry bark and reaching from the waist to the knee, wear the enveloping "holoku," counterpart of "mother hubbard" which Christian modesty dictated. Nearly everyone understands the European mode. But the rain is dying! In a little while the "Sandwich Islanders" who were, in many ways an unusual people and who, for cause of the benign climate and their exceptional health, enjoyed a life of much singing, dancing and surf bathing with few difficulties and little dole will have gone the way of the Carib Indians under Spanish rule.

Rice Culture in Porto Rico.

Experiments in lowland rice culture recently started in Porto Rico are arousing much interest there, because rice is the chief food consumed in the island. Porto Rico has spent approximately $500,000 annually during the last four years for this cereal, and is the largest export consumer of American-grown rice.

SAW THINGS IN NEW LIGHT

Society Woman Frotted by Rector's Sensitive Remarks on the Subject of Snobbishness.

"But, my dear Doctor Brown, "exclaimed Mrs de Pyster, "however sensitive these people may be, you don't mean that I ought to treat them as my social equals?"

"And why not?" asked the rector. To the lady his voice did not seem so sympathetic as usual.

"Well, really," she returned, a little embarrassed, "it seems obvious that they are different."

"The differences you speak of are merely petty, silly and wicked distinctions without real significance. What course a man wears, who his father and mother were, what opportunity for achieving he had or was denied—do these things give any intimation of the man's essential worth or value?

"Once, at a fashionable summer resort I sat watching the crowd bathing. Among two-three-pre were conspicuous. It was a pleasure to see their broad shoulders, their deep chests, their splendid limbs. Finally they left the water and disappeared into their bathhouses. Presently they reappeared in overalls! They were Warren building a house next to my cottage. Some of those who saw them, their physical superiority had vanished under their working clothes.

"Some day," continued the doctor, "we shall all be made over into angels and our bodies as well. Some who on earth seemed very impress in with their dirt and their extraordinary faces and bodies will then look pitifully shrivelled and abnormal.

"If you could look into the army, have half of some great castle and see the butler refusing to associate with the stableman, and the cook holding herself superior to the dishwasher, I would seem to you utterly silly and addicted for people to make such ridiculous distinctions! But are they much more absurd than we when we make the same kind of distinctions among our fellows?

Mrs de Pyster smiled. "I suppose we are absurd," she said.

"If we were only absurd it wouldn't matter so much," returned the doctor. "But it is not simply ludicrous. Snobbery isn't a minor fault, it is a major error. It is one of the great sins. If I'm a snob, it increases in my heart I despise my fellow men, and have set myself up as their superior. I have repudiated the very heart of the message of Christ. I have cut myself off from common humanity with which Christ proudly identified himself. 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me,' means that Christ actually lives in humble human kind. For me to be a snob means that I have cut myself off from humble humankind—and consequently from Christ himself. That is a serious thing."

Mrs. de Pyster no longer smiled. "It is a serious thing. It's an awful thing!" she cried. "God be merciful to me a snob!"—Youth's Companion.

How to Get Efficiency.

Here is some advice to some tired business man. If you are not getting efficiency from your typist don't scold her, but get some music. This will speed up the tired typewriter operator. The idea is suggested by the management of a business college, says the New York correspondent of the Pittsburgh Dispatch. He claims that he gets better work from his students when he turns on the phonograph and it plays some lively fashion. And now the crafty employers here are thinking of putting the suggestion in action. The office is to turn loose a lively record on a talking machine the lively strain of music and the strain under which the typewriter operator is laboring. The moment the weary worker hears the invigorating sound she strikes her key on the type writer, and then all of the keys. Somebody has observed that the modern dancer do not confine the action to the feet. No, the shoulders, elbows and arms have a chance to cut loose. Every step forward is welcomed by progressive business men, so why not one step?

Whistle Scared Thieves.

S. Stanzel's ability to give a correct imitation of a police whistle on his fingers saved the day's receipts of his restaurant when a lone robber entered and drove him out of the back door. "Get out of here, quick!" the robber commanded as he entered the front door of Stanzel's place, flourishing a revolver. Stanzel dropped a boring knife and ran for the rear exit. As he passed through the door the robber fired a shot at him. The bullet embedded itself in the door casing.

On reaching the oven Stanzel, with his fingers to his lips, cut loose with a shrill whistle so nearly like the metal whistles used by policemen that the robber ran out of the place at top speed.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

RATTLER IS MUCH MALIGNED

Hated Reptile Not Nearly So Black as He Has Been Painted by Those Who Do Not Like Him.

Rare, indeed, are wild creatures of this continent which are capable of causing the love and respect that the rattlesnake causes.

A big part of the fear is unfounded. He's dangerous, but there's no use of being frightened at him. In the first place, he usually gives you an unmistakable warning, a little hissing like when he rattles with his tail.

He gives his warning with a set of sleigh-bell rattles on the end of his tail. So, if he is not easily made angry, he gives you a good chance to get away. Some people believe that the snake added a rattle each year and that you could tell his age by the number of rattles. It is known that some times he will grow three rattles in a year and that did make some time a lesser a rattle or two.

His color varies from yellowish brown to dark brown. The snake is darkest just before he sheds his skin, which may be two or three times a year. When he makes an attack he doesn't "shoot through the air" and he cannot strike farther than his own length, usually not that far. Since the common rattlesnake rarely grows beyond five feet in length, you see his range is limited.

Nor is he so hungry for human flesh as most persons would along. Pulse, mice and rats every year to make him the farmer's friend instead of a hated enemy

Luck Ladies.

An Ellis person chanced to see a wagon loaded with young ladies. Pulse at street. Had been pursued it. At Broadway, the driver sleepily tried to cross in disregard of the traffic policeman's ample and warning hand. His number was jotted down in the book of that recording angel and a summons was handed up. A few yards beyond, and the horse, tired of harnessed in the shafts before he could run. Another block, and somebody was digging a hole in the street to put in some kind of a main for somebody else. The off wheels of the wagon rolled too near, and the vehicle careened and slid into the excavation. It had to be unloaded laboriously by hand before it could be jacked up level again.—New York Evening Post.

"Dad," said the prodigal son, "now that I'm home again and have had my fling, I'm going to do something to make you proud of me."

"Well, dad?"

"How much is this new venture of yours going to cost me?"

Time's Changes.

"I see that Fifi Flubdub the actress, is so temperamental that she swoons at the door of taborines. Be her management has to watch her constantly."

Breadth of Heart.

But after all, what is happiness? Efficiency, wealth, material comfort? Many by their lives do so affirm; few are courageous enough to say so, and on their deathbeds none will feel so. Not even freedom in itself brings happiness. Happiness lies in breadth of heart. And breadth of heart is that inward freedom which has the power to understand, feel with and, if need be, help others. In breadth of heart are founded justice, love, sacrifice; without it there would be no special meaning to any of our efforts, and the sale of all human life would be still no more than that of supremely gifted animals, many of whose communities are highly efficient, and have intensive unity founded on experience of its utility, but none of that conscious altruism which is without perception of future benefit to self, and works from a sense of the worth of its own beauty. THERE'S ALWAYS OPPORTUNITY

T. CHARLES RUSSELL

THIS YOUNG MAN HAS INVENTED A NEW FORM OF AEROPLANE THAT MAKES FLYING SAFER. WEALTH IN SIGHT FOR HIM AFTER LONG STRUGGLE AGAINST ODDS.

By JERLE DAVIS.

If a young fellow has the right stuff in him there is no limit to his soaring—especially if he invents an aeroplane that is as safe as a rocking chair. And this is the mission which Mr. T. Charles Russell, a Chicago inventor, faces. After five years of hard work and nightmare odds he stands on the threshold of wealth and fame.

Seven or eight years back Russell was a trendman in the academic course at Northwestern university. Not that he ill. He had an uncanny knack for understanding the why and wherefore of electricity and machinery, and was able to earn his way through college by doing odd jobs for a light and power company.

During the four years he put in at literature, languages, mathematics and other subjects contained in a college arts course he was thinking along on the side with toy aeroplanes of his own devising. Finally he was always working out the details of a dream—one of the kind of dreams that have made Edison, the Wrights, Hammond, Bell and Marconi scientific conjurers.

After he had received his bachelor of arts degree, this young man—he was born at Midland, S. D., twenty-seven years ago—went into the engineering school and specialized in physics and engineering. Then he began to experiment with his aeroplane for all he was worth. Because it wasn't a part of the regular course, Russell had trouble getting shop space in which to do this work. The school authorities, he says, had mapped out a prescribed course and they considered that a deviation from it would mean confusion in the ranks.

He even went before the trustees and made a plea for special concessions, but without success. Sympathetic members of the faculty came to the rescue, however, and Russell found room in Dearborn observatory to make experiments at night. Dozens of models were made, tried out and broken. The experiments had gone forward with fair steadiness for three years and longer, when the young man felt that he had discovered and worked out satisfactorily the principles of aerodynamics he had sought.

That was three years ago. Then he went gunning for patent rights. It was easy enough to get simple ones, but the inventor wanted basic patents. Simple patents cover processes and methods, while basic patents cover principles. Be after another long wait, voluminous correspondence and endless dealing with lawyers, Russell was notified a few weeks ago that the basic patent rights were his.

He carried the glad news to a fraternity friend. The friend carried it home to his father. The father held out a business trip and invited Russell to Boston capitalists. And the Boston capitalists put an aviation expert in Chicago to talk to young Russell and see what he had. Was the man who "the goods" selfishly, for a short time afterward a company was organized, a foreign agent—supposed to be representatives of the Anglo-French-Russian alliance—signed contracts, a big factory was leased and the inventor went on to the plant to supervise the manufacture of the machines.

Just before Russell went home from the Chicago newspapers printed brief accounts about the patent rights and the company formed to use them. Very little was said about the inventor. When he was approached for the inside story of his labors Mr. Russell was very to the point. He was found in a little chicken-coop office which occupies a corner in the machine shop where his work was done. His sleeves were rolled high and his hands were grimy. He talked and worked in a manner conversation difficult, but not so difficult as the young inventor himself made it—for he is a shy and reticent person, who would make a poor advertiser. But once he began to talk about his machine he was a whirlwind of impulsive speech, making quick, draftsmanlike sketches to illustrate his points.

His aeroplane differs in shape from all other known makes. It is a biplane. That is it has two sets of wings, one above the other, and one other machines the planes spread straight across, and with the body and tail form a big cruciform. In the Russell machine the wings form a double V, like this: VV. The tail is attached to the place where the lower pair and extends to the rear. The narrow points of the wings form the front of the machine, and the pilot, passengers and engine company occupy a sort of canoe which rests where the wings and tail join. The lower wings extend forward of the upper one—like a man with an underbite jaw. The two propellers twirl on either side of the tail just back of the wings.

Mr. Russell didn't have war in mind when he was working on his invention. His idea centered in commercial possibilities. So long as the aeroplane remained unstable—so long as it was hard to keep his hands on the controls to prevent the machine's capsizing—it would remain a sporting proposition. But when the time came that the improvements in the aeroplane, the driver need only crank up and guide, simply as he would guide an automobile, the flier would be very useful in business and pleasure.

In the double-V machine the young inventor believes he has discovered the great secret of inherent stability. Placed in the positions described, the wings present a broad surface to air currents on all sides. "The dangerous air pockets are no longer dealt again in the atmosphere." Russell declares.

All present types of fliers—that is, all the new ones both in this country and abroad—use a gyroscopic control. This is a sort of governor, like the governor on a stationary steam or gas engine, that automatically warps the aeroplane wings to meet constantly varying air surfaces when the machine is in flight. These devices are just emerging from the experimental stage.

With the gyroscopic stabilizer doing the work, what is the advantage of the Russell machine? Let Russell tell:

"The stabilizing devices are all artificial controllers. If the stabilizer gets out of fix when the machine is 5,000 feet above ground it means sudden and possible death for the passengers. The safer machine is one that needs no such controller. It is a machine whose very shape is an automatic controller—a real automatic controller that cannot be tinkered with if the machine is to leave the ground at all."

This new aeroplane can be made in any size. It is understood that the fliers being constructed in Boston will have a wing spread of a hundred feet or more and will carry twenty passengers. Each developing 150 horse power. Machines of this size and power are capable of carrying half a dozen passengers, one or two rapid-fire guns, fifty to a hundred aerial explosive bombs, fuel for a 500-mile flight and scientific instruments for navigation. They can travel rapidly, too—fifty to ninety miles an hour.

It is easy to imagine the value of such machines in peace as well as in war. Already the government is experimenting with aeroplane mail routes, and Postmaster General Burleson has recommended the establishment of regular aerial mail service. The possibilities are without limit. It seems—and for war—well, we know a little of what they are done with aeroplanes in Europe. All the chief belligerents are building huge planes, triple-winged and engined, that in a pinch can fly across to a thousand miles and carry half a dozen men with small cannon, ammunition and deadly bombs of large size. In a report which he has submitted to President Wilson, and which will be made public soon, Secretary of the Navy Daniels tells of some remarkable developments in aeroplane construction by American designers and inventors. He mentions specifically an aeroplane that practically sinks itself in flight. Also all the aviator has to do is to crank up and sit at the steering wheel.

Mr. Russell's explanation of the principle involved is to the point, and is thrown to the layman:

"The problem is to maintain the center of upward pressure to coincide with the center of area at all times, no matter whether the machine is in direct forward flight or is falling. This problem I have solved. If the success of all my experiments proves anything."

There is a young inventor, either at work or dreaming over work to be done, from one end of this broad land of ours. In the towns and cities you see many of his workshops—some strung from barn gables to attic windows. In the country the youngsters are tinkering over the tool benches—working away at some idea that may revolutionize an industry.

The history of young Mr. Russell should be an inspiration to every youth born without a silver spoon in his mouth. This inventor saw the light of day first in a South Dakota village. He spent some of his childhood at Evanston, another small town. He received his common school and high school education at Paw Paw, Mich., which is no metropolis. He has had to push his own financial canoe and "help the folks" besides. He has been denied opportunity and has forced his own pathway.

Does he expect riches to come immediately? This is his point of view:

I expect to get royalties later. My invention has to prove its worth first. If worth comes, it will be the reward for toil and disappointment. I certainly don't expect to sit around and wait for money to be dropped into my hat.

Let me pay a tribute to two men who have stood by me and helped to make this aeroplane in creation possible. One is Prof. Philip Fox of Dearborn observatory. The other is Prof. Henry Crew of the physics department at Northwestern. Mr. Fox helped me with my experiments at night, as one man could help another. As for Mr. Crew—the training I got under him in learning to analyze things is priceless.

This analytic training has taught me to sit down with a vague idea and prove it to the principles—to get to the heart of every proposition.

Mr. Russell's first money making invention was an electric blanket. This device looks like an ordinary bed comforter. Its stuffing, however, is interwoven with fine wires incased in asbestos. Connected with a wall plug it makes the bed quite considerable heat—enough, say, to keep an outdoor sleeper comfortable when the mercury is hobbled at the bottom of the tube. Other inventions are an accident, said to be an improvement on the cool-water bottle maker; an electric heating pad, similar in principle of construction to the blanket, and a thermostat for controlling electric heat.

What promises to be another important invention, however, is an electro-magnetic rapid-drum. Mr. Russell has been working at odd times on this idea for several months. The principle is the expulsion of missiles from a gun without the use of explosive material, he says, and experiments with workshop models have been highly gratifying.

"It may be years, though, before I perfect it," the young man smiles. "I have the idea fixed in mind and it is a matter of developing the idea. Someone else may produce a successful gun of this type before I do. I have a gun that will shoot all right, but it isn't ready for the war market by a long shot."

And just to show you that a rising young inventor is an ordinary human being like the rest of us, here's one on Mr. Russell: He didn't want the photographer to take his picture as he stood with his sleeves rolled up before a work bench because he thought that the dense growth of black hair on his arms would show when the picture appeared in this paper. Furthermore he was very careful to fix the knot of his four-in-hand the "just so" before he said, "All ready!"

PLENTY OF PANCAKES.

For a cold-morning breakfast or a chilly night supper the pancake still holds its popularity.

Bread Pancakes.—Soak some bread crumbs in hot water until soft then press out all the moisture and to one pint of the bread add two well-beaten eggs, a quarter of a teaspoonful of salt, four tablespoonfuls of melted butter and sufficient milk to make a batter. Put at the last add a teaspoonful of baking powder and fry in hot fat.

Rice Pancakes.—Boil a quarter of a pound of rice till quite soft, then drain and leave till cold. Mix with it one cupful of cream, four beaten eggs, a little salt, half a nutmeg to taste, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter and flour to form a smooth batter.

Italian Pancakes.—Heat well together two eggs, a quarter of a cupful of flour, one tablespoonful of sugar, half a cupful of warm milk, add a tablespoonful of melted butter and a few drops of lemon extract. Bake in hot buttered saucers in a hot oven for ten minutes. Serve buttered and sprinkled with sugar.

Pineapple Pancakes.—Beat two eggs well together with a dessertspoonful of rosewater, a little grated lemon rind, sugar, and then add half a cupful of cream. Put one tablespoonful of butter into a small frying-pan, and when boiling hot pour in the mixture so as to cover it to the depth of half an inch; brown; then drain well. Have ready some long slices of pineapple with one inch each pancake. Heat the whites of two eggs to a stiff froth, then add one teaspoonful of vanilla extract, divide it into two parts and fry separately; do not turn, so that it leaves the pan like snow. Lay these across the pancakes.

Stuffed Pancakes.—Beat two tablespoonfuls of butter to a cream then gradually beat in one tablespoonful of sugar, four eggs, one cupful of warm milk, pinch of salt, two tablespoonfuls of currants, the rind of a lemon and flour to form a thin batter. Fry lightly on both sides. Add to each cloudy spread with fresh or preserved fruit, roll up and keep hot until ready to serve.

THE WINTER BERRY.

The appetizing cranberry is a reasonable fruit in price, and one that is especially enjoyed as an appetizer with meals. In cooking cranberries should be used in cooking them in gratis earthenware dishes as the acid acts on the tin. Aluminum ware use porcelain are other dishes that are safe to use with acid fruits.

Pick over, wash and drain the berries to be used for sauce, add one and a half cupfuls of water to three pints of berries, let them boil until tender before adding the sugar, then add three cupfuls of sugar and cover and let it boil for a few minutes. The berries may then be put through a sieve if desired to keep the berries whole add one cup of sugar and add the berries to the boiling sirup.

A pretty dessert is this: Remove stems, wash and drain and fill with cranberry jelly, set in sherbet cups and serve with whipped cream.

Cranberry and Orange Sauce.—Squeeze the juice from an orange, add to it the rind, cut in a very fine shred, slowly to the boiling point, boil until tender, then scrape out the white part and cut the peel into narrow strips. Simmer one and a half cupfuls of raisins until tender, add the orange peel and juice and a quart of cranberries. Add more water to make a cupful of the liquid, cover and cook ten minutes or until the berries are tender. Then add two cupfuls of sugar, and boil until thick.

Cranberry Shortcake.—Sift together a quart of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one-half teaspoonful of salt. Mix with the tips of the fingers twothirds of a cupful of shortening and add milk to make a soft dough. Roll out into two thin cakes, spread with butter and place the second on top of the first. Cook together a cupful of cranberries and a half cupful each of raisins and water. When the berries are soft, stir in a cupful of sugar and a tablespoonful of cornstarch, well blended with the sugar. Flavor with nutmeg, heat well and spread on the cakes while they are hot.

GOOD THINGS FOR THE TABLE.

The ordinary rice pudding may be made a most dainty dish by serving it in sauce or garnished with candied orange peel and whipped cream. Put a row of stewed dates around the base of the pudding with pistachio nuts. Grated maple sugar and cinnamon with whipped walnuts is another appetizing garnish. Instead of the whipped cream a half pound of melted marshmallows, stirred with cream enough to melt them poured over rice and garnished with cocoa or grated chocolate.

Stuffed Egg Salad—Cook four eggs until hard, shell and cut lengthwise into halves. Remove the yolks and beat to a paste, adding a tablespoonful of drill sauce, two tablespoonfuls of minced chicken and a teaspoonful of butter. When blended fill into the egg halves, place upon a bed of crisp lettuce, pouring over a thick boiled dressing and garnish with capers and slices of pickled beets.

Apple Ramekins.—Half fill ramekins with apple sauce, filling the space with whipped cream. Cover with a short pie crust and bake. Serve hot or cold with grated cheese over the top.

Turnips With Macaroni.—Quarter and cook tender small turnips, add some seasoned macaroni to the turnips. Pour over the whole some peas hot butter, sprinkle with buttered crumbs and bake until brown.

TECHNICALITIES OF THE INDICTMENT.

The average man will never realize what an extremely technical paper the indictment is, and how long it is it must be observed against all common sense. It is one of those rules that the venue—the place where the crime is said to have been committed—must be stated in the indictment and must be proven at the trial. In Campbell county, Virginia, a prisoner named Anderson was put on trial for murder. The evidence showed that the murder took place at Anderson's store, about one-quarter of a mile from Leaches Station. The indictment did not say the murder was committed at Lynches Station and that Lynches Station was in Campbell county. It was so well known to everybody that Lynches Station was in Campbell county that it never occurred to anyone formally to introduce evidence in proof of that fact. Nevertheless this was a violation of the rules, and the supreme court reversed the verdict, holding that it would not take judicial notice that Lynches Station was in Campbell county, and sent the case back for a new trial.—Melville Davisson Post in the Saturday Evening Post.

MANLIKE TEETH OF ANCIENT APE.

Prof. A. O. Thacher, an eminent British geologist, in an article in Science Progress, mentions his recent discovery of the jaw of an ape which has teeth more closely resembling human teeth than do those of the chimpanzee and orang-utan, man's nearest relatives in the animal world.

In these animals, and in all the ancestors of the ape, the canines are much larger and longer than in man. But in this ancient ape, which lived, according to geologists, hundreds of thousands of years ago, the canines are small, like those of man. This is regarded as an indication that the development of the canine teeth in apes resulted from the necessity for their use in tearing off hunks of nuts and for like purposes.

On Barren Island

TYPE OF BARREN ISLAND HOMES

WELL, named is Barren island. Far removed, it is from the haunts of civilized man, though included in the geographical confines of Greater New York. And for the most part men are, in fact, not the inhabitants of city or national ideals, even of ambition to better their position; to make their days and nights conform measurably to standards such as other folk enjoy who are adopted sons and daughters of Father Knickerbocker's great and growing family, says the New York Sun.

Anyone with the desire to visit foreign shores, and without traveling more than an hour or so from City Hall park, can embarked into the sun was near by the municipal building, take a train for Canarsie, and at Canarsie landing stop on board a steamboat which leaves there at frequent intervals bound Barren island-ward. In an hour, more or less, the traveler will have arrived at his destination—at a land mass, as Arctic explorers put it—situate in a general direction south by east from the main borough of Brooklyn. Near by, toward the west, is Sheepshead bay; to the east is Jamaica bay, and not far off is the group of Rockaways. Thus it will be seen that Barren island, while of the beaten track of travel, is by no means inaccessible. Yet when the traveler sets foot on shore there and takes one comprehensive glance around he will realize that in all but distance he is in a foreign land.

The principal "center" of Barren island is its one great industry, that of handling refuse of the big city of which it is a humble part. This central spot is marked by the work of the reduction company, upon the operation of which Barren island and its inhabitants depend. Eastward from this great garbage plant stretches the one main avenue—broadway it is called, possibly so named many years ago by someone with a keen sense of the ludicrous. For this particular broadway is bounded on one side by a marsh, a good, representative ooze marsh at that; and along the other side are ranged the cottages occupied of the employees of the garbage plant.

In name only does this church it is said that two and sometimes three families exist. As a majority it is alleged that boarders are taken, in fact, some of these houses are so crowded, and examined with a minute look, one would find two "pickings."

Russians, Slavonians, Poles and Hungarians apparently constitute the predominant strains of population, although other peoples are to be found, including Italians. Rumor has it, in fact, that the political leader of Barren island's little squad of voters is himself an Italian, and a very keen one at that. Life down there may not be all blue and skittles—although if Brooklyn department surveyors are correct a considerable part of it may be beer or liquid cousins thereof. But so far as can be ascertained by an outsider the islanders are far from an unhappy community. They work hard, it is true, in and around the reduction plant, but when they do and their womenfolk seem to work just as hard about their little homes, while the boys and girls, when they are not attending school, find plenty of occupation in searching for hidden treasure in those huge heaps of refuse.

Happy Boys and Girls.

The boys and girls of Barren island form the leading part of the population, so far as observation of the outside visitor can detect. Of course they do not wear clothing made for them or fitted to their years and size. But there is a delightful picturesqueness about their old shawls, the shoes far too large, when existant at all, and frankly lacking one or upper; about the enveloping skirts, the occasional tam-o'-shanter hat—a wealth of grayish color and a most attractive abandon, testifying to the fact that in the opinion of these little people fine raiment occupies but a small and unimportant place in the general scheme of the universe.

And happy? Why, those sprites of the refuse heaps are as cheerful and joyous as if they were walking through fields of wild flowers up in Westchester county and chasing butterflies and gathering early buttercups. In scurrying up a hill of refuse and then sliding down the other side in fear of discovering a bit of china or a broken pitcher, or a watch chain or other trinket that can be polished and transformed into a treasure is fun.

Religious life on Barren island is represented by two churches, wherein worship is said to be earnest. As far as could be ascertained no resident pastor has been assigned to Barren island for many years, if ever. It is said that a fairly bold for science missionary effort by three organizations of one denomination or another which so generously provided missionaries, teachers, preachers, as well as schools, churches, chapels and hospital service for other islands than Barren—isles of the South Pacific, for instance—as well as for those within the polar region, the inhabitants of Barren island, have left the care of their souls to remote parts of the world.

Sapphire Always Prized.

Sapphires have been favorites of royalty, but the stones are owned by cardinals of the Roman Catholic church, the sapphire ring itself is the color of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and dignitaries of the church have worn the ring of sapphires, unofficially known as "The Clerical Stone." The sapphire is the Hope diamond which weighs 542 carats. Biblical references to sapphires: Mr. Arnold construes to mean lapis lazuli.

Unfailing Remedy.

Anxious Father—"Can you tell what ails my daughter?" Doctor—"She does not take enough indoor exercise." Father—"She does not feel like it." Doctor—"Then she is suffering up." Father—"What do you recommend?" Doctor—"A new hat."

MEN OF AGE ENJOY DANCE

Youngsters Have Nothing on Their Grandfathers When It Comes to Dancing Spirit.

"In the Women's Home Companion a sixty-year-old dancer tells how people can learn the new steps, enjoy them thoroughly, and even cut out the younger generation by their graceful manner of dancing." He himself did not begin to dance until after his sixtieth year in the form of a colonial hoary-headed fo. trotters who are going bellicoso mad.

"Bashful White," he says, "I have a number of other elderly friends and acquaintances that dance. In Florida winter colony of sixty-odd who has been taking lessons for two years. He calls up his teacher early in the morning and orders her to ala resistance and dance an hour before breakfast. I have another acquaintance who dances beautifully with his beard daughter, a girl of sixteen. I know an old fox trotter who is preferred as a partner by girls to any of his three sons, all of whom are fair dancers. He says that he used to practice in his bedroom days with a chair for a partner."

"Made in America.

Amen! "Made in America," is a phrase that will be used by the people of the United states. The famous dinner of the freshmen of the Amen Corner in New York this year was served by American. Every dish and every liquid had an American title, as the following menu will show: Oysters from Cape Cod. Mamo lobsters, Onondaka, Texas olives, Michigan celery, Florida almonds, Maryland cod, Virginia potatoes, Connecticut beans, roams, Rhode Island turkey, Vermont sugplant, New Hampshire lettuce, Kentucky pudding, Virginia sherry, California sauterne, New Jersey claret, Empire State champagne, Pennsylvania applejack and American cigarettes and cigars. Where the coffee came from we are not told, says Lenick. It might have been a silver dollar, a girl of sixteen. I know an old fox trotter who is preferred as a partner by girls to any of his three sons, all of whom are fair dancers. He

HANDICRAFT FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

WINTER WINDOW REFRIGERATORS.

A window refrigerator is one of the many conveniences which a boy can make for his mother. It may be a small affair like that shown in Fig. 1, to hold milk and cream bottles and a butter jar, or it may be built large like the one in Fig. 2, with shelf-room enough for meats and other foods.

A grocery box will do for the small refrigerator. There is little work to the making of this. Nail a narrow strip across the top near one edge, to hinge the cover to, and fasten together the cover boards with wooden strips screwed across them as in the illustration. After hinging the cover in place screw an iron hinge-hasp to it and an iron staple to the front of the box, so that a padlock can be fastened in place of chain or heavy cord to make drives into the box on one and into the edge of the cover, to keep the cover from dropping back too far when opened.

Fasten the refrigerator box upon the window sill, outside of the window sash. Then, with the cover hasped, the box will be tramp-proof, because while the window is closed there will not be room enough between the box and the glass to raise the iron hasp.

For the larger refrigerator shown in Fig. 2, get a grocery box that will extend across the entire width of the window in which the refrigerator is to be placed, or take a longer box and cut it down to fit. Place this box upon its side (Fig. 3), cut two trianglar pieces of equal size, and fasten one at each end of the box, as shown at A (Fig. 4). The front edge of these pieces should be set back an inch or more from the front edge about two inches. Make a door, which will hinge in place fasten a strip B between the door ends.

Cut boards of the right length and width to roof over the top, and nail them to the tops of pieces A and B; then cut two boards C (Fig. 7) to fit the open front of the refrigerator, and after fastening them in the position shown, cut a strip D to fit between them.

By making the pieces C wide enough, you can probably fin. two boards of the right width for doors. Hinge them to boards C as shown. Hinge one door to the illustration is easily made. Cut bar E as long as the width of one door, and screw it at one end to the center of one door; then screw two screw-hooks into the other door, so the hook ends turned up for the bar to drop onto.

Make a screwed or screw-hook into each end of the refrigerator box, twist a piece of wire around it, and bend the other end of the wire to a hook or eye screwed into the window frame.

Bore a hole through each end of the box into each compartment, for ventilation.

For Stains.

For stains on light dresses, etc. lay the garment flat on a board and cover the stains with dry pipe-clay. Leave for an hour then shake out, and apply a second lot if necessary. Take out stains as soon after they are made as possible, for if they are allowed to dry in they are more difficult to remove.

Daily Thought.

The word "tomorrow" was invented for irresolute people and for children. —Tungenev.

THREE HOMEMADE GAMES.

If you have never played the game of fish-pond (Fig 1) you have missed a great deal of fun.

Get a cardboard box for the pond, and cut down its depth to 1 inch (Fig. 2). Then cut rows of slots through the cover, as shown, for the fish to stick into.

Draw the outline of a fish up on a piece of cardboard, as shown in Fig. 3. Make it two inches long. Then cut it out, and use it as a pattern for marking out one fish for every slot in the pond. Punch a small hole through the head of each fish, to provide for hooking it. Number the fish 5, 10, 15, 20 and 25.

Each player must have a stick for a fishing pole, with a short piece of string attached to the end for a line, and a bent pin tied to the end of the line for a hook. In fishing, the line must be lowered and the fish hooked out of the pond without allowing the hook to strike any part of the fish. If the hook strikes, the turn passes on to the next player. The points scored are determined by the numbers upon the fish.

The solitaire board (Fig. 4) should be eight inches square. Divide the edges of this into eight equal parts, with ruler and pencil draw lines across from side to side, connecting the points or division (Fig 5). Then with a large nail and a hammer (or better still, with a gimlet, if there is one in the house), make holes at the intersections of the lines indicated in Fig. 5.

When the holes have been made, cut enough wooden pegs to fit all the holes.

The game is played by one person. The pegs are stuck in all but the center hole, and the game is started with a peg removed from the hole, jumping it over the peg between it and the hole, into the hole. The peg jumped over is removed. Then, one by one, the pegs are jumped over and removed. The object of the game is to jump the pegs in such an order that, finally, all but one will have been removed.

Fig. 6 shows a quickly made pet of tenpins. The spools for the bases should all be of an equal size.

Arrange the ten pins upon the floor in the position shown in Fig 6, and use three rubber balls with which to bowl them over. Each player in his turn should roll the three balls at the pins. One point is scored for each pin bowled over.

Time to Lie Still.

"Can you play dead in a battle scene?" "Dat's easy." "Not so easy as you think. You mustn't jump when the cannon are fired over your prostrate body."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Great Deeds Call for Application.

WESTERN CANADA'S GREAT HARVEST

Decidedly Encouraging From Every Standpoint.

Speaking of conditions generally in Canada, the most encouraging feature of the year, from a trade and financial standpoint, has been the bountiful harvest of the Northwest, where a greatly increased area under cultivation has given the highest average yield in the history of the country. It is estimated that the grain crop of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta has a market value to the producers of approximately four hundred million dollars, in the use of which we may anticipate not only the liquidation of much indebtedness, but the stimulation of current trade.

The annual reports of the various banks throughout Canada are now being published. They savor of optimism all the way through, and, contrary to what might be generally expected in war times, business is good everywhere.

The General Manager of the Bank of Montreal at the recent annual meeting said: "The position of Canada is a highly favored one, with an assured future of growth, development and general prosperity."

In the same report it is said that the Canadian West "has responded to a marked extent from the economic depression of a year ago."

The season's wheat and other cereal crops have exceeded all previous records in quantity and quality, and, despite the enormous yield, prices have been uncommonly well maintained.

It would be difficult to exaggerate the importance of these results to the Prairie Provinces—and the Dominion at large.

The prosperity of those engaged in mixed farming and ranching is most encouraging.

The flour mills in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are busy and are doing well. Their combined daily capacity is about 27,000 barrels.

The large advances of the Dominion Government to farmers in certain districts, principally in the form of seed, were made very opportunely and have been amply justified by the very large crop yield in those districts.

Business in many important lines is good and should continue to improve as returns from grain yet to be marketed are received.

The general business outlook has been transformed by the large crop.

The returns of the gross earnings of Canadian railroads for November show those of the Canadian Pacific to increase $1,726,000 or 78 per cent for the last nine days of the month. Compared with same month year ago, increase no less than $3,231,000 or 67.8 per cent against a 45 per cent gain in October, and a decrease of 4½ per cent in September.

H. V. Meredith, of the Bank of Montreal, is a recent additional director of Montreal, declared that the most encouraging feature from a trade and finance standpoint had been the bountiful harvest of the Northwest, where the greatly increased area under cultivation had given the highest average in history of the country. He estimated the grain crop of the three provinces at a value of over $400,000,000, and said that such remarkable results would have the effect of attracting the tide of immigration to our shores, when the world is again at peace. The restoration of a favorable balance in our foreign trade is a further source of satisfaction at the present time.

It is the general opinion in the East that the 1916 grain crop in the Prairie Provinces not only put the whole Dominion on a sound basis as regards its financial standing, but that it will also result in a big increase in immigration to the West of agricultural settlers, who will be those attracted from Europe and the United States as well as homeseekers.—Advertisement.

COSTLY CLOSING OF CANALS

How Freight Rates Have Been Increased by Interruption of World Traffic.

Trade is suffering severely from the closing of the canal, and the allegation made use of it during the months it was in operation now reaches vitally what the interoceanic waterway means to them. Our western ships sending two freight boats from the Pacific to the Atlantic, where charges are highly profitable, and finds that it will cost $15,000 more for the trip around the Horn than it would through the canal. Freight rates from the eastern to the western seaboard have about trebled. The effect of the stoppage of the canal is reflected in the greatly increased earnings of the transcontinental railroads.

Just now there is a great deal of apprehension in shipping circles lest the Suez canal be temporarily destroyed by an act of war, says Leslie's. This would mean that the shipping from the Atlantic ports of the United States and Europe to the East Indies would have to double the Cape of Good Hope. With shipping as scarce as it is now this would be a heavy blow to a commercial world already badly upset.

Her Bad Break.

Maggie was a maid in the employ of a Gotham family. One afternoon two woman visitors rang the bell and, telling them to be seated, Maggie went into another part of the house to see if her mistress were in.

"I am very sorry," said the maid, returning a minute later, "but Mrs. Brown went out and won't be back till dinner time."

"That is too bad," exclaimed one of the women, as the callers started for the door. "And to think too, that I have forgotten my cards. I will have to—"

"Never mind the cards, ma am," interjected Maggie, with a kindly disposed smile. "I told the mistress your names when I went upstairs."

SMALL-TOWN BOY NOT GONE

He Plays the Same Old Pranks and Has the Same Old Youthful Exuberance.

Not long ago a writer in a western exchange bewailed the passing of the true boy, the boy of natural impulses with a streak of old Adam, and a fine contempt for the minor ordinances. The Cleveland Plain Dealer remarks. He was the boy who plotted and executed mischief of the boyish type, who made himself a nuisance, perhaps, to the community in which he ran wild, yet never added mischief with malice aforethought to his misdeeds. He loved boy the embodiment of life and spirit and impulsiveness. In his place, as the writer points out, we have the building street corner boy, who travels in gangs and becomes the bane of the police guardians.

No doubt the author of this dissertation had in mind the boy of the rural community, not the city boy, but the small-town boy. That type of boy isn't found in the cities. They are too hampering for his roaring soul. He needs room, he requires a tolerant community, he wants a congenial atmosphere. It may be imagined that the author of the lamenting screed, having looked out through his urban window and noted no boy of the old-fashioned type, believes he and his joyous type have passed.

The small-town boy still exists, however. Every little while his boyish pranks provide material for the country correspondent. He plays the same old tricks; he exhibits the same old brand of boyish exuberance. The other day he slipped into a Delaware church where a revival service was in progress, and left a half dozen horse's ears beside the stove. When the horsets thawed out they organized an exploring expedition and the congregation promptly endeavored to leave the edifice in a body.

There is no use of worrying over the decline of the small-town boy. He hasn't vanished.

PLEA FOR INDUSTRIAL COURTS

Tribunals First Created in France Have Accomplished Good, According to This Writer.

An issue made as 1906 France created industrial courts, and the example has been followed by Germany, Belgium, land, italy and Belgium, says George Creel in the Century. "A president, who represents the public, and an equal number of workers and employers sit as a jury rather than as a court. Lawyers are barred; the parties to the dispute take turns relating grievance and defense, and in consequence of this simplicity, 90 per cent of the cases are adjusted without formal hearings. In event of threatened strikes or lockouts, the courts have the power to sit as boards of arbitration, and in only in rare cases that satisfactory agreements" are not reached."

Compare the simplicity of this procedure with the American method of frequent trials, frequent appeals, reversed decisions, remanded cases, court costs, lawyers' fees and months of delay, a gamble that no poor man dares to run. The dollar out of which an alien is cheated may mean to him the difference between a bed or a park bench and certainly his sense of justice will not inspire him with respect for democratic institutions.

GEORGE W. COOPER PASSES AWAY

CAME TO DEER PARK A QUARTER OF A CENTURY AGO—PROM INFENT ODD FELLOW

From The Deer Park (Wash.) Union.

George Washington Cooper died at his home in Spokane Tuesday morning of old age. He was 89 years old. The body was brought to Deer Park Wednesday morning and the funeral held at 11 o'clock from the Congregational church under the auspices of the local Odd Fellow lodge, of which organization the deceased had been an active member for 49 years, and a charter member.

Rev. Chas. H. Burdick officiated at the church services and the Odd Fellows at the cemetery.

Mr. Cooper was born in Wooster, Ohio, Feb. 22, 1826. He was married to Miss Caroline Powell, at Freeport, Ill., July 17, 1851, where they resided for a short time, later returning to Ohio and from there going to Charlevoix county Mich. In July 1877 they came to Deer Park, and resided here continuously until Mrs. Cooper's death, April 6, 1915. He then went to Spokane to live with his daughter.

Seven children were born to her and Mrs. Cooper, of whom three survive: M. H. Cooper, of Marquette, Mich., Mrs. E. Murray and Geo. C. Cooper, both of Spokane. He is also survived by two sisters and a brother, Mrs. Ella Foster and Mrs. Sarah Foster, of Buncetion, Mo., A. W. Cooper of Chicago, besides eight grandchildren, and twenty great-grandchildren.

Mr. Cooper was a highly respected and faithful member of the Congregational church. The greater period of his activity was spent at the carpenter trade, and he also farmed quite a little. He was a man of great industry and will be missed by his many friends.

BOYS CANVAS FOR CLUB ROOM FUND

A complete canvas is being made by the boys for club room fund. Twenty $900 is wanted to pay for their equipment, only a part of which has been obtained to date. This equipment when installed and paid for becomes the property, not of the Boyhut church or any one, but legal documents have been drawn up which makes the club the sole owners of said equipment, and I become the trustee for same.

Should the directors of the club so if they may at any time remove this equipment elsewhere.

This is quite a large undertaking and cost big money the first year but when our equipment is paid for then I believe it will be self-sustaining as not more than $250 will be needed annually.

This is quite a large sum of money to ask for but Charlevoix citizens subscribed $1657.50 for the "Y" last year and if you will be so generous with our work you will make it a permanent success.

I am glad to have the opportunity to give to the boys my best efforts in what I believe will be a great service. We earnestly request your co-operation.

Yours for the boys,

LLOYD C. VINYARD.

EMREY'S

Department Store Efficiency.

That this is the age of commercialism is even shown by the visitors to New York city. Formerly they hastened to see Eden Musee, Grant's tomb and other notable landmarks. Now their first stop is at the department stores, and these seem to be a continual surprise and an ever-increasing source of astonishment. It is hard for the visitors to realize that under one roof everything one needs from the cradle to the coffin can be obtained, and with no more difficulty or delay than the small town merchant takes to wrap up a piece of pie. Few realize what constant supervision must be exercised over every department to see that losses are cut to the minimum, and that not only every article must be kept in its place, but also that the warehouses must be well stocked with goods to take care of any early calls for renewing the stock. An example of the high efficiency under which this class of stores is run can be seen in the fur storage department of one of the local stores. During the last summer they stored over 8,000 articles valued at nearly a million dollars, and their total losses on the same were $25.—Wall Street Journal.

Earliest School Books.

Among the recent discoveries in the archeological excavations in ancient Babylonia are some stone tablets believed to have been used as school books in the first regular school ever held in the world. They have been added to the collection of the University of Pennsylvania.

These prehistoric text-books have marks proving that they were used in a school conducted in a temple in Nippur more than 2300 years B. C. This school is known to have been in existence at least one thousand years and its records have yet been found to indicate the existence of any preceding it. The tablets contain notes upon several science subjects made upon the stone surface by a stylus. Several of them contain lists of characters, indicating that the pupils attempted to copy the work of the teacher.

Herbs for Beauty.

If you can get hold of some old-fashioned herbs and use a "beauty tea" occasionally. A delightful aromatic bath which induces the free perspiration necessary sometimes for the skin's perfect health is made in this way: Thyme, 300 grams; dried rosemary, 200 grams; dried mallows, 200 grams; dried linden, 200 grams. Decoctate of such, 250 grams. Steep the herbs in eight quarts of boiling water for a half hour, decant, and dissolve the soda in the infusion. This must be put in a bath as hot as comfort will allow.

Pat's Wit Saved Him.

Pat Maguire had been misbehaving and appeared before his commanding officer, charged for the third time with the crime of drunkenness. After Pat had stated his case the colonel, in grave tones, said: "Pat Maguire, you confined in barracks." But in endeavoring to write the "9" on Pat's dockaffair sheet the pen sputtered. Pat noticed this, leaned forward, and, in a loud whisper, said: "They'll it will seem a venth, sir." This remark caused a general burst of laughter, and Pat saved his bacon.

County Normal Notes

(Florence Milner)

Mrs. E. J. Chellis was a visitor at the County Normal room on Wednesday afternoon last week.

Mrs. Richard Lewis called at the Normal room last Wednesday.

It is inspiring to hear that some of the former graduates are pushing upward in their work. Word has been received from Miss Kathryn La Peer, a graduate of class 1905, that she is attending the normal at Ypsilanti.

Miss Ruth Conley completed in the second and third grades of the south ward school on Tuesday, Miss Mary Finnegan was in with a grippe.

Miss Marcia Goss taught the Sophomore and Freshman English classes last Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday mornings, on account of the illness of Miss Northrop.

The Normal classes greatly appreciated the invitation extended to them by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, to attend their meeting at the home of Mrs. A. Edwards.

Gladys Boles and Beatrice Barbour were visitors at the Normal room on Friday afternoon.

Friday afternoon the Normal room was open to the public, anyone was welcome to come and see the art exhibition, sent from the grammar schools of Grand Rapids. Some fine talent was displayed in this exhibition, but not any better than our Charlevoix boys and girls could send out.

HONOR FOR NEW BRITISH OFFICIAL

H. L. Samuel First Professing Jew to Be Home Secretary.

NOT A STRANGER IN OFFICE

Successor of Sir John Simon Spent Four Years in Home Department as Parliamentary Undersecretary of State—Is Not Only Member of His Creed in Cabinet.

London.—For the first time in her history of nearly 2,000 years England has a professing Jew in the role of principal secretary of state to the crown.

True, Benjamin Disraeli attained the dignity of premier, but as the Earl of Beaconsfield. But he was a member of the Church of England. He has father before him, whereas Herbert Lewis Samuel, who recently succeeded Sir John Simon as secretary of state for the home department, has remains of a sister different to the faith of his forefathers.

Nor is he the only member of his creed in the cabinet, for in the shuffle following the retirement of Sir John Simon owing to his objections to the commonwealth conscription law for single men Herbert Samuel's first cousin, Edwin Montagu, has been offered from the secretaryship of the treasury to the chancellorship of the duchy of Lancaster.

Edwin Montagu, it may be remembered, contracted a matrimonial alliance last summer with Lord Sheffield's youngest daughter, the Hon. Beatrice Venetia Stanley, who attained celebrity for the sake of Judaism in order to wed her lover, and it is stated the terms of his father's will have been diverted to the large fortune had he married a Christian.

Herbert Samuel will be recalled by many in the United States as having paid a prolonged visit a little over two years ago while holding the office of postmaster general.

His family was founded by his grandfather, Samuel Samuel, who was a small watchmaker's shop in Liverpool. He had two sons, Stuart and Edwin. Moses, marrying Ellen Cohen, became the founder of the house of Samuel Exchange, eventually established a banking house in Broad street, London, assuming the name Samuel with the business. In 1884, on being created a baronet, Moses Samuel obtained a license from the crown to change his name to Samuel Montagu and in 1907 was raised to the house of lords as Lord Swaythling.

The third son, Edwin Montagu, the new chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, is his second son. The first, Lord Swaythling's brother Edwin, declined to change his surnamine, and left two sons, the other of whom is Sir Stuart Samuel, member of parliament for the Tower Hamlets division of London and who received a baronetcy in 1913. His sister's cousin, Sir Herbert Louis Samuel, the new secretary of state for the home department. He married in 1912 Miss Beatrice, daughter of the late Elie Abraham Franklin.

Herbert Samuel, who was born at Liverpool in 1870 and who is a lineal man grandsonal with first class honors from Oxford, does not come to the home department as a stranger. He spent four years there as parliamentary undersecretary of state from the defeat of the Unionist administration in 1905 until 1909, under Lord Gladstone and this is intimately acquainted with the workings of the office. It was during that period that he made his mark by the skill with which he piloted the old age pensions act through the house of commons. Afterward, although he had come to be regarded as a specialist in the problem of child legislation, he showed by the clever manner in which he handled the Ulster licensing measure in 1908 that he knew quite as much about liquor as about babies.

He was rewarded in the following year with a seat in the cabinet as chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster and twelve months later became postmaster general.

Northern Michigan

At their January meeting the Grand Traverse county board of supervisors again refused to make an appropriation for the Western Michigan Development Bureau.

Boyne City special:— Preliminary steps were taken by the common council at a special session to secure a Carnegie library for Boyne City. Although the appropriation has not been made as yet advices from the New York offices give strong encouragement that the petition will be received and favorably disposed of. At present Boyne City has a library of 7,000 volumes with no adequate accommodations. Hon J. M. Harris is the instigator of the move and has direct charge.

During the last year the municipal electric light and power plant of Traverse City paid a net profit to the city of $13,818.64, which is the best showing that has been made since it was taken over by the city five years ago. The plant was new when it became city property and has been kept up to the minute ever since. Last summer all consumers were placed upon a meter and this not only added to the receipts of the plant but lessened the strain upon the plant.

Petoskey News: Miss Ida Irwin, who for four years has been matron at Petoskey hospital died there at 11 o'clock Tuesday forenoon. She was fifty-five years of age and had been in Petoskey a number of years, being from the city from Cleveland. Friday of last week she underwent a serious operation for appendicitis and other complications and failed to recover. Her condition was reported serious Monday noon but she was not thought in danger. She became suddenly worse, however, and died Tuesday.

The proposition to issue $14,000 highway improvement bonds in Kearsey township (Bellaire) was lost by a vote of 54 to 36 at the special election held Monday. The vote was very light on account of the Bellaire which prevailed at the time. A meeting of the township board was held Tuesday when bids for the bonds were opened and as the entire lot was sold to the highest bidder, a Chicago concern, for $14,350 for bonds run for twenty years and bear five per cent interest.

Traverse City Record: Good news for the summer season comes from the Morgan Transportation company. Their schooner Mary Ethel is being converted into a power boat, the spars taken down and work on the cabin is now in progress at the mouth of Boardman river. The boat will be equipped with an 85 horse power Diesel oil engine, the kind of engine that has revolutionized ocean transportation, and will give her a speed of 10 to 14 miles an hour. The same Mary Ethel will be retained and she will be used for regular passenger and freight trips to Northport from the Traverse Bay and will also be available for excursions and moonlight parties.

Petoskey News: Something over a year ago what is known as a Conservatory of Music was taken by the commons on a woman at Petoskey hospital, and was probably the first known operation in Petoskey. Friday afternoon a few time if not the first one. Dr. John Gwyn Jones performed the operation and at the time that these kinds of operations were not frequent even in the large hospital centers it was unusual for hospitals in such small cities as Petoskey. Another such case was brought to Petoskey last Friday and Wednesday Dr. John performed a Cesarean operation on Mrs. Guy Fitzgerald. The mother and the offspring are well and the baby is perfectly healthy, and both appear to be doing well. Mrs. Phillips, whose home is at Boyne Falls, appears to have every chance to recover.

After hanging fire since 1879, during which time it has been raised and investigated almost constantly, the project to build a harbor of refuge at Portage lake, Houghton county, will be undertaken by the government. Secretary of War Garrison, in transmitting a report of the engineers to congress, says: "It is evident that with the changed conditions as to shipping and the development of the harbor at Lathington, Manistee and Frankfort there is not at this time any need of a harbor of refuge at Portage lake, and it even is doubtful if it would be used if it were completed and maintained." The project was adopted in 1879 and modified to meet recent rivers and harbors acts, provides for a harbor with an entrance channel from Lake Michigan eighteen feet deep at low water and about 2,300 feet long. The report of the engineer states that the largest settlement on Portage lake has 750 population and that the commerce of the harbor during the last eight years has not exceeded an average of 2,610 tons of freight and 6,775 passengers.

A movement is underway, backed by the Mackinac Transportation Co., to petition congress to erect a light house on north Graham shoals as an aid to navigation. No marine man familiar with the straits but will enthusiastically endorse this movement for the dangers in making the passage between the north Graham and the Major shoals have been a nightmare for mariners for many years and there have been numerous groundings at this point by reason of the shoals not being properly marked and lighted. There is always danger in making the passage between the shoals in weather when strong easterly or westerly winds prevail, or during a fog or snow storm when the straits are filled with ice. There is no season of the year either during the summer or winter, when there is not danger of going aground in making the passage and marine underwriters are saying that it is always trying on the nerves when making it except during the most favorable weather. The Mackinac Transportation Co. will have the assistance of the Steel Trust and other Cleveland marine interests as well as of all lines engaged in business between Lakes Michigan, Huron and Superior, as all boats from Lake Michigan are obliged to make the passage between the shoals.

HARDWARE NEWS

SAVE 60 CENTS PER GALLON ON PAINT

We are starting to move into the NEW HARDWARE STORE BUILDING and the next stock we wish to move is PAINT.

Paint has advanced in price from 15c to 25c per gallon since last fall. The price then was $2.10 per gallon and the Spring price will be at least $2.55 per gallon.

We are changing our PAINT LINE from PENINSULAR to B. P. S. not because Peninsular is not good paint but because we think B. P. S. is better for us to handle on account of its popularity with some of our good customers, and being known as one of the best paints made.

Our old line is broken as far as a full line of colors is concerned, but if the shades we have left appeal to you, take it home at $1.75 per gallon, up to and including Feb. 10th, when the Spring price will be put in force.

Every drop guaranteed by us same as if you paid full price.

The above applies to Outside House Paint, but we will also sell all of our old stock of paint at prices in same proportion.

This a saving of 60 cents per gallon and should appeal to anyone who is figuring on painting in the Spring.

Athenians Willing Taxpayers.

One of the most interesting cases of voluntary taxation is the ancient Athenian "liturgy," which means something very different from the "liturgy" of today, the etymological meaning of the word being "public work." The liturgy was a special contribution made to the state by a wealthy citizen or group of citizens. There were cordiles, magistrates, and even the provision of the chorus for a tragedy, and extraordinary ones, such as the equipment of maintenance of a warship. The liturgy was fundamentally a tax, and it was often evaded by all sorts of shifts. But in the palmy days of Athens it was considered disgraceful for those upon whom it was imposed to do more than the law exacted, and sometimes rich citizens would volunteer a liturgy from public spirit or to win popularity.

"California Pea Bean" Liked.

Housewives who have mastered the fine art of baking beans testify that by all odds the best bean material for the purpose is the "California pea bean." It is the no-plus ultra of the Boston bean pot, and its higher price is only a reflection of its distinct superiority. Compared with its delicacy and fineness all other beans are gross and commonplace. The Pacific coast beans that saved Boston are not a makeshift, a compromise or a substitute for "native beans." They are the genuine and most highly esteemed article for conversion into Boston beans. The integrity of the Boston Sunday breakfast has been preserved through the superlative medium.

Smallett an Golf.

New of course there are still one or two men who think golf is a mere or less good game, but they should hear what Smollett, Smollett, writer, Smollett, thought of it back in 1766. Said he: "Of this diversion the Scotch are so fond, that, when the weather will permit, you may see a multitude of all ranks assembled together in their shirts, and following the ball with the utmost earnestness. Among others, I was shown one particular set of golfers, the youngest of whom was turned of fourscore. They were all gentlemen of independent fortunes, who had amused themselves with this pastime for the best part of a century, without having ever felt the least alarm from sickness or disease, and they never went to bed without having each the best part of a pint of claret in his belly. Such uninterrupted exercise, cooperating with the keen air of the sea, must, without doubt, keep the appetite alive, and the stomach in good order, and consequently must contribute to the health of the people. Golf is a game which I recommend to my friends, as a cure for melancholy, and I believe it will prove more efficacious than the Bath waters, or any other medicine whatever."

Post Office Inspectors Amazed at Credulity of People.

Ordinarily Clever Persons Fall for All Sorts of Fake Schemes—Stock Swindle Favorite Bait for the Gullible.

Washington.—The records of the post office department, and more especially of the head of the post office inspectors, show that a large part of the American people still love to be humbugged. The inspectors marvel at the credulity of some citizens who give up their hard-earned savings in one wild grab for riches. Only on rare occasions are banks, even the smaller ones, caught in the crash which follows the exposure of a fraudulent concern.

Some of the schemes are extremely clever, while others are crude, but wonderfully always "fall" for them, clever schemes frequently attracting intelligent persons whose credulity is amazing.

Not long ago a bunch of postal crooks were on trial in Kansas City, charged with operating fake mining companies. They had ten or twelve different companies going at one time. One of the witnesses was a Virginia farmer who thought he was pretty smart.

"Yes," he said to an inspector, "this company is a fake all right. I admit I was stung on its stock, but I've got right here certificates of stock in several other companies that I know are all right. Their stock is increasing in value right along."

The credulous Virginian was asked to display his wares. He did so. He was horrified when informed that the men on trial were promoting all of the companies in which he was a stockholder, that all were fakes and extated on paper only.

A favorite scheme with the fake stock concerns is to start the sale of their stock at ten cents a share. After a time, when the "suckers" begin to bite well, the price is boosted to 15 cents. This convinces them that there is something in the company, and they buy more. The stock keeps rising to perhaps 30 cents, when an announcement is forthcoming to the effect that the company has secured all the money it requires for capital.

Shortly afterward funds are depicted for "promotion," and another scheme is started or, its way. Not infrequently the "promoter" of one fake concern will advise persons who are seeking to purchase stock in all but the lists have closed, but that he has been able to purchase a block of another stock which some concern was forced to let go of and can sell it very cheap. This usually brings in the "long green."

One scheme of the Kansas City bunch was to send out in advance letters soliciting shares of a certain stock at 20 cents well. Persons receiving such letters had nibbled before, of course. Shortly after another letter would come saying, ostensibly from an entirely different concern, offering to sell this same stock for, say, ten cents. Having a week or so before received an offer of 20 cents for this identical stock, persons receive the second letter sent in their subscriptions, receiving in return a bunch of worthless certificates. After the receipt of the fake certificates they would get into communication with the concern or final vidual offering to pay 20 cents per share for it, only to learn that all the stock desired had been secured from other persons meanwhile.

The ease exclusion which postal experts can advance for the degree of credulity shown by persons who get into the tolls of mail fakers and frauds is that most of them probably have worked hard all their lives and, seeing what appears to them to be a rainbow of promise pointing to ease and poverty for old age, take one grand leap after another—the number depending on how hard they are hit each time and how much money they have.

NO LACK OF HONEST BOYS

Los Angeles Lad Held Up as a Wonder Is One of Many That the Land May Claim.

A Los Angeles (Cal.) paper prints the account of the return to the owner of a five-dollar piece paid by accident to a newsboy. It seems to regard the incident as remarkable, and one phase of it was, but the paper overlooked this. There are many honest boys. The instincts of youth are predatory only in a mischievous fashion. In a test, the average boy would come to it with colors flying. The industrious lad who would steal is an exception. No small boy accustomed to dealing in pennies could see an accidental gold coin in his day's collection without all the immediate impulse to place it in the hands of the owner.

The remarkable phase of the incident was that the owner, upon receiving his coin, rewarded the boy with 50 cents. Doubtless the newsie felt more jubilation in possession of this honest piece of silver than in the larger piece that could have been retained only by a process virtually pilfering. Ordinarily the person who loves money and recovers it is remarkably stingy in the matter of reward. A sixpenny handed over in exchange for a fat purse rescued from the street is about the rule. Sometimes there is no profit, but a look of dark suspicion.

It would be wise to have a statutory regulation of the whole matter. A reward of ten per cent would not be out of reason. If a poor person happens upon a vagrant roll of money, it is not natural that he become conscious of temptation. He has reason to think the owner will pay little or nothing, and be more apt to display toward him a sort of resentment than gratitude. If he knew that under the law he was entitled to a fair commission, the temptation would vanish, the finder be satisfied, and the owner retrieved from assuming the too frequent role of miser.

CRIPPLED MAN BAGS DEER

Hunter in Minnesota is Stricken With Buck Fever at the Vital Moment.

St. Paul.—C. J. Wold, while hunting at Tamarack, east of Brainerd, became a victim of "buck fever," and fell off a log on which he was seated, when a deer appeared. He suffered a sprained ankle and came home on crutches.

In spite of his crippled condition, Mr. Wold succeeded in shooting the deer, which he left in the woods until he could arrange to haul it out.

When he returned he found someone had removed the rear quarters of the animal, leaving him the head and shoulders.

Trees in Persia.

There are no natural forests in Persia except along the Caspian sea and in Kurdistan, for elsewhere there is insufficient rainfall. Elsewhere, if water is present, many oriental peasant eat more planted but acreage is very limited, the larger wood lots running up to six acres only. So scarce is wood that every small branch pruned off is kept and finds its way into a bundle of firewood for consumption. The plane tree thereon, and quite generally the world over, is the best of all trees yet planted.

All He Asked.

"I do not ask you, gentlemen of the jury," said an unfledged member of the bar, "to go back with me through the immeasurable vista of bygone centuries and examine the exploitations and resources of science; I do not ask you to accompany the astronomer into the starry firmament or to discover the secrets of creation. No, gentlemen, I want nothing of that! I only ask you to start with me from the county jail and travel two miles and a half on the road toward Belmont Corner!"

FAMOUS OLD LONDON CHURCH

St. George's, in Hanover Square, Has Long Been Identified With History of England's Great.

Famous St. George's church, in George street, Hanover square, was the work of James of Greenwich. One supposes that this is the best known church in London, for it has been the scene of fashionable marriages almost from its earliest date.

Here Sir William Hamilton was married to Emma Hart, here the duke of Sussex was joined to Lady Augusta Murray, about the results of which circumstances Lord Elton tells us with such gusto; here the notorious Lola Montes, who ruined a king and caused a revolution, was married to Mr. Heald (not Heath, as the name is so often wrongly given); here the first Duke might have been seen on innumerable occasions "giving away" the brides at fashionable weddings.

One wonders how many who have trodden those well-worn steps, one waited beneath that ample portico, have ever stayed to wonder who designed the church which, seen from Hanover square, stands out proudly from the adjacent houses.

Even Ralph, who wrote certain critical observations on London's buildings, and generally managed to fall foul of most of them, has a good word for St. George's and the poetic voice of Wordsworth has also been raised on its behalf.

DIVIDE YEARS INTO "CYCLES"

Chinese Have a Custom Which is Unlike That of Any Other People on the Earth.

Among the many extraordinary customs of the Chinese is that of handing years together in groups of twelve, called "cycles," and naming each year of the series after some animal. Thus the first year of a new cycle is the year of the rat, the second the year of the ox, the third the year of the tiger. Every Chinese bows to the year of the rat belongs to the Orient of the East, and so on. The animal class of every Chinese man and woman is thus recorded and is held to be of great importance in forewelling the future. Another curious fact about the Chinese reckoning of time is that in the Celestial empire a child is held to be one year old as soon as born. With the absurd superstition so dear to the oriental mind, a baby is considered by given a girl's name in order to deceive the evil spirits, who apparently have an objectional habit of making it as hard as possible to rear a male child successfully.

Lightning Rods.

The reason a lightning rod has a sharp point is because a fine point offers no resistance to the discharge of electricity and is enough that a cloud may be emptied of it noiselessly and harmlessly. The degree of resistance is proportion to the surface of the object. If the rod were surrounded by a knob, for instance, the discharge would be violent. But many a lightning rod has received an electrical discharge when the people in the building knew were calmly unconscious of the fact. Noncorrective metal is used for the point of the rod, as corrosion increases the discharge resistance between a point and a ball is shown in discharging a battery. The full charge from a large battery would be received quietly on a metal point, while a moderate charge from a small battery would explode violently in a ball. It is said that a full charge may be passed harmlessly through a pointed rod, while the same charge sent out in a discharge with a ball or knob on the end would mean instant death.

Health Hobby.

Why is it that the average woman is so hard to admit that her health troubles come from her digestive apparatus? Does it sound any better to talk of heart trouble or mysterious "internal woes" than it does to admit of a constipated liver or an upset stomach? Women and men, too, take a queer fancy for whispering of serious ailments and assume a semi-invalidism when one would suppose they would hesitate to acknowledge. They seem to gloat over their ills—they would if they were quite a sorrow when they recover so far that they have to admit an important subject of conversation. How we do hate to listen to a recital of anyone else's ill health. It gives us no little chance to put in a word about our own, you know.

Slanderous Attack Resented.

A historical writer has at last found the man who bent Franklin Pierce at checkers. No wonder it has taken over half a century to find him," says the Montgomery Advertiser. As a stalwart defender of every son of New Hampshire, and as one accustomed acquainted with the temperament of checker players, we do not hesitate to say that no man ever bent Franklin Pierce at checkers. If the trick had ever been turned the fellow who did it would have been brag chester (N. H.) Union.

DAKOTA BOY IS FINANCIER

Lad Fourteen Years of Age Makes Good Profit in Sheep in Canada.

Ipswich, S. D.—Gerald Persbin, four teen years of age, gives promise of being one of the financiers of the country.

On September 5, 1914, the boy went to M. A. Slocum, a friend, and told him that he had a chance to buy 21 old ewes from Robert Jones at a bargain. Mr. Slocum went with the boy to the bank and signed a note that he thinks enabling the boy to get the funds.

This week the boy entered the bank paid over $93.60, his note with interest, and remarked that he had clean up $110.30 clean profit on his sheep during the year. He had sold his worth of wool and had sold his original purchase and their increase, less five sheep the coyotes had killed, for $156.40.

TO GUARD WARSHIPS

Floating Shield Suggested as Protection Against Torpedoes.

Carried Outboard, It Is Figured, a Submarine's Torpedo, Striking It, Would Explode Harmlessly—Advantages Over Chain Net.

Washington.—The battleship of the future may plow her way through the seas towing on either side an immense steel shield which will parallel the vessel from bow to stern and which will form a defensive bulwark from waterline to keel level.

Such is the plan of a Philadelphia inventor, who has filed with the navy department plans for this safeguarding American battleships from torpedo attack in case of war. These steel shields would give a battleship much the appearance of a man carrying a window shutter under each arm. In the case of the battleship, however, the long tubular float which would support the upper edge of the torpedo-shield on the surface would be the only part of the shield visible.

The shield, as proposed, is remarkably simple in construction, and while the navy experts have not passed upon its practicable features it promises to supersede the old chain net used with many war vessels at the present time. The advantage claimed for the shield is that it is towed on edge through the water and cut down the headway of the towing vessel but little. This cannot be said for the chain nets, which seriously impede the vessel.

The idea of a steel shield, carried from twenty to thirty feet out from the side of the vessel, is based on the fact that a submarine usually has a chance to fire but one torpedo at a ship. The shield would receive the blow of the torpedo and cause the projectile to explode far enough away from the vessel to make the explosion practically harmless in so far as the battleship itself is concerned. Of course part of the shield would be hopelessly demolished, but the whole shield, long as a battleship, can be furnished it is estimated, for $10,000.

These shields need only be carried when the battleship enters a war zone where submarines are known or are expected to be operating. One of the clever features of the plan is to disguise the floats, supporting the shield in the water by its upper edge, as submarines. The float, under ordinary circumstances, is a long tube of steel, which is but little wider, comparatively speaking, than the width of the shield itself.

Assuming that these floats are made larger and painted to resemble submarines, an enemy submarine, rising for observations to port or starboard, probably would be deceived by the looks of the "dummy" on either side of the vessel, and, if she attacked at all, would attack by torpedo only from a distance, which would greatly diminish accuracy of aim. Should the torpedo strike the defense screen it would appear that a submarine itself had been struck and the attacking craft would, in all probability, escape before discovering the mistake.

Particularly, however, is the shield adapted to protection of vessels in harbors, where submarines have occasionally penetrated and wrought great havoc to vessels of all sorts. When a vessel equipped with one of these shields goes into action the shield can be cast adrift and picked up after the engagement.

Another plan suggested is to equip these shield floats with the lines, which, when the shields are cast adrift at the beginning of an engagement, would serve as a support for survivors of vessels which might be sunk.

The greatest objection to the torpedo nets carried on vessels at the present time is their tendency to rise to the surface as the vessel gains speed, battles materially reducing the speed of the towing vessel.

MEDALS FOR ALL THE BRAVE

French Commander Has Special Issue for the Men of His Own Command.

Paris.—The commander of one of the French regiments whose soldiers have distinguished themselves by many acts of bravery has just taken a step which is certain to gratify those who have neither been decorated nor been cited in "The Order of the Day." He has ordered from the mint a large number of medals, designed by Morton, on one side of which is engraved the sail "To Arms" and on the reverse the inscriptions, "Campaign of 1914-1916," the number of the regiment, "Bravery and Courage" and the name of the soldier to whom the medal is given.

This commander's theory, according to the Figaro, is that all acts of bravery not singled out for special honors of the war cross and the Legion of Honor should by no means be neglected. He believes that by awarding these medals he will increase the already demonstrated efficiency of his troops.

Sioux City, Ia.—The good and faithful servant of ancient days found his modern prototype here when Charles Grubel, twenty-five years old, a clerk, received nearly all of the $50,000 estate left by Otto Hoefts, a grocer for whom Grubel had worked six years.

THREE BELLS A STANDARD SCHOOL

UP-TO-DATE EVELINE TOWNSHIP SCHOOL COMES UP TO ALL THE REQUIREMENTS

On Monday, January 31st, Eveline No. 2, received a well earned standard plate. A large crowd had gathered for the occasion and the district mothers prepared a potluck dinner at the school house. The teacher, Mr. Pessler, had arranged a splendid and appropriate program. We always like to hear the boys and girls, and this time they meant what they said. The director, Mr. Frank Wangeman, represented his fellow members of the board in delivering a short but able address. The talent of Mr. Pessler's recitation was "They said we couldn't, but we did." This was especially appropriate because the Three Bells district has the smallest valuation of Eveline township but was determined to have the best school building. They believe that when it is for their children it pays to dig down, and that is what they have done.

At the left and north of their school house they added enough windows to make a solid wall of light. This brought the percentage up to 15 per cent. of the floor area, and compared to some of our country school rooms sends a flood of light over every desk. They did not remove the windows at the right because they wished to have the benefit at times of the southern sunlight to purify the air in the room. Instead they placed over them light colored window shades and keep them drawn all of the time to prevent cross lights. These windows can be opened in mild weather for ventilating purposes.

The school house was already equipped with a ventilating system, a Waterbury, which they bought three years ago during a former contract with Mr. Pessler. The evil effects of the old stove in the middle of the room are too well known to be mentioned here. It is enough to say that these people threw away that old iron stove long ago and joined the fast increasing brigade of fresh air enthusiasts.

They have a few double seats but every seat fits the child who has to sit in it. The seats of one size are in one row and they are the correct number of inches apart. Many may sit erect and work at the same time. Johnny doesn't have to double up like a ball to write his numbers or stretch his ankles to make his toes reach the floor.

Best of all are the extra touches which the school board added; the wall was retinted, sanitary towels furnished, books bought, and the hallway remodeled. You see, most school houses have wide halls where the boys can wrestle if they want to and kick over their dinner pails and knock down the girls' hats. But here the partitions are moved over so the entry way is just a little wider than the doorway. There is nothing to do but come in and go straight thru to the school room. This gives more room for each cloak room, the girls' at one side, and the boys' at the other. In each cloak room is installed a chemical indoor sanitary toilet of the Knustine order. These toilets are in use and working splendidly at thru the southern part of the state. The cost is fifty dollars per seat but if the sanitary condition and warmth of the room could prevent one case of sickness, would it not be a paying proposition? If one fever that both cloak rooms are under the direct supervision of the teacher could prevent your little boy from seeing one obscene picture, or could prevent your little girl from hearing one immoral story, would it be worth one hundred dollars to you?

This day marked the beginning of a new era for Eveline No. 2. Under the guidance of their earnest leader and teacher, the district board has wisely spent the money asked for this purpose. Wherever there was any question as to the wisdom of any change in the school room, they wrote directly to the state department. The Lansing architects and decorators advised them just what was best in every detail. They were sure of every step and have succeeded in their purpose.

At the close of the program, in behalf of the state department Co. Comr. Mayo L. Stewart dedicated the building to truth and health and presented to them their well-deserved and hard-earned "Standard School" plate.

Beware of Godwin's Oath.

"Only men who are not accepting Godwin's oath." This caution is to a person taking a voluntary and intemperate oath or making violent protestations refers to a tradition that Godwin, earl of Kent, tried for the murder of Prince Alfred, brother of Edward the Confessor, king of England, and pardoned, died at the kings table while protesting his innocence with oaths. The earl had his mouth filled with the morsel, which choked his barangue. To make his protestations more vivid he called upon heaven, saying that if he was guilty of the murder he would like to choke on the bread. Tradition says he died—Exchange.

HOSPITAL FOR CANAL EMPLOYERS

DEADLY MOSQUITO SWARMS IN CUBA

DIGGING SANITARY SCENERY IN CANAL ZONE

By EDWARD B. CLARK.

MAJ. GEN. WILLIAM CRAWFORD Gorgas, chief of the Sanitary Corps of the United States army, is by many men accounted the greatest soldier of them all. He has not had showers of plaudits on many fields, and disease is accounted, even in war time, the greatest enemy of the human race. Where one article of this modest-spoken man, who never speaks volunteerfully of his own achievements on the sickness-stricken field, he is writing of one of the most famous in his profession. He does not belong to Washington, nor yet to the United States, but to the world.

Here is a doctor and a soldier whose record stands unique. In order to honor him congress has waived traditions and changed a line of legislative action which for years ran one way by creating an office which congress the United States paid General Gorgas the highest compliment that it is within its power to pay. It gave him the thanks of the congress of the United States. He promoted him to the grade of major general, and it so changed established custom as to enable him to remain at the head of this medical corps of the army for some months after the four years allotted for such service shall have expired.

In other words, through the action of congress, General Gorgas, instead of being a retiring general of the army for the remainder of only four years, will build that office until he retires from active work at the age of sixty-four years.

The thanks of congress, promotion to the rank of major general, and the provision which would enable the incumbent to remain surgeon general for a longer period than the usually allotted time, came to this doctor, as a recognition of his progress slow, because of his great work in routing disease from the Panama canal zone and in making a former plague spot one of the most sanitary districts in the world.

It is virtually impossible to get the records of all the great scientists of the world for purposes of impartial comparison, but it seems to be safe to say that no other man has been honored by educational institutions and by learned societies as has William Crawford Gorgas. He received his degree of LL. D. from the University of the South, at Sewanee, Tenn., in the year 1915, and his M. D. from Bellevue Hospital Medical college in New York city four years since. From that time to this honors have been piled upon him, and he has borne them all with a modesty that resembles meekness. It is held by many that doctor of science is the highest degree which any institution of learning can confer upon a man. Seven great universities, including Oxford, Harvard, Pennsylvania, Brown, and Princeton have conferred the doctor of science degree upon this American army doctor.

To him have come LL. D's from Johns Hopkins, and from many other universities. By the doctor of Yale Government and Washington universities he is a doctor of laws. He has medals from societies from medical associations and from national academies of science "for distinguished achievement in the interest of mankind." He has the Sanarelli medal from the American Museum of Safety, and he has the Mary Kingsley medal from the Liverpool (England) School of Tropical Medicine. He is a member, either active or honorary, of virtually every great scientific society in the world. The honors have sought him out. He has gone on with his work seeking nothing except that which will benefit his fellow man.

General Gorgas was born in Mobile, Ala. October 3, 1854; was educated at the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn., where he studied from 1869 to 1875, graduating with the degree of bachelor of arts. He graduated in medicine at the Bellevue Hospital Medical college in 1879. He served on the house staff of the Bellevue hospital from 1879 to 1880; entered the United States army in the yellow fever epidemic in Florida and on the western frontier until the Spanish-American war broke out in 1898. He went to Cuba with the expedition which captured Santiago.

After the fall of Santiago General Gorgas contracted typhoid fever, and was sent back to the United States. He went with the expeditionary force which occupied Havana in December, 1898, where he remained as health officer until the fall of 1902. During his incumbency as health officer of the city of Havana the yellow fever board made a discovery with regard to yellow fever and found that it was conveyed by the stegomyia mosquito. As health officer, with his subordinates he devised plans and measures whereby this discovery was put into practical service.

As a result of these measures Havana was freed from yellow fever for a period of two months. Heretofore the disease had been there continuously for 150 years.

This work he was promoted by special act of congress from the grade of major to that of colonel.

For ten years Doctor Gorgas was stationed in the Panama Canal zone, as the chief health officer of the isthmian canal commission. He was ordered to Panama in March, 1904, and thereupon Theodore Roosevelt made him a member of the commission. He was chosen for the Panama work because of his record. He made Panama one of the healthiest places in the world, and more than this, he made the living conditions of the laborer on the isthmus as sanitary, as comfortable and as desirable as the conditions surrounding the laborer anywhere in the world.

Two years ago when General Gorgas' term of service on the isthmus was drawing to a close because of the near approach of the day of completion of the waterway, your correspondent visited the Canal zone. While there he was taken, with some friends, to visit a hospital on an island off the coast. This hospital had been built by the French. When General Gorgas went to the isthmus he took the building, put it into perfect sanitary condition and made it a place of reception for convalescents. The hospital never was full, because there wasn't enough sickness in the zone to produce convalescents to go to the hospital to take the hospital facilities. The fact that this particular building never was crowded, and that it was a small building at best, perhaps furnishes one of the best proofs possible of the remarkable sanitary work which was done in a place generally accounted as one of the most unhealthy on the face of the globe.

During the visit to Panama a statement was made to your correspondent by General Gorgas which was nothing short of startling in its nature. He said that Colombia, Venezuela and Ecuador would spend a few thousand dollars to stamp out yellow fever there if they would be another case of the disease known to the world.

For some reason or other, the South American countries in which the yellow fever still exists will not spend the money necessary to stamp it out. So it is that as long as the disease exists there it is possible for some man, perhaps a sailor, to be bitten by a fever-laden mosquito just before he sails for another port and to carry with him the poison. It is held by the high thinkers that the countries of South America where yellow fever exists should be forced to stamp out the disease in their own interest, as the world may be safe for all time from the menace of the dread "yellow jack."

Some time ago, during a process of dredging, a low spot on the zone was turned into a mosquito-breeding swamp. The mosquitoes began to breed there abundantly. Literally millions of the insects appeared. There was no danger that they would spread malaria among the people in the zone, because there had come charged with the poison first, but, of course, it was necessary to determine how far the infection could go in the zone. It was soon found out.

An able-bodied and perfectly willing native was put into a mosquito net tent, where he sat and acted as bait. He was paid a certain amount of gold coin for his baiting work and he did what also afterward were employed, and it was easy money.

When the tent had a million or more mosquitoes in it the native came out and the entrance was closed. Then the scientists sprayed the tent and its confined mosquitoes with coloring matter. The spray was so fine that it did not drown or even drench the insects, but they received some coloring matter on their wings and bodies.

Other tents were pitched and in each was stationed a human bait. These tents were at certain distances apart. All the mosquitoes in the first tent were released and they were traced by color from tent to tent until none were found in that way they found out how far the malaria fever mosquito would travel.

Surgeon General Gorgas makes his headquarters in Washington, but he is a roving commissioner by order of the president. The hospital corps in its care and also to the dictates of his own judgment, he does what he thinks ought to go straight to the front, not to meet the human enemy, but the disease enemy. His is the responsibility for the health of the soldiers in Texas, in the Canal zone, in Hawaii and in the Philippine islands. It is his to meet, physician-like and soldier-like, any emergency which may arise. He is one of the busiest men known in the service and he is also one of the bravest.

Sofia, the Bulgarian Capital.

No city in the East has undergone such a magic transformation as Sofia. Prior to the emancipation of the Bulgars it was a small Turkish town of 20,000, with narrow dirty streets. There was practically no trade and the people were in a hideous state of poverty. The city when it has now risen up has a population of about 125,000 and is rapidly becoming one of the best in eastern Europe. Architecturally, it has far more claims to respect than is at first apparent. The streets, which are well paved and beautifully lined, are so narrow for the adequate display of the fine profusion of the czar's palace, the national theater the general post office, the war office, the Bulgarian National bank, the William Gladstone high school for boys, the Grand Hotel de Bulgarie, the National Agricultural bank, the Sobranje, and many other public buildings which are of fine pretensions. The ecclesiastical edifices are of remarkable beauty, especially the new cathedral.—From "The Balkans—Bulgaria and Their Country," by Oliver Baldridge, in the American Review of Reviews.

His Attitude.

"I flatter myself," remarked the successful candidate, "that I did not seek office."

"Yes, I saw you shaking hands with the voters right and left, acting as judge at baby shows, presiding at welfare meetings and giving out numerous interviews to newspaper reporters."

Hum. That was merely to show the public that while I scorned to seek office, I would be in a receptive mood if the office sought me.

Somewhat Different.

Second Girl—No; but I understand that she has threatened to marry him.

The KITCHEN CABINET

SEASONABLE DISHES.

A delicious dessert is made by piling chariotte russe mixture on pieces of sponge cake. An other combination with charlotte russe is the orange marmalade, using it as a garnish and serving the charlotte in shredded almonds. The combination is especially pleasing.

Pineapple Toast.—Add a little sugar to the strips in a can of pineapple, using half of a can of fruit for this dish. Add a tablespoonful of lemon juice and boil three minutes; then add the slices of pineapple and keep the whole hot. Cut rounds of sponge cake, butter and dredge with sugar, then set in the oven to brown. When ready to serve set a round of pineapple on the round of cake and pour over the sauce.

Hashed Lamb With Rice and Peas.—Chop fine edible portions of cold cooked lamb to the amount; add a little of the broth or gravy and boiling water, season well with salt and pepper and heat very hot. Place the meat on a hot platter, surround with cooked, seasoned rice and surround the rice with seasoned green peas or the canned variety.

Curried Potatoes.—Peel a small onion and cut into thin rings; melt three tablespoonfuls of butter in a frying pan and cook the onion until it is nicely browned and yellow; add six eight sliced potatoes, sprinkle with salt, pepper and a level teaspoonful of curry powder, stirred smooth, with a cupful of broth; simmer ten minutes. Squeeze over the juice of half a lemon, turn and serve very hot.

A delicious combination when one desires something especially dainty is creamed celery with shredded almonds. Prepare a rich cream sauce, add cooked, tender celery and the almonds; serve in individual cases of patty shells.

Baked Ham.—The Swedish people use the following covering over a ham while baking. Take two cupfuls of bread crumbs, four tablespoonfuls of vinegar, one tablespoonful of mustard, one egg and a dash of pepper and salt to season, spread over the ham before baking. It forms a delicious crust and keeps in all the flavor of the meat.

If thou of fortune be bereft,
And in thy store there be but left
Two loaves, sell one and with the Buy hyacinths to feed thy soul.

PINEAPPLE JUICE.

Pineapple juice is one of the wholesome nonalcoholic drinks which may be made by any housekeeper to be put up at home. The essential thing is that the pineapple is now well known and appreciated, and the canned product. Medical scientists have recently discovered that years with the fruit and have come to discover that it has been decided by these experts that the pineapple juice is such a cultivation of it must makes a most satisfying stimulant.

Dumplings.—Add one beaten egg to a cupful of milk, a little salt and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, sifted together for a quarter of an hour, one and a half pints of water with two cupfuls of sugar. Pour the hot syrup over a can of grated pineapple, then add the juice of three lemons, and let stand until cold. Strain and add a pint of pineapple juice and a pint of water. Freeze to a mush.

COMPANY LUXURIES.

These dishes are not for daily use in the ordinary household, as they are rather too much work to prepare or are too expensive.

Fillets of Game or Chicken.—Cut the meat from the bones in wide strips and cook it in a well-buttered skillet until brown, then add a tablespoonful of butter, two tablespoonfuls of currant jelly and the strained gravy left from the fowl or venison. Have molded a ring of rice, place the meat after grouping with butter and brown. Serve on a round dish and put the fillets in the ring with the sauce poured over. A teaspoonful of curry and a teaspoonful of lemon added to the sauce will add variety to this dish.

Eggs a la Chaud.—Heat six eggs slightly with a fork. Place in a chafing dish a tablespoonful of butter, and when this is melted and hot add two tablespoonfuls of grated cheese. Stir until smooth, then add the eggs and season with paprika and salt. Cook until the eggs are scrambled. Serve on toast.

Nesselrode Pudding.—Make a custard of three cupfuls of milk, 1½ cupfuls of sugar, the yolks of five eggs and a half teaspoonful of salt; strain and cool; add a pint of this cream, a fourth of a cupful of pineapple syrup and 1¼ cupfuls of cooked and mashed chestnuts. The nuts are put through a ricer after cooking. Line a two quart melon mold with a part of the mixture and to the remainder add one half a cupful of candied fruit cut in bits, a quarter of a cupful of sultana raisins and eight chestnuts broken in pieces and soaked in cherry juice for a few hours. Fill a mold, cover, pack in salt and ice and let stand two hours; serve with whipped cream, sweetened and flavored with Maraschino syrup.

Bombe Glacee.—Line a mold with sherbet or water ice, fill with ice cream or this charlotte russe, cover, pack in ice and salt and let stand two hours. Macaroon ice cream is another good combination.

DESIRABLE DUMPLINGS.

Dumplings are a great emergency dish when the chicken or stew wants to stretch for the family. A nice fluffy dumpling will serve to surround the platter of a meat makes a most satisfying stew.

Glass of Hot Water Before Breakfast a Splendid Habit

Open sluices of the system each morning and wash away the poisonous, stagnant matter.

Those of us who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when we arise; splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, and stomach, lame back, can, instead, both look and feel as fresh as a daisy always by washing the poisons and toxins from the body with phosphated hot water each morning.

We should drink, before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to flush from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

The action of limestone phosphate and hot water on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentation gases, waste and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast and it is said to be a mild laxative until the roses begin to appear in the cheeks. A quarter pound of limestone phosphate will cost very little at your druggist, or from the store, but a teaspoonful added to the water should add variety to this dish.

Eggs a la Chaud.—Heat six eggs slightly with a fork. Place in a chafing dish a tablespoonful of butter, and when this is melted and hot add two tablespoonfuls of grated cheese. Stir until smooth, then add the eggs and season with paprika and salt. Cook until the eggs are scrambled. Serve on toast.

IS CHILD CROSS, FEVERISH, SICK

Look, Mother! If tongue is coated, give "California Syrup of Figs."

Children love this "fruit laxative," and nothing else cleanses the tender stomach, liver and bowels so nicely.

A child simply will not stop playing to empty the bowels, and the result is they become thoroughly clogged with waste, liver gets sluggish, stomach sours, then your little one becomes cross, cadaverous, feverish, don't eat, sleep or act naturally, breath is bad, system full of cold and sore throat, stomach-ache or diarrhoea. Listen, Mother! See if tongue is coated, then give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the system and you have a well child again.

Millions of mothers give "California Syrup of Figs" once or twice to perfectly harmless; children love it, and it never fails to clean little stomachs, livers and bowels.

Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Adv.

SALTS IF BACKACHY OR KIDNEYS TROUBLE YOU

Eat Meat If Your Kidneys Aren't Acting Right or If Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers You.

When you wake up with backache and dull aches in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them like you relieve your bowels; removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels offer no get-aroes, water scalds and you are obliged to work relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lithia-lithon, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular users, and it is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.—Adv.

THE SPRING HOUSE

MANITOU, the fashionable Colorado watering place, lies as in a cradle nest, in a cup-shaped glen, which is properly the opening of the pass, at an elevation of 6,123 feet above sea level. The town is shut away from the world by a majestic mountain wall, whose precipitous sides rise almost from its streets. Pike's Peak, trending westward and just visible above the crowd, of summits, gleams like a silver bee to the blue mantle of the sky, writes Gilbert Mechling.

Manitou is essentially a summer watering place. Although its excellent sewage, its modern means and methods of living render it a desirable place of permanent residence, yet it is best known as an agreeable summer watering place. It offers tourists accommodations ranging from tent and automobile camp, modest boarding houses or picturesque bungalow to modern, excellently equipped hotels in varying style proportioned to all purses.

These center around the wonderful group of radioactive mineral springs in the town's heart, where the resort hotels, Swiss chalets or bungalows, line winding avenues or dot hillside terraces bright with flowers or foliage shaded.

Its Springs Bring Health.

Varied as to analysis, Manitou's fourteen springs are strongly impregnated with soda, iron or magnesia lithia, lime, potash and other health giving elements. They are specific for stomach, kidney and blood troubles and rheumatism, while highly tonic, and beneficial to the nervous.

In radioactivity the gases of the Shoshone spring at Manitou have 21 times as much as Lansing's power and Manitou has 13.3 units, while Jackman had spring a thousand times less 101 units and Tyrly but one unit.

Plasma springs are similarly endowed with the waters of Carlsbad, and Bad Nauheim is duplicated at Glenwood Springs, Colorado, and waters of Idaho Springs, near Denver, are chemically akin to the famous waters of Carlsbad, Bohemia.

At Wagonwheel Gap, Colo., there are three springs, the Iron Spring, the Hot Saline, Hot Soda and Boiling Spring and cold lithia springs, these springs are similar in general mineralization to the waters of Bad Nauheim, Germany.

Clark's Wells in Pueblo are a highly valued group of mineral springs.

This Hot Spring, which is now covered by groups of mineral springs in the state, has been known because of the comparative analyses that have been made with the waters of noted European springs.

The writer of these lines well remembers that some years ago, when there was persistently brought to market for 50 a chalybeate water made then so, and thicker fare there hand no "dried out of." RARE ADDITION TO MUSEUM

Specimens of Congo Game, Insects and Snakes Presented by a Member of the Staff.

The bongo and okapi are animals that are seen in their natural state only in museums, after they are stuffed. They are extremely rare both inside and outside of museums and the American Museum of Natural History is shortly to be enriched by mounted specimens of both, along with some 60,000 specimens, 1,500 snakes and 20,000 catalogued subjects of all kinds. The collection is the result of six years' work in the Belgian Congo by Herbert Lang of the museum staff. Among the 20,000 items are 2,500 examples of implements, pottery and textiles related to savage arts and crafts, including the art of living. The number of specimens is so large that one is moved to wonder what the natives had left to sell to the test explorer after Mr. Lang had finished his collection. The okapi is a bewilder animal, very timid, and only two or three white men have ever seen it. Mr. Lang captured a baby okapi, which had been deserted by its mother on the approach of the hunters. The little fellow was allowed to run about the camp along well until the supply of milk gave out, and then it was delivered to the collection. Beside the bongo and okapi skins the collection includes skins of the giant eland, white chimpanzees, lions, elephants, buffalos and many rare birds.—Christian Herald.

THE SANDMAN IN STORY By Mrs. F. A. WALKER

FAIRIES AND NYMPHS.

One night in the fall of the year, when the leaves were falling in showers from the trees, the fairies was dered down by the river.

The queen had always told them to keep away from the water, whether it was a river, an ocean or lake, for the water nymphs held full sway there and they should act infrole.

But the little fairies saw the sky mirror floating over the surface, and they looked so attractive in the moonlight they could not resist the temptation to take a sail.

"I do not believe the nymphs could catch us," said one, "we can sail as fast and then they are asleep at this hour." And soon they were gliding along like so many flowers, their little wings were like tiny sails and made them go very fast.

But the water nymphs were soon aware that someone was in their domain, and the first thing the fairies knew the smooth surface of the water became like little waves and the leaves and their passengers tipped in the much threatening manner.

"Oh, dear!" cried the fairies, "nymphs, we tip once." The water splashed over them, and they folded their wings in alarm, for they knew that if their wings were wet they would spoil their beauty.

"Do you think the nymphs are awake?" asked one and then the water grew more wavy than ever and the nymphs came to the surface.

"So you have been bold enough to sail on our river," they said. "We will let you sail about for awhile and see how you like it." And they splashed water over the poor little fairies, who begged them to stop.

"Why did you come here if you did not like the water? You thought we were asleep and you would steal a sail," said one nymph.

"We will give them a sail in one swift boat," said another, and up to the surface came hundreds of shells by glittering fish.

The nymphs made the fairies get in the shells, and such wet looking fairies as they were. Their wings hung limp upon their backs and their pretty dresses were spoiled, but they never obeyed the nymphs for they were afraid of the water and did not dare use their wands.

The nymphs floated along beside the shells, and the fish swam like mad creatures through the water, the fairies clinging to the shells and every minute expecting to be thrown out.

Suddenly they saw light in their path a big character by dolphins, and all around it were mermaids blowing water from shell horns, and the moonlight falling upon the scene made them look like silver. The nymphs drew back for they knew that Father Neptune, and they knew they were in the river and were in the ocean, where they had no right to be. They were so intent upon punishing the fairies that they had sailed into the ocean without knowing it.

"What are you doing here without my permission?" asked Neptune. The nymphs hung their heads.

And who are these little creatures?" he asked.

"Please, sir, we are the fairies," said one. And then she told him how they were sailing on the river and the nymphs caught them.

"And we are so frightened," said another, and our wings and pretty dresses are wet and our queen will be angry.

"She may take away our wands," said another, and they all began to cry.

"Oh, do not cry," said Neptune, putting his hands over his ears, "do stop, and I will try to help you. Why, see here," he said, "why do you not use your wands?"

"We thought we couldn't on the water," said one fairy.

"Of course you can," said Neptune. "touch the shells and see what happens."

Presto, there was an island with a fairy standing on it.

"Now run out with your wands and bring the islands together in a large one. There you are on dry land," said Neptune "now run about and dry your wings and clothes." Neptune had called the nymphs around him and told them he would forgive them for coming to the ocean without permission if they would forgive the fairies and take them safely home.

The nymphs gladly agreed to this, and soon they had large shells for the fairies to sit in "we shall leave our island," said Neptune. "We will call it fairy island, and when you see this you will remember you are beyond your river's limit. And you and the fairies must be good friends also." They all promised to be on friendly terms after this, and the fairies, whose wings and dresses were dry and looked dainty again, took their seats in the shells. The nymphs drew them along and by the time they reached the woods where the fairies were to get out they were sound asleep. And now, on a moonlight night, you might see at a certain hour the fairies enjoying a sail with the nymphs beside them.

CITY VERSUS COUNTRY BOYS

Prizes of City Life Held No Allurements for Metropolitan Lad—Not Worth Striving For.

Speaking of the curious fact that city boys seem to have greater physical stamina than country boys there is also the civil war tradition that it was the city boys who stood privations, long marches and other physical strains better than the country boys. That means the country boy constantly his city competitor must be his superior in the arts of city life which dazzle so alluringly before his eyes, whereas to the familiar vision of the city beer they appear as mere matters of course, hardly worth the recognition that amounts to rewarding strife and self-sacrifice.

Soon Were Gliding Along.

First Prize Shetland Pony and Foal.

The principal objects to be attained through the promotion of boys' agricultural clubs in the South, as defined by those in charge of this work, are:

1. To encourage the farm boys along the lines of the activities of country life.

2. To put into practice the facts of scientific agriculture obtained from books and papers.

3. To bring the school into closer touch with the farm.

4. To assist in the development of the spirit of cooperation in the family and in the community.

5. To dignify and magnify the vocation of the farmer by demonstrating the returns which may be secured from farming when it is properly conducted.

6. To enlarge the vision of the boy so as to give him definite purposes at the important period in his life.

7. To furnish to the aggressive, progressive rural schoolteacher an opportunity to vitalize the work of the school by correlating the teaching of agriculture with school practice.

The aim of the boys club work is the same as that among men—viz. to secure the adoption of better methods of farming and greater yields at less cost. Many of the boys in the clubs who begin to study agriculture in this way will continue the study in the agricultural colleges; others will continue such efforts on their farms, and all of them will make more useful and more efficient citizens. From the pleasant and profitable experience of growing and managing their small plats, they will develop into independent, intelligent farmers.

A Model Seeker and a Model Christian

By REV. R. M. RUSSELL, D. D. Instructor in Doctrine, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.

TEXT—He went on his way rejoicing—Acts 8:39.

The story of Philip and the Ethiopian eunuch presents at once an illustration of effective personal work in soul winning and the portrait of a model seeker and a model Christian. It is safe to draw lessons from such an incident since it is so near to the fountain head of Christian history and so manifestly controlled by the spirit of God. The eunuch stands forth as a model of excellence both as a seeker and a Christian.

I—As a model seeker the eunuch provides four points of excellence.

1. He was an earnest seeker. Knowing that Jerusalem was a place of special divine manifestation he made the long journey from northern Africa not by the comfortable method of modern travel, but by the slow process of camel driven, neither distance nor desert sand hindered his journey.

What a contrast here with many unsaved men who will not make any effort to come in contact with truth, even by as much as walking around a corner to some place of worship where the word of God would be explained.

2. He was a persistent seeker. Failing to find the truth for which he sought, either in the splendor of the temple worship, or by association with other worshippers, he left Jerusalem for his home still seeking, and was giving himself to a diligent reading of the prophecy of Isaiah.

Here again he stands out in marked contrast with many of the unsaved who utterly neglect the Word of God and who do not open the Bible from one month to another, even though they admit it is the good news of salvation, the time table of God's road of eternal life, and the description of a heavenly inheritance with the conditions of possession.

3. He was a teachable seeker. The eunuch was puzzled by the writing of the prophet. Confronted by one who assumed to claim knowledge, he at once invited the stranger to share his chariot and asked him to explain the prophet's message.

In this regard he is a model for every inquirer. It is no confession of moral weakness to seek the help of another in things spiritual. It simply the recognition that another has proceeded us in the search for truth. Many people struggle for years with doubts and fears that might be removed in a single hour of conference with pastor or spiritual friend.

4. He was an obedient seeker. Hearing Philip's explanation of the gospel he at once expressed his faith in Christ and claimed the first opportunity for obedience. Does not Christ call us to follow Him?

Intensely Practical.

"What is your idea of a practical philanthropist?"

"There are various types of practical philanthropists."

"Yes?"

SAVED MINISTER'S LIFE.

Rev. W. H. Warner, Frederick, Md., writes: "My trouble was Sciatica. My back was affected and took the form of Lumbago. I also had Neuralgia, cramps in my muscles, pressure or sharp pain on the top of my head and nervous dizzy spells. I had other symptoms showing that my kidneys were at fault, so I took Dodd's Kidney Pills. They were the means of saving my life."

Dodd's Kidney Pills, 50c per box at your dealer, or Dodd's Medicine Co., Buffalo, N. Y. Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets for indigestion have proved helpful in many instances. PAINS IN SIDE AND BACK

How Mrs. Kelly Suffered and How She was Cured.

Burlington, Wis.—"I was very irregular, and had pains in my side and back, but after taking Lydia E. I know your remedies have done me worlds of good and I home every suffering woman will give them a trial."—Mrs. Anna Kelly, 310 Chestnut Street, Burlington, Wis.

The many convincing testimonials constantly published in the newspapers ought to be proof enough to women who suffer from female difficulties, like peculiar to their sex that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the medicine they need.

This so-called root and herb remedy has proved unequaled for these troubles; it contains what is needed to restore woman's health and strength.

JOHN I. GIBSON IS ELECTED SECRETARY

DIRECTORS OF WESTERN MICHIGAN DEVELOPMENT BUREAU MEET

Products of Section Exhibited in Various Cities Are Viewed By 423,000 People

At a banquet at Traverse City of the directors and friends of the Western Michigan Development bureau there was general rejoicing over the announcement that the resignation of John I Gibson, secretary several years of the bureau, would not be accepted. Mr Gibson having reconsidered his intended action. That the bureau would continue to have his undivided attention was learned by the friends of the bureau with great rejoicing.

Mr. Gibson's wonderful work since he became secretary has made him an invaluable man whom the bureau could not afford to lose.

Chasles W. Carman, of Grand Rapids and W. P. Hartman, industrial and agricultural agent of the G. R. & I. railroad, were speakers. The annual business meeting was held in the chamber of commerce rooms.

Directors were elected for the coming year, the board selected the following officers: President, D. H. Day, Glen Haven; vice-president, A. S. White, Grand Rapids; second vice-president, E. R. Harris, Ellsworth; secretary, John I. Gibson, Grand Rapids; treasurer, R. H. Hendel, Manistee.

Secretary Gibson presented a full report of the activities for the year 1916 which showed that 1,300 famous have come into the region authorized by the bureau—89 counties in all—and that 1,061 carloads of goods and 86 tons left than carloads, had been shipped in.

During the year the bureau has opened exhibits in Chicago and Cincinnati at a cost of $1,400, which have been viewed by more than 300,000 people.

In the coming year the work of Secretary Gibson will be lightened somewhat by having part of the solicitation of funds done by members of the executive committee.

While the main effort in the past has been along the line of fruit culture, more attention hereafter will be given to grazing and cattle raising. The revival of several fair associations in the territory of the bureau has helped the work considerably, especially in the matter of livestock raising, and the bureau expects big things in that line in the next few years.

PROMINENT RESORTER DEAD

W. H. Miller was advised Monday of the death at Pasadena, Calif., on the 25th, of Clinton P. Soper, of Bloomington, Ill. Heart failure was the cause of his death.

Mr. Soper was vice-president and a director of the Charlevoix Summer Home Association and has been prominent in the affairs of that resort for many years.

DR. THAD LEWIS DEAD

Dr. Thad Lewis, a pioneer physician practicing at Central Lake, died at his home 2 o'clock afternoon of pneumonia.

Deceased was a nephew of Dr. Levi Lewis, of this city, with whom Dr. Thad studied medicine for a time before entering college.

He leaves a wife.

CONTEMPORANEOUS EVENTS

WHAT WEATHER CONDITIONS HAVE SUGGESTED IN THE STUDY OF WAR MOVEMENTS

It is very slippery under foot. If you are a careful observer of contemporaneous events, when you place a smooth shod foot upon an icy sidewalk area and precipitate yourself upon the unyielding concrete, your mind turns instinctively to the contemporaneous foolishness of the British at Gallipoli, you brand yourself as an idiot, likewise the warden of Britain.

When you pull yourself together and contemplate the two results of injury, no matter how you both might have escaped the catastrophy by minding the track or wearing "creepers."

Doubtless Kitchener in feeling the same way about the Balkan fiasco. The war lords of England have slipped and fallen upon the icy field of diplomacy and bisuped their blooming backsides on the cold, cold ground.

The officials of the Congregational church with their families took possession tonight the parsonage last Friday evening and helped Mr. and Mrs. Taggart celebrate their thirtieth wedding anniversary. A potluck supper was served and an impromptu program of songs, recitations, stories and amusing anecdotes made the evening pass pleasantly and quickly.

Mail communication with Beaver Island is now discontinued for an indefinite period. The islanders are now awaiting the first Gaslaw Gasoline boat which at this writing looks afar off.—Later: The tug Two Sisters, lying at the port for the winter, took the Island mail over Monday. They were met off the harbor and the mail exchanged at the edge of the shore ice bank.

Church matters that partake of the nature of sectarian controversy are barred from the columns of this paper, at least we shall do the judge of what to print and what not to print. The pulpit is the place to settle these matters, and not the newspaper. We welcome regular church notices, which we think is enough. It takes time to set type, and time is money. Render unto Cesar the things that are Cesar's.

There have been numerable bumps on about every part of the anatomy during the recent icy period, some of them temporarily painful—but the most serious slip that has come to our notice occurred Monday when Mrs. John Cook fell on the sidewalk and broke an arm. Mrs. Cook was on her way from her home to the city treasurer's office when she fell. The accident is made serious by the fact that Mr. Cook, city treasurer, is confined to the house with grippe.

While we are not personally altogether certain about it, there are those of mature years and fairly accurate memory who assert that local history does not furnish a parallel of the weather inflected upon the human race of this particular locality in the month of January, 1916. As a matter of fact, it has done more to disturb moral equipoise and interrupt the exercise of Christian fortitude than could have been accomplished by a score of democratic tariff statesmanship.

The lake trout fishing cases which were taken into Justice court by deputy Warden Smith, and put over for ten days, are still on the docket, another week's adjournment being allowed. Meanwhile we presume the warden department are making an effort to bridge the chasm between justice and the letter of the law. So the matter is yet shrouded in uncertainty. We would not presume give advice in the matter, but we should not be surprised if the whole matter is dropped. This thing is certain: The spirit of the law is not intended to prohibit the catching of lake trout with a hook and line in Round and Pine Lakes, and we have seen a letter from Warden Oates in which he practically yields the point.

BOY SCOUTS

The Eagle Patrols of Boy Scouts went to Elsworth last Saturday and played basket ball. They hoped to play a Scout team but as the Scouts were not on hand, the boys mixed in with independents and played any number of games.

The score was 36-15 in favor of Elsworth, but if they had not over-aged on and with independents besides, no doubt it would have been quite different. Over 40 of the independents scored 20 of the 36.

The Elsworth boys are good fellows and treated us with much courtesy.

At a Troop Meet Monday evening Cartier was chosen Athletic Director and they hope to be heard from again soon. Cartier, Schweitzer, Bedwin, Krunick and Weed pitched the Elsworth game.

Northern Michigan

At the annual meeting of the Traverse Bays Telephone Company held last week the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, L. Armstrong, of Alden; Vice President, W. G. Mudge; Secretary and general manager, W. D. Hickin; Treasurer, A. J. Dole of Bellaire; Directors, A. F. Anderson, George Kloster and Harry Warner. A dividend of seven per cent was ordered paid to the stockholders.

The Local Optionists of Otsego county are jubilant over their victory in securing an order from Circuit Judge Sharpe to the board of supervisors to reconvene and reconsider their decision relative to submitting the question of Local Option to a vote of the people this spring. The petition asked for an order to compel the supervisors to submit the question but this was refused and it will be up to the board to decide upon the sufficiency of the petitions, a question not arising primarily.

Petoskey Independent: Deputy State Fire Warden William Pierson of Royal Park, was in Petoskey Wednesday following up his work of making a fire map of the lower part of Northern Michigan for the forest fire department. This map, made by counties, will include the nature of the timber, the lay of the land, streams, towns, villages, etc., so that the minute a fire is reported the deputy can turn to the map of that section and know at once the nature of the woods in which the fire is burning, and how best to go about the work of putting the fire out. This appears one of the most valuable pieces of work this department has undertaken in a long time and that Mr. Pierson was selected to accomplish this work shows that he held in high regard by the department and his ability is being recognized.

Petoskey News: Charles Davis, well-known Hurt Lake boatman and hunter and fisherman, who has the reputation of being the greatest liar in Northern Michigan, was in Petoskey Wednesday, having been forced to come to town his hunting camp on the Pidgeon river because of weather conditions. While here he related an experience of a Kentuckian, a wood-chopper, in one of the camps near the big swamp in which Mr. Davis has been hunting, who while out with his hound and shotgun after rabbits discovered a bear and three cubs under a big pile of blown down trees and brush. The Kentuckian he reported to have killed the bear and all three cubs without any aid. Mr. Davis says he had been all around that same jam pile time and again with his dogs but did not discover the bear. He says he believes that the warm weather allowed the sows to reach the outside for the first time on the day the bears were found.

CZAR OF RUSSIA IS AN ACTIVE RULER

Rises Early and Puts In Twelve Hours of Work.

MEALTIME IS MADE MERRY.

All Governmental Affairs Are Tabooed When Royal Family is Eating, and Time Is Passed In a Jovial Manner. Always Prays Before Retiring After Strenuous Day.

Petrograd.—The czar of Russia, to whom few Americans have had the opportunity of speaking save diplomats, is one of the busiest rulers in Europe.

He rises at 7 o'clock after about seven hours of sleep and then puts in ten or twelve hours of work, and no fewer than four hours of these are spent alone. About six hours are given to meals and relaxation with the family. No governmental affairs are allowed to be discussed during mealtime, and the czar, czarina and the children indulge in merry talk.

Before 9 the czar has finished his modest breakfast and begins his daily work. He reads the newspapers, telegrams and other information presented to him and makes a note of all interesting matter. The time from 10 to 11 o'clock is assigned to receiving, but nearly always from 10 to half past 10 o'clock he spends the moments of the officials of his household or gives special orders to his aide-de-camp, who is a lockset star pan is brought to him by the chief commissioned officer of the day, and the meal exchanged at the edge of the shore ice bank.

Church matters that partake of the nature of sectarian controversy are barred from the columns of this paper, at least we shall do the judge of what to print and what not to print. The pulpit is the place to settle these matters, and not the newspaper. We welcome regular church notices, which we think is enough. It takes time to set type, and time is money. Render unto Cesar the things that are Cesar's.

There have been numerable bumps on about every part of the anatomy during the recent icy period, some of them temporarily painful—but the most serious slip that has come to our notice occurred Monday when Mrs. John Cook fell on the sidewalk and broke an arm. Mrs. Cook was on her way from her home to the city treasurer's office when she fell. The accident is made serious by the fact that Mr. Cook, city treasurer, is confined to the house with grippe.

While we are not personally altogether certain about it, there are those of mature years and fairly accurate memory who assert that local history does not furnish a parallel of the weather inflected upon the human race of this particular locality in the month of January, 1916. As a matter of fact, it has done more to disturb moral equipoise and interrupt the exercise of Christian fortitude than could have been accomplished by a score of democratic tariff statesmanship.

ABRUPTLY CHANGED HIS MIND

Jersey City Man Had Cause to Reconsider the Advisability of Cutting Up State of Texas.

We had been talking for half an hour or so on the subject of dividing Texas into four states, and the man from Jersey City, who had a front seat in the stage, insisted that the matter ought to come up for congressional action. We finally drew up at a way station to change horses, and as we got down to stretch our legs the one native Texan among the eight passengers pulled out a bowie knife and confronted the Jersey man with:

"So you reckon that there's 'nuff of Texas to make four states?"

"Yes—it's a very large state," replied the man, looking with anxiety at the knife.

"Exactly. You are also a very large man."

"Yes."

"Do you reckon there's 'nuff of you to make four men?"

"Well, hardly."

"If I should even slice off your ears you'd lose suthin' of your glory wouldn't you?"

"Of course."

"And you wouldn't feel that you were much of a man with your head gone, would you?"

"No indeed."

"I merely illustrate," said the Texan, as he whetted the blade on his boot-leg, "if Texas can be divided up and suthin—

"Oh! She can't be!" interrupted Jersey. "Texas is none too big for a model. It stands for the entire state of the West, and if I were one of her honored citizens I should certainly oppose such a movement with my whole energy. Gentlemen, let us drink to Texas as she is!"

And we gurgled.—Exchange.

VALUABLE SOAP BERRY TREE

Product of Ecuador Has Remarkable Qualities Which Make It Worth as a Cleanser of the Skin.

The jabonello, or soap berry tree (Sapindus saponaria), grows in the humid parts of western Ecuador. It attains a height of about fifty feet and has wide-spreading branches and immense quantities of fruit of the size and shape of cherries.

The slightly transparent yellowish skin and pulp surrounding the round black seeds are so saponaceous as to be used instead of soap by many people of Ecuador, being equivalent to more than fifty times their weight of that material.

The hard, polished seeds have been used extensively in Spain and England for numerous buttons, for they are very durable and seldom break. They are used also as beads.

Although considerable quantities of the berry are utilized locally, tons of them are on the ground every year, there being as yet little foreign demand for them. Since they contain a large percentage of saponin, they should be of value in the manufacture of soap.

Voices of the Sea.

In "The Life of the Ocean," by Charles Kittredge Condon, is this bit of sea description:

"The sea is not a lovable monster. And monster it is. It is beautiful, the sea, always beautiful in one way or another, but it is cruel and unmindful of the life that is in it and upon it. It was cruel last evening in its lurid low sunset that made it glow dully, to the old mariner, a vague mourning that made it look like death. The waves pounded freely because they rose and pitched toward our boat laboring in the trough. And all the long night it seemed to me that I heard voices through the planking, talking, talking endlessly, monotonously, querulously, and I couldn't make out whether it was the ocean calling for the souls of the dead or herself muttering gropingly, finding herself. If the voices are of the dead they will soon cease, for she must find herself soon. After the long years of the sea they must be sad stress that cry, restless, questioning, unsatisfied—quaint homeless little ghosts."

CLAS NICHOLAS

For Safety's Sake.

Business was very bad, so the firm appointed Patrick foreman, a position which he was very proud of.

He was always fussing around, ordering this and altering that. One morning his gang of men stopped work because they heard the well-known voice of their new foreman shouting loudly.

Down below on the ground stood Pat, yelling lustily, and waving his arms wildly.

"Oi say, you, up there!" he shouted. "You know that ladder at the end of the scaffolding? Well, don't any of you thry to come down, because Oive taken it away!"—Philadelphia Record.

Gold Fields Still Prolific.

Reminiscences of the palmy days of the gold fields in western Australia are recently revived when a parcel of dolled gold was brought to Kalgoorlie from Nulla Nulla Bill's lease at Broad Arrow. It was the finest display seen for many years, and realized the rich finds of the early days of Coolgardie. When smelted the bullion weighed 700 ounces and is valued at over $15,000. The reef from which the gold was obtained has widened to five feet, and there are about 300 tons of ore in sight, in addition to 110 tons on the surface, estimated to average three ounces per ton.

IN COUNTRY OF NOVELIST

Visitors to Summer Home of Kate Douglas Wiggin Wrote Entertainingly of Their Sojourn There.

Everyone who went to the Dorcas fair, held each summer at Quillocte, the summer home of Kate Douglas Wiggin, talked about it, and a great many wrote about it. Here is an account of the tea party with which one group of visitors closed their afternoon:

"We took our tea at an old tea house down the road and in sight of the bridge. The tables were set out of doors and I don't know which one of Mrs. Wiggin's characters served us. Certainly she was as good as anything in a book. There are servants; aired girls, and those who wait on table in Maine. Said she to me: 'What will you have to drink?' 'Tea,' I answered. One other of our party called for tea, but later changed to coffee when the other members ordered it. 'Well, what do you say now?' demanded the girl. 'Tea,' I answered firmly. And sandwiches?' 'Certainly.' 'And we have gingerbread.' 'Gingerbread, too, but not with the sandwiches.' I seemed to have made a hit. In due season she reappeared from the house, deposited the coffee upon the table, and a part of the cup of tea in my lap. She wasn't looking at the tea. 'How many people do you think were up at Mrs. Wiggin's today?' she asked. 'Four thousand!' I answered. 'No, really,' she gasped. 'Only 1,100. They told me so. Four thousand!' I didn't mind, I guessed.' Then it was 'a-100,' she assured me, and deftly removing traces of the spilled tea, went in search of the gingerbread. But dear me, Hollis is filled with people who have clad themselves in the garments of Mrs. Wiggin's characters. I suspect that during the afternoon we must have touched elbows with Mr. Cobb, and Miranda and Emma Jane and Clara Bolle, and even, possibly, Mr. Aladdin."

REASON GIVES WAY TO WILL

Physiological Explanation That May Bring Strong Denials From Those Fond of Argument.

"Men's interests come to them from such sources as their parentage, birthplace, party or sect," writes Dr. W. Hanna Thomson, "and the influence of these factors in life sway their reasoning as naturally and irresistibly as the wind carries with it the dust of a road.

"This subservience of reason to the will is simply physiological and therefore so unconscious that it is to no sense hypocritical or insincere, however some may wonder at the intellectual feats in reasoning of those who have differed from them, not in mental faculty, but in their native environment.

"No one should wonder at or resent any reasoning as out of the ordinary disuse in man has to do as he is bidden by his master.

"In short, the world has yet to learn, once for all, that men are not to be judged or condemned by such superficial things about them as their opinions.

"But the will right first and man's opinions will follow suit as soon as they have opportunities for knowing better."

Hiring and Firing.

Personnel is, in fact, the all-important element of plant equipment. Selection of employees should therefore require more study than selection of boilers and generators. Unfortunately the art and science of hiring is so young and basic principles yet so vague that the great majority of companies operating plants still continue to waste enormous amounts of money and dissipate natural resources in adding to doing a great social injustice in this respect. Time honored habits of "hiring and firing," building up an organization by "fits and mins" method, has generally two immediate results. Men are hired because they do not want to starve, perform their tasks indifferently, merely avoiding gross neglect and, therefore, the actual efficiency of equipment; and frequent changes of employees, either because of their low efficiency or because of a fancy to advance a good fireman to a position of bad engineer, result in lack of thoroughness, lack of pride in their profession, and in extra expense in training unfitted men.—Engineering Magazine.

Wanted Bath Without Room.

A worn, dusty and bedraggled man marched courageously across the lobby to the desk of one of the exceedingly luxurious New York hostelries. "What are your prices?" he inquired. "Room without a bath, $2.50; with bath, $3," the clerk rattled off glibly. The dusty and bedraggled one pondered. "Well, please give me," he remarked finally, "a bath without a room. And kindly see that a nice elderdown pillow is placed in the tub. Also be especially sure that—" at this the clerk looked up. And the house detective closed the incident.

Drill Struck Wood at 1,900 Feet.

One of the first deep wells drilled in the West was put down near Injunoy, Nev., by the Central Pacific railway in 1881, in a search for good water. The boring reached a depth of 2,750 feet, but the water obtained was of very unsatisfactory quality. At 1,700 feet the drill encountered a bed of "petrified clams" and the record states that at 1,900 feet well-preserved "redwood timber" was found.

Daily Thought.

When friendships are real they are not alone theme or from work, but the noblest things we know.—Emerson.

It Was a Plea.

Smith—"Is that dog of yours smart?" Brown (grouchy)—"Smart? Well, I should say so! I was going out with him yesterday, and I stopped and said: 'Towser, we have forgotten something.' And bothered if he didn't sit down and scratch his head to see if he could think what it was!"

Homeliness Explained.

Mr. Pittsburgh was asked the other day how he could account for nature's forming him so ugly. "Nature was not to blame," said he. Those Noisy Musicians.

Drew a fine concert a man who really appreciated music for its own sake was actually annoyed by a young fop in front of him who kept talking to the girl at his side. They keep up with a noise with their instruments that I can't hear half your brilliant conversation."

U. S. SUPREME COURT REJECTS G. R. & I. APPEAL

"PETOSKEY INTERCHANGE" DECISION BY STATE COURT UPHELD

The United States supreme court has refused to listen to the appeal of the Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad in the famous "Petoskey Interchange" case, according to word received from Attorney General Grant Fellows, who is in Washington.

Several years ago owners of summer cottages on the Pere Marquette south of Petoskey insisted that the Grand Rapids & Indiana make Petoskey an interchange point for tickets. The G. R. & I. refused to do, asserting that if the passengers for these points wanted to go north, they should travel all the way by the G. R. & I. instead of going to Petoskey over the Pere Marquette. The Michigan railroad commission ordered the G. R. & I to make Petoskey an interchange point.

The Michigan supreme court upheld the order and Justice Pitney of the United States court refused to entertain the appeal.

—10—

The trusty, saintly, sensible voice, half lantoring but altogether kind, genuinely interested in the man Inquisitive too, would have gone to a harder or more hardened heart than beat on Blanche's balcony that night. Yet as Cavalier lighted his pipe he blowed cold enough to be her father.

"I'll tell you some time," he puffed. "It's only a case of two heads," said Blanche. "Mine was young hotheaded and I should like to help, that's all."

"You cannot."

"How do you know? I believe you're going to devote yourself to this poor man, and you can just send off I assure you, I'm in."

"Well!" he said.

"Surely I could help you there! Remember I had 'Bill,' she cried Blanche, encouraged by his silence. "I'm not half a bad nurse, really!"

"I'm certain you're not."

"Does he look very ill?"

She had been trying to avoid the direct question as far as possible, but this one seemed so harmless. Yet it was strange, too, that Cavalier should ask her anything of the sort, and he so obtuse, and breathed, whereas he had been all stabs and fidgets just before. His pipe was quite forgotten, and he was the merit of fresh tobacco. It required constant attention—and he did not look like lighting it again.

Until tonight they had not mentioned Herman, since the morning he gone. That had been a tacit rule of the land, of variable talk and humor—and But Blanche had always assumed that Cavalier had been to see him in the prison; and now he told her he had never had

"I can't face him," he cried under his breath, "and that's the truth! Let me get him out of this place, and I'm his man forever; but until I do, while there's a chance of failing, I simply can't face him. I'm a fool, I'm a fool! he's asleep to see me. Why should I force myself upon him?"

"He hasn't raved to see you because he doesn't know what you're doing for him!" Blanche raised voice as as easily as she was speaking, all her resolution gone, and her heart on fire for just a moment. "He doesn't know because I do be sure you wouldn't have him told that you'd arrived, just he should suspect! You are a brick, you really are!"

He was too much of one to sit still under the sense of her praising his hands. "Why shouldn't I be—to see her, the instant he landed, or seemed so overjoyed, and such a boy again, or made so much of her and their common memories! He need not have begun begging her, in a minute, to go out to Australia, and then never have mentioned it again; he might just as well have told her if he had or hoped to have a wife to welcome her! Of course he saw it afterward, himself; that was why the whole subject of Australia had been dropped so suddenly and for good. Most likely he had married betwixt him; if so, she was very sorry, but he might have said that he was married.

Curiously enough, it was over Martha that she felt least able to forgive him. Martha would say nothing, but her unspoken denunciations of Cassie would be only less intolerable than her unspoken sympathy with Blanche. Martha had been perfectly awful about the whole thing. And Martha had committed the final outrage of being perfectly right, from her idiotic point of view.

Now among all these meditations of a long night, and of a still longer day, in which nobody even troubled to send her word of his case at Kingston, it would be too much to say that no thought of Hilton Toye ever entered the mind of Blanche. She could not help liking him; he amused her immensely, and he had proposed to her twice, and warned her he would again she felt the force of his warning, because she felt his force of character and will. She literally felt three forces, as actual emanations from the strongest personality that had ever impinged upon her own.

"I Guess I'm Not Fit to Speak to You," He Said.

In the day of reaction, such occasions were bound to wind up in a single spice, each with a certain complexion not altogether innocent of comparisons. But the battalion of Toye's victories only marched on Blanche when Martha came to her, on the little green rug of a lawn behind the house, to ask that Mr. Toye had yet kid called and was in the drawing-room.

Blanche stole up past the door, and quickly made herself smarter than she had ever done by day, for Walter Cavalier! At least she put on a "dressy" blouse, her calling suit (which always looked new), and did what she could to her hair. All this was only because Mr. Toye always came down at 11 to country hours and it was worse to make people feel awkward if you could help it. So in sailed Blanche, in her very best for the light of day, to be followed as soon as possible by her river frock, though she had had tea herself. And there stood Hilton Toye, chin blue and collar black, his trousers all knees and creases, exactly as he had jumped out of the boat yesterday.

"I guess I'm not fit to speak to you," he said. "But that's just what I've come to do—for the third time!"

"Oh, Mr. Toye!" cried Blanche, really frightened by the face that made his meaning clear. It relaxed a little as he shrank, involuntarily, but the compassion in his eyes and mouth did not lessen their steady determination.

"I didn't have time to make myself presentable," he explained. "I thought you wouldn't have me waste a moment if you understood the situation. I want you to promise to marry me right now!"

Blanche began to breathe again. Evidently he was on the eve of yet another of his journeys, probably back to America; part he wanted to get over essaying; at first she had thought he had bad news to break to her, but this was no worse than she had heard before. Only it was more difficult to cope with him; everything was different, and he so much more pressing and precipitate. She had never met this Hilton Toye before. Yet she was distinctly frightened by him. For a minute she had coaxed to be frightened of herself; ah, know had own mind once more, and spoke it much as he had spoken his, entirely impulsively, but just as firmly to the point.

"One moment," he interrupted, "I said nothing about my feelings, because they're a kind of state proposition by this time; but for form's sake I may state there's no change there, except in my conviction I guess a person's feelings are liable to change over you, Miss Blanche! I've a worse case than ever. If that makes any difference."

Blanche shook her yellow head. "Nothing can," she said. "There must be no possible mistake about it this time, because I want you to be very good and never ask me again.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

HAD ORIGIN IN DIPLOMACY

Famous Phrase Which Is Often Used Has Been Ascribed to a Bishop of Milan.

"When you are in Rome do as Rome does," is one of the phrases which are so old that their origin is lost in the mists of antiquity.

It is generally asserted, however, that it arose from the following incident, given in one of St. Augustine's epistles: "Augustine was in the habit of dining upon Saturday and fasting the day, but being puzzled with the different practices then prevailing (for they had begun to fast at Rome on Saturday) he consulted St. Ambrose, the bishop of Milan, on the subject. The answer of the Milan saint was this: 'When I am here I do not fast on Saturday, but when at Rome I do fast on Saturday.'"

Hulme, in his "Anatomy of Melancholy," speaks of those persons who are always swayed to and fast action by their surroundings. "When they are at Rome," he says, "they do there as they see done."

His Accustomed Place.

Seven-year-old Frances was watching her papa start for the office and reporting his progress to mamma, who was a little near-sighted.

"The car's stopping for him," said Frances.

"Has he got on?" asked mamma.

"Yes, mamma. He has jumped on and taken his place on a strap."—Park.

Spring Wash Dresses for Children

Early in January the new things for spring on children's wear are presented by their designers, and the buyers seeing is soon under way. Fabrics and styles are at hand for the complete oration of the home dressmaker, and she may anticipate the spring and earn leisure in summer by getting much of the spring sewing out of the way in the middle of winter.

There are many pretty new models in frocks for little girls, including school and play dresses and those for afternoon and little party frocks, that it is more of a pleasure than a task to make. A gingham dress, for every day, and a linen silk for dress, as designed for the girl of ten years, are shown in the picture given here, and they are well worth while copying exactly as they are.

The gingham dress is a small plaid pattern, with tan and soft darker colorings crossed with very narrow bars in black. It is cut with a novel yoke which drops at each side of the front and slopes down to the waist line at the sides. The shape is the same at the back.

The skirt portion is plaited into the yoke at the back and sides and partly across the front. But at the center the fullness is taken up by shirrings.

The neck is cut round, with a shallow V opening at the front and finished with a small sailor collar of plain tan linen. The edges of the collar and the cuffs are trimmed in a tan lined with buttonhole stitching in black heavy linen floss. Deep blue and black are the colors used for the stitching, and they repeat the blue and black of the fabric.

A plain collar of black velvet ribbon is worn with the frock, slipped through narrow straps of the shoulders, which are sewed to the dress below the waist line. The gingham is fastened under a small bow at the back and is simply slipped out when the dress is laundered.

The white linen frock has a pleated skirt with a panel at the front and shallow plaits at each side. It is set on to a plain waist of organdie, cut with a round neck finished with a narrow band. It fastens down the front with small crochet buttons. The soft linen jacket is scalloped and embroidered by hand about the edges, and the sailor collar and narrow turned-back cuffs are made to match it. The girdle is of black velvet, fastening at the back under a small flat bow.

Colored linens as well as white are used for this model, but white is the most satisfactory in the long run.

New Neckwear.

One of the unusual new stocks is made with the outside cut deep enough to turn down quite on the shoulders. It could be made of batiste or linen, silk or any material approved, so it is sent out. The turnover part nearly turns away at the throat from the neck proper and it wrinkles a bit, which is part of its charm.

The Wheat Yield Tells the Story of Western Canada's Rapid Progress

The heavy crops in Western Canada have caused a new records to be made in the handling of grain by railroads. For, while the movement of these crops depends upon the bounteousness of the resources of the different roads, despite enlarged equipments and increased facilities, have been strained as never before, and previous records have thus been broken repeatedly.

The largest Canadian wheat shipments through New York ever known are reported for the period up to October 15th, upwards of four and a quarter million bushels being exported in less than six weeks, and this was but the overflow of the Canadian Northwest, through which point shipments were much larger than to New York.

Yields as high as 45 bushels of wheat per acre are reported from all parts of the country; while yields of 45 bushels per acre are common.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS

In the Realm of Ribbons

A fascinating vanity box and one of the latest of those pretty conceits that will delight ribbons. They are always alluring and more full of delight than ever when they combine a little needlework with much beauty. This both of the trifles pictured contrive to do.

The small round box is made of lavender satin ribbon with a mirror used for lip fitting. Lining the lids side out. The ribbon forms a frame for it, stitched about the edge. At the top the bag is edged with gold lace, and gold lace braid is fastened about it under a second position of small ribbon flowers. It is closed with lavender silk cords, which end in small dome made of the cord.

The "vanity" consists in a bunch of deep purple violets simulated in narrow satin ribbon, with a lifelike orchid and silk embroidered in the heart of the orchid is hidden a tiny box of compact powder and a powder puff. This bit of artifice is disclosed, to the delight of everyone, when the wearer of the bouquet improves her complexion by looking to the flower for aid.

The stems of the flowers are tied with dark green satin ribbon. Only the blossoms are made of ribbon, and they are a little mirror, furnishing my lady with the necessary first aids to the complexion.

Variegated Colors.

The fashion of vivid colors on the head has launched a mass of variegated velvet hats to be worn with somber tailored suits on the street and in a more subdued form with afternoon gowns. The velvet in these turbans is very supple and silky and is pulled up and out into irregular folds. Right in this manipulation rests the skill of the milliner and the resultant beauty of the hat. Grandeur is not considered, but it must be gently done. A spray of cut steel ornaments is also fashionable. In the heart of the orchid is hidden a tiny box of compact powder and a powder puff. This bit of artifice is disclosed, to the delight of everyone, when the wearer of the bouquet improves her complexion by looking to the flower for aid.

Evening Frock.

There is a good deal of license permitted in the choice of the evening frock. It is quite correct to have a train if one fancies such, or the dress may be short and full and innocent of any trailing appendage. It will take a little while to become thoroughly accustomed to the modish wear skirt is rainy-day length in front and the regal evening contour at the back. The appearance is rather awkward when viewed from the front, but fashion accomplishes wonders and even so contradictory a model may become popular in the coming fall.

Lengthening the Skirt.

Gathering up all the straws that show the wind, it is probable that the street skirts will grow longer as the season advances. They may not descend to the instep, but they will reach the ankles. The extreme shortness of skirts for the last five months has been so overemphasized in a showy way the conservative women prefer to go against the majority.

Fowl in Chicken.

"Mail, sir," repeated the office boy, and placed a pile of miscellaneous letters on the desk of young Gordon Leith, manager of the importing house of Waltham & Co.

Leith only nodded. He was in a pleasant dream and did not want to be disturbed. In four days he was to marry Vera Merriam. He had everything to be thankful for. His father was wealthy and stood high socially. Recently Waltham & Company had raised his salary. Everything was harmonious and lovely. Even gruff, dignified presently father-in-law was seemingly pleased at the approaching wedding. Was he not coming in that afternoon to talk over the final arrangements for it with Leith?

Smiling happily at Gordon Leith, at length arousing from his happy reverie. "All right—there will be only three days more of it. Then for a two weeks' delightful honeymoon."

In a perfunctory way Leith took up the paper knife and slit the envelope before him. Then he began taking out their contents.

"Order," he tallied them off—"complaint, request for new price list—and he placed the letters in the trays of the various departments—"order, what's this?"

"That's Me."

Leith stared hard and looked confused and startled, as he read the words

"It will be for your own good to meet me at 2 p. m. Tuesday, at Gregory's place. Come alone and I will be in No. 27. Bring along the cash to take up the bill. It's a very important matter. Regard for a new reputation of a very popular young man, Harry Merriam," he spoke sternly. "He is out of the city. Why appear in his stead. You demand a thousand dollars from him."

"Honestly owed, you."

"You made a provision," went on Leith steadily, "that he can have his revenge. Does that hold?"

The gamester studied his visitor keenly. Then he replied:

"Richie!"

"I know but one game of cards," proceeded Leith.

"And what is that?"

"Twist. I will stake one thousand dollars cash against those I. O. U.'s, game ten points."

The gambler smiled. To his point of view this disclosed, unexpectedly, appearing Leith seemed easy prey. He was too, pitiful at the manifest contempt evinced by Leith and longed to give him a trimming.

And if you have your questioned David only.

"Then I give you a check for another thousand dollars and redeem the I. O. U's."

"Done!" and the fellow produced a pack of cards and began shuffling them.

A strange expression came into the face of young Leith. He drew his coat closer to conceal a dangling ornament attached to his watch chain, as if he made the trinket a vital concern. It was a prize given to the champion of a bicycle club in his college days. He had not touched a card for two years, but in the old days!—a memory of his conquests gave him nerve and confidence.

Idly he seemed to revish of the bits of pasteboard, his quick breathing of the gamester as two points scored for himself and nine for his opponent, he threw down his hand, confessing defeat; and passed over the I. O. U's.

Silently Leith walked from Number 27 through the dingy drawing-room. Suddenly a hand fell on his shoulder.

"Deceiver! Gamester! Hypocrite!" he voiced, as Leith turned and faced him withering. "I have traced you to your lair. Why, why, I ask, should you and Vera shall know!"

Gordon Leith paled. Startled, he unfolded and examined the bundle of I. O. U's from his hand. With bowed head he passed from the room. Mr. Merriam picked up the papers. One afternoon and half an hour later he came. The facts were revealed—he read the name of his son and wept at the truth.

"What's the row, governor?" chirped the gamester, separating at the scene.

"I have wronged a true and noble man," uttered Mr. Merriam. "Tell me all of this afternoon and I will reveal you."

The gamester gibbly, coarsely stated the facts as he understood them. Mr. Merriam guessed the vast sacrifice that Leith had made, and the cause for of being disgraced accepting nobly the onus of forgetfulness on his part.

Vera Merriam—within four days Mrs. Gordon Leith—never knew of this episode. Harry Merriam knew of it. Leith, Sr., knew of it, and Vera, the midsummer-eve when he returned to the city.

But Harry Merriam was a changed man, and a realization of the brave loyalty of a true friend strengthened his character. He forewarned each dire pitfalls that had nearly ensnared him.

FROM BABYLONIAN WISE MEN

Came the Division of the Hour as it Has Been Recognized Throughout the Centuries.

The division of an hour into sixty minutes is of ancient Babylonic origin and has survived the reforms applied to notation in the course of the ages. Sixty seems to have been the unit system in ancient Babylon there was the sexagesimal system based upon the count by sixties and originating in the discovery that there is no number which has so many divisors as sixty. It can be divided without remainder by 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 10, 12, 15, 20 and 30.

Babylonians divided the sun's path into twenty-four parasangs, the latter representing about four and one-half miles. The astronomers who thus compared the progress of the sun during one hour to the progress made by a good walker during the same period of time, each accomplishing one parasang.

The whole course of the sun was twenty-four parasangs, or 360 degrees, and each parasang or hour was subdivided into sixty minutes.

Hipparchus, the Greek philosopher, who lived in B. C., introduced the Babylonian hour into Europe, and carried along by traditional knowledge, the sexagesimal system. It survived the French revolution, which endeavored to reduce every measure to decimal system of reckoning, so that the measure of time continues sexagesimal or Babylonian.

Last Manly Right Usurped.

The steady progress of equal suffrage continues to gain ground, and options once thought to be so peculiarly their own that the opposite sex would never assail their right to them. The case of Mr. Smithers would indicate that about the last position once thought to belong to the male sex after marriage, is that of wearing the pants, but even this was the open note that Leith and Gordon Leith, Sr., knew. That proud tip of his drew closer, his stern eye took to its depths a steely glint. Not a muscle of his face was given in the mutative, arose and started from the place, a wonderfully vulcano of wrath.

Handsome Gordon Leith had gone to his bank. He had saved up over two thousand dollars. He drew an even half of this. He then proceeded straightway in search of this threatening Jim Dennis. Leith had no difficulty in locating the Gregory cafe. Its proprietor was in his private compartments. Number 27 contained an individual, coarse-faced, evil-eyed, who sat leisurely smoking a cigar.

"Are you Dennis?" demanded Leith, facing him.

"That's me," nodded the other insolently.

Leith passed beyond the drapery of the doorway and sat down at a little table opposite the gamester.

I came in behalf of your victim, young Harry Merriam," he spoke sternly. "He is out of the city. Why appear in his stead. You demand a thousand dollars from him."

"Honestly owed, you."

"You made a provision," went on Leith steadily, "that he can have his revenge. Does that hold?"

HANDICRAFT FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

By A. NEELY HALL and DOROTHY PERKINS

(Copyright, by A. Neely Hall)

A SNOWBALL MORTAR.

A snowball mortar is a novelty that will add a great deal of sport to a snow battle. And the fact that the one shown in Fig. 1 is a modified form of the ancient war-engine known as a "ballista," used before the invention of gun-powder and firearms for hurling heavy stones, makes it all the more interesting to make and use.

Our modern "war engine," or "snowball mortar," as we call it, is mounted upon a pair of runners, just like a sled is built, so it may be drawn over ground quickly. One or two mortars may be carried by a boy's comfort for the use of the defenders, and others may be used by the attacking party to fling away the walls of the fort. With practice you can become expert in handling a snowball mortar, and you will declare this method of throwing snowballs far more fun than that of throwing by hand.

The runners (A, Fig. 2) are made of 2-by-4-inch material, about 4 feet in length. Their bow ends are curved like sled runners, to make them run over the ground easily. Cut the uprights (B) (Fig. 2) one of 2-by-4-inch material, making them about 24 inches long and nail them to the sides of the runners, 16 inches from the bow ends, as shown in Fig. 2. Nail them securely, because the connections will be placed under a considerable strain when the mortar is "fired." The board C (Fig. 3) extends to the top edges of the runners and holds them at the proper distance apart. It should measure about 12 inches wide, and should extend from the rear ends of the runners clear up to the upright pieces B.

The top beam D (Figs. 3 and 4) should measure about 6 feet long and 4 or 5 inches wide. A board 1 inch thick will be better than a heavier piece, because it will be springy and will thus increase the throwing power of the mortar.

Fixed to beam D between uprights B, at a point about 30 inches from one end (E, Fig. 3). To pivot it, drive a nail through each upright B into the edge of the board. It is necessary to place the nails at exactly the same height and to drive them straight, in order to move the beam swing perfectly. By careful work you will have no difficulty in pivoting the beam.

The handle-bar F (Figs. 3 and 4) should be a piece of 2-by-4-inch material about 30 inches long. The illustration shows the ends of it shaped round to make them easy to grasp.

The pocket for snow balls is made of a 1-by-6-inch board, with bow ends. Fasten it to the long end of the top beam with several nails driven through the ends.

Onions at Their Best.

Onions are at their best when boiled whole in milk or cream, seasoned. When prepared in either of these ways and eaten with bread and butter and cheese they make a satisfying and nutritious meal on which you can do brain work or manual labor.

Odd Invention.

Miss Katherine Minshart, a Philadelphia woman, has patented a new form of handbag which is capable of being converted into a seat. When opened one part of the contrivance serves as a seat, while another forms a support for the back.

Time Saving Device.

"Is this a time saving device?" asked a man, and a realization of the brave loyalty of a true friend strengthened his determination to forever evade the pitfalls that had nearly ensnared him.

HOW TO COPY PICTURES.

By means of the glass reflecting frame shown in Fig. 1, it is possible to make an exact drawing of any picture that you may wish a copy of, and this apparatus is easily made.

All that you need for the construction are two boards (A and B), two crosspieces (C and D), and a small picture frame with the glass fastened securely in place (E, Figs. 2 and 3). Almost any small-sized picture frame will do, though one that has an opening about eight inches wide and ten inches long is of the best size. If you find a picture frame which will allow be about one inch longer than the opening, you can fill the space at square or nearly square. Place the picture upon the pair of crosspieces C and D, with the edge of the picture frame slipped between them, as shown, and nail them to the crosspieces.

To make a copy of a picture, place it upon the left-hand side of the frame, and a piece of drawing paper on the right-hand side. Then, standing so that you can look into the left-hand side of the glass of the frame, you will see the reflection of the picture to be copied in the glass, and the piece of drawing paper on the other side of the frame will be seen as a background to the reflection of the picture. Keeping the same position, it will be but a simple matter to draw out on the piece of drawing paper each line that you see reflected in the glass.

A very simple and exact method of making a larger or smaller drawing of a picture is that known as "enlarging and reducing by squares." We will suppose that the picture of the rose in Fig. 4 is to be enlarged twice each way, as shown in Fig. 5. With a ruler and pencil, measure off a series of points across the top of the picture, and another series along one side, spacing them exactly one-half inch apart. Then rule lines from the top to the bottom of the picture, and from side to side, starting each line from one of the points. When the picture has been squared off in this way, mark off a similar series of points along the top and down one side of a piece of drawing paper, but instead of one-half inch, space them one inch apart (Fig. 8). Then rule lines up and down and from side to side, in the same way that you did across the original drawing. Letter the ends of the upand down lines, and number the ends of the cross lines, so it will be easy to locate corresponding squares on both the small and large drawings.

Lawyer's Good Thing.

"Seems to me that the lawyers have it easy in life." "Why so?" "The rest of us have to surmount our own obstacles. But if a lawyer strikes one, he applies to some judge and has it set aside."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Where He Got Them.

"I see a number of magazines scattered about Pikesley's rooms. He must take a great many." "I don't doubt it in the least. He took four from one out night and I hadn't read one of them."

PERSIA'S OLD CAPITAL

TEHERAN A CITY THAT HAS SEEN MANY VICISSITUDES.

Now the Center of Warring Interests That Threaten Its Very Existence—Not an Especially Healthy Place in Summer Months.

The capital of a small buffer state between three clashing empires, the English, Russian and Ottoman empire, Teheran in recent years, and more especially since the outbreak of the great war, has had an importance thrust upon it of a most embarrassing kind, begins a war primer of the National Geographic society. Geographically of greater interest to each of the groups of contending powers than any other neutral capital, Persian Teheran is experiencing insuperable difficulties in keeping its country clear of those of the warring giants around it.

Teheran, according to the Persian, is very beautiful, but the praise of his country's capital is seldom supported unreservedly by the westerner, for an made the Persian city of Shiraz far more beautiful and Italian the poet of the Persians. The capital lies 75 miles south of the Caspian sea, on a plateau of coarse sand and gravel, which is fringed by low, distant hills, and, to the north, by some higher mountains. Mount Damavand is the key to the city's setting, towering in the northeast to a magnificent crest of 19,400 feet high. To the southward stretch level lands, which lose themselves in waste and desert.

The East and West meet and mingle as oil and water in the shah's metropolis. Teheran is, of course, a purely Oriental city, but, like all eastern centers of importance, it has suffered from encroachments from the West in street cars, telegraphs, gas lighting and security dyed and tailored clothes for men. It is backward in its development and uneven in its improvement. Its boulevard dos Amandiers adjoins a mere lane of a suburbs of Teheran, and it is lined with a European type of shops, two good hotels and a number of fine native palaces. It has one of the largest military parade grounds in the world—550 by 250 yards—roughly paved with strewn cobble stones.

The modern city is not so very old, as it came into existence less than 700 years ago, about the time that ancient Baghdad, the crumbling subject to the south, began to sink into oblivion. Baghdad, known in the time of Alexander the Great as Hagaga, was the birthplace of Haroun al-Rashid, and at one time the golden capital of the Parthia. In the days of its supremacy it was a city of 2,000,000 souls and was storied Hamadan, the pride of eastern Persia, the city of seven walls in seven colors, with palaces wrought in gold and silver and frescoed with precious stones. Modern Teheran is the inheritor of the traditions and the pride of Ragha and of Hamadan and of the ancient honors of Passargade and Ferepolis. With the rise of Teheran, Media regained the place that it lost in Persia in the time of Cyrus.

Anarchy has ruled within the capital in a way more or less pronounced during the last several years, and the people of the city have accomplished little toward its restoration and development of its improvement. Teheran is a place of commerce and manufacture. There is an important caravan trade, which passes through Teheran toward the Russian borders, and a certain manufacture of cotton, carpets, tobacco and other products. Its business is enough to give support to a population of about 250,000, in which there are about 600 Europeans.

The climate of Teheran is not a favorable one and especially are the summers unhealthy, when all of the people who can get away go to the foothills in the north. Writing in 1886, a Persian poet gave a pathetic summary of a Teheran summer. He says that the air was too hot and oven smelly, that the water was heavy and unwholesome and, in short, everything had taken the Angel of Death up and away from it. But, then, this author was a native, and, perhaps, a native plague had passed over the city. The nearby contrast of the cool summer gardens of the Caspian sea, to the cramped to give the Teheran summer a bad standing.

Latest Glass Substitute.

As a substitute for glass in the equipment of automobiles and many other similar places, a material has been brought out recently in Germany and is now being subjected to rigid tests in various shapes at the scene of war. It is known as "celluc" and has many remarkable qualities. It is almost unbreakable by ordinary handling, shows of this material can be bent backward and forward many times without breaking; blows of rifle transparent product can be injected to blows without showing fractures; it can be produced in any desired thickness. Clear and completely transparent, light or dark colored, mottled or even black. It can be used for the manufacture of all articles made of celluloid. Its chief advantage over celluloid is its safety against fire. A sheet of celluc may be ignited by an open flame.

Wisconsin's History.

Wisconsin has from time to time been an annex of various other states. Wisconsin from 1805 to 1809 formed a part of Indiana Territory. From 1809 to 1818 Wisconsin was embraced in the territory of Illinois. When Illinois became a state all the country north of it, including Wisconsin, was joined to Michigan. After more than forty years of shifting Wisconsin was adjusted into the Union with her present boundaries in 1848.

PLAGUED BY INSECT PESTS

Explorers in Industrious South America Tell of Hardships Encountered

Though nearly every prospect pleases, other things as well as men are vile in subtropical South America. According to a lecture delivered recently before the Royal Geographical society in London by Lieutenant Edwards the insect and other pests are unspeakably terrible.

The lecturer, who conducted a frontier exploration on the Bolivia-Brazil boundary last year, described the forests as being wellnigh impassable. Their rate of progress was 15 miles in 36 days through these tangled fields.

The soil of the country, he said, was wonderfully fertile, and with very little toil returned a harvest out of all proportion.

In the forest and on the smaller rivers life was made almost impossible by insect pests. Ants were met with everywhere; they swarmed over chest, throat, in handkerchiefs and most of them bit most savagely.

There was one kind of red ant, called Jushi, which lived in trees named palosantos, hollowed out by themselves, whose bite was like a touch with a red-hot iron. If a person inadvertently brushed or leant against one of these palosantos the ants swarmed out upon him instantly and his life for hours afterward was a long drawn-out misery.

Guinea Pig Farm.

Guinea pig farming would seem to rank as the most curious of the various industries that municipalities have undertaken for the benefit of the common good. Seattle is a guinea pig farmer on a considerable scale and at times the principal worry of those in charge of the "ranch" is that the guinea pig supply will exceed the demand. The municipal guinea pigs hired at the present time numbers about 700. The guinea pig farm is a necessity, not an idle experiment. In their humble way these furry little animals play an important part in the daily work of preserving the city's health. They are the official "guests" for the chemists in the city's bacteriological laboratories and at the federal plague laboratory which the city helps to maintain. The little guinea pig is one of the most unfortunate of all animals. Since doctors have learned that he is subject to almost all the ills that human flesh is heir to, life for him is one long feast of germs.

Beware of Paraffin Cups.

When an Englishman drinks a toast to his queen, he breaks the glass as a pretty little homage. Great writes in the Philadelphia Ledger.

When you put a penny in the slot and extract an individual cup you should smash it after using it. That isn't homage, but a precaution that may save a human life.

Do you know what happens to many of those discarded paraffin drinking cups? Picked up by careless people and used over and over again.

If you will recall that a dead-germ feels even less at home on a glass cup than upon one made of paraffin you can easily see why neither should be used many times by many persons.

There is one certain way to outwit the germ: Crush the cup.

Looked as If She Had.

"Did your wife see anything she wanted at the girls show?" "I am sure she did. She saw my slippers and pipe and supper and paper all ready for me when I get home of nights, and has a ribbon in her hair and a look in her eyes that makes me fear the worst."

Napoleon's Authority.

The question of military genius of Napoleon I has been much mentioned. It is to be remarked that this nobleman made both by Prussia and Germans offener than by the French. The issue of Napoleon's achievements has been dimmed in the years that Prussia has been in charge. The recollection is aroused that in his march to glory the cost to the nation in young manhood was greater than such cost was to the nations that opposed him, and that it took even longer to repair. General Foy, the French military critic of the time of Napoleon, speaking of his strength and his weakness, said: "Only the founders of religion have exercised upon their followers an authority comparable to that which made him the absolute master of his armies. This moral power became to him a fatal gift. He came to believe that he could prevail even against the most powerful material force and it led him to commit faults which, in the long continued violation of which could not remain unpunished."

Russian Smoker.

Some years ago an American business man, wishing to get freight through a Russian port, approached the government agent with a request for expedition. He was told delivery could be made in one week. The American protested that he must have those goods immediately. "Here's a cigar," said the Russian official, pushing a box toward the American and leaving the room. The American opened the box, found it empty and dropped in 5 rubles. The Russian came back, looked at the box, pushed it toward his visitor and as he again left the room, remarked: "Have another cigar." The American dropped 20 more rubles in the box, the Russian official returned, looked at the cigar box and politely remarked: "Your goods will be delivered tomorrow, sir."—Wall Street Journal.

Divination in Japan.

Fields in which the sacred rice for the coronation ceremony in Japan is grown were selected through tortoise-shell divination, an art quite popular in the island kingdom, being used upon many occasions to ascertain the timeliness or possibility of various projects. The divination is effected by first worshiping a god called Uryanohami. Then a tortoise shell is taken, and scraped inside until thin and the outside surface polished. In the shell are several hollow squares in each of which there is a certain sign marked in black ink. The whole is then baked under great heat, causing cracks to appear in the surface. These cracks are then studied in accordance with the formula in the divination book, the result being a sort of code message from the gods. This is not the earliest form of divination known in Japan. Previously there was a kind called Futomani in which the shoulder blade of a stag was used in place of tortoise shell.

Talk in a Fraternity House.

Having lived in a fraternity chapter house, the writer knows something of the topics of conversation usually distinguishing. The best dance, and the little queen that Hugo Inman toted, who was sure some bear at the fox trot, our chances in the bowling tournament; Slim Smith's slide to third last Saturday; the new necktiea at Gross's haberdashery; a deal with the Delts for the senior class presidency; this week's bill at the local vaudeville theater. Now these topics all have their place, but that place should scarcely be the place of honor; nor do they come under Aristotle's definition of culture as a knowledge of the world—to which should be added, the best that is being thought and done. Is there not some way in which this gallimaufry of frivolities may be supressed by more substantial stuff, and the time cultural function of the fraternity made active?—L. H. Harris in School and Society.

Dollars Value on Farm.

In the Woman's Home Companion Robert Lane Wells told us recently that "a farmer's money goes farther than the salesman's or clerk's. It is commonly understood," he said, "that an income of $1,000 a year in the country, that is, on a farm, is equivalent to $2,000 in the city. I judge this is a fairly safe estimate. In fact, a good many farm families seem to have no income at all in the city sense. In the course of the year they handle surprisingly little cash. Their annual needs are few and plain and are met on almost direct fashion by good old Mother Nature. Our family account book, which I have not quoted, shows that we spent the first year about cosh half as much for clothing as in previous years; only a little more than one-half as much for food; nothing for rent or firewood; practically nothing for travel or amusement. We felt though, that we ought to spend more on amusements."

Designed for Desert Travel.

Though the camel will manage to subsist for long periods on the thorny scrub such as roams the vast tracts of desert areas, and with very little water, its complacency in these matters may be overstated, as was disastrously shown during the first expedition to Sennaar. Two camel drivers in the adaptability of the camel to a desert life have to be taken into account. These are the feet and nostrils. The first named have but two toes, protected by very thick horny pads to resist the burning sand, while the nostrils are long and slitlike, and can be closed at will, thereby enabling the animal to survive the awful sand storms which so frequently endanger the lives of travelers in these inhospitable regions.

Good Game to Play on a Train.

Here is an interesting game to play when we are traveling by train. While the train stops at a station, all the players look about and take as much notice of things as possible. Then, a few minutes after the train has left the station, we take turns at naming objects which we saw there. Of course, at first this is easy, and we can go round and each contributing player naming one object which no other player has mentioned. But as the game goes on it becomes harder and harder to recall something seen which hasn't already been named. The one who is last, able to mention an object wins the game. Besides being good sport, it trains in observation.

Pasteur's Gift to Society.

The annual death rate of civilized countries before the days of Pasteur was about thirty for a thousand of the population. Today it is about fifteen to a thousand in the more progressive nations. Think what a saving of fifteen lives a year for every thousand of population means when applied to half the earth. It means the saving of over 1,000,000 human deaths annually. It means more than 10,000,000 cases of illness avoided, it means health and happiness to 10,000,000 homes rather than disease and distress.—From a Bulletin of the National Geographic Society.

ASKS U. S. TO FIND MOTHER

Indian Woman Has Not Been or Heard From Her Parent in Thirteen Years.

Kansas City, Mo.—An Indian woman about twenty-four years old with a child almost eleven years old was in the federal employment offices recently seeking aid in finding her mother from whom she has not heard in thirteen years.

The woman, who says her name is Juanita Myers, says her husband died a few years ago, leaving an estate in Chicago of $20,000, and that she has been unable to collect any part of it. Her child, she says, is with relatives in Chicago.

Her mother, she states, has been twice married since she last saw her, and her father, married her mother under the name of Johnson. The mother was a Cherokee Indian.

Camel Helpful to Man.

The camel thrives only in desert regions. And herein lies its usefulness to man, for by its means alone is he enabled to cross barren tracts other wise impassable. This ability to live without water and with little food for long periods is due to two natural reservoirs. Water is stored in special pockets in the lining of the stomach, while a large mass of fat is stored on the back, forming the characteristic hump—though, according to popular belief, it is here that the water is held.

C. J. STRANG DEAD

FOUNDER OF THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL PASSES AWAY AT HIS LANSING HOME.

Charles J. Strang, sixty-five year old, a son of the famous King J. J. Strang, leader of the Mormon colony of Beaver Islands, in Lake Michigan, a half century ago, died at his home at Lansing Tuesday.

The elder Strang at the death of Joseph Smith claimed the mantle of the apostleship and branded Brigham Young as a usurper.

For thirty years Charles J. Strang has been a resident of Lansing, in the printing business.

Mr. Strang was the founder of the Charlevoix Journal and its publisher up to the time the paper was sold to the Hamptons.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Hattie Strang, seven daughters, Mrs. G. S. Williams, of Detroit, Mrs. E. D. Allis and Mrs. Earl Towen, both of Lansing, Mrs. Aaron Parker, of Kalamazoo and Misses Blanche, Francis and Helen Strang living. A boiler, and one son, Frank W. Strang, two brothers, Clement Strang of Long Rapids, and Charles Grier, of Charlotte, also survive.

Mr. Strang was postmaster at Charlevoix during the first Cleveland administration.

P. M. RY. CANNOT BOOST ITS RATES

DECISION OF JUDGES AGAINST GRANTING INJUNCTION TO STOP TWO CENT LAW

Denying the complainants' motion for a temporary injunction to restrain the state railroad commission and the attorney general from enforcing the two cent fare law, a decision signed by Circuit Judges Knappen and Denison and District Judge Sessions was filed with Clerk Elmer W. Voorhies, of the United States district court in Detroit, Monday.

The decision is the outcome of a suit instituted by the Pere Marquette railroad some months ago to forestall enforcement of Michigan legislation relating to the prohibition of charging more than two cents a mile for passenger fare, on the ground that the present charge was confiscatory and the fare was insufficient to maintain the system.

The decision not only virtually holds the two cent fare rate law constitutional, but also is based upon a portion of it that it may have a serious effect on the negotiations of the Pere Marquette, which now is in the hands of the court and is to be sold at auction within the next two months.

IMPROVEMENTS AT CITY PLANT

Down at the light and water plant things are considerably torn up. The discarded $2,800 gasoline engine that was to be installed is moved outside the building and is awaiting the junk wrecker.

The big electric centrifugal pump is moved out and an excavation has been made to lower it to the level of the water in the wells. This will increase efficiency, so the experts say.

Meanwhile, the old suction steam pumps are in use and are doing good work. When you draw water don't draw any conclusions because the water is muddy. It is air globules that is sucked into the pumps and forced into the mains. It will settle and see it clear usual from the bottom.

COMMON COUNCIL

At the Monday night session an ordinance was passed entitled "An ordinance to provide for a central polling place and central place of registration."

This action does away with ward polling and registration places, and reduces the boards of inspectors of election and registration from about twenty to five members.

There was some preliminary discussion of the question of paving State street, but no definite action was taken, although the proposition may be considered "in the grind."

GRAND MASTER NEWVILLE SEES SON INITIATED

R. E. NEWVILLE ATTENDS LODGE IN DETROIT WHEN EARL IS INITIATED

R. E. Newville, grand master of the Michigan lodge of Odd Fellows, says the Detroit News, Friday evening paid an informal visit to Diamond lodge No. 420, of Detroit. He was tendered grand lodge honors.

One of the 37 candidates in the initiatory degree class was Robert Earl Newville, Jr., a son of the grand master. Chas F. Brandt, captain of the degree staff, was master of ceremonies. Fred W. Bates, the newly installed noble grand, presided.

In a brief address, Grand Master Newville expressed the pleasure it gave him to be present to witness the initiation of "my boy into Odd Fellowship and to pleasure to know that the lad had, of his own free will decided to follow fraternally in the footsteps of his old dad." The grand master complimented Diamond lodge on the size of its membership and said especially as nearly all of the 37 candidates were young men. He promised to pay the lodge an official visit in the near future.

During the evening, instrumental music was rendered by Diamond orchestra, under the leadership of Otto Smith.

THE ROCK PRODUCT CO.

CHARLEVOIX CORPORATION NOT A PARTY TO PENDING LAW SUITS

An article going the rounds of the press concerning certain suits at law in the Kalamazoo and Bay City circuit courts is very misleading, and does the legitimate owners of the Rock Product Co. a great injustice.

The suits are individual, and in no way involve the above named corporation. The Kalamazoo suit is against H. E. Hunt, and that at Bay City is against E. L. Buell, and involve claims growing out of certain individual stock manipulations for which the R. P. Co., are in no way responsible.

There is no denying the fact that the R. P. Co. is in fine "melting pot" and existing business conditions render its continuance indefinitely postponed, but the process now under way to restore its equilibrium has the approval of those stockholders who have legitimate bed-rock interests.

Assets and liabilities are what determine the real and ultimate life of any business venture, and this is what should be made plain before public confidence is rendered. The melting pot is doing this, and when the dross is separated from the good metal the latter will not equal its original bulk, but it will constitute a foundation upon which will be built an industrial structure that will be able to successfully resist storms from which usually rage about a new venture during a marginal industrial period. The Charlevoix Rock Product Co. will emerge from its present trials with renewed strength.

Concerning general manager Sloan, the writer of this has positive personal knowledge that Mr. Sloan has been tendered the superintendcy of the establishment of a cement plant near Havana, Cuba, at an annual salary of $3,600. The writer also has equally positive knowledge that Mr. Sloan rejected the proposition, for the reason that, in the process of re-adjustment, he is necessarily under fire, and his professional reputation at stake. He is in the trench under the fire of the enemy's guns, waiting for an opportune movement for the counter charge.

OSBORN JOGS MEMORY

Referring to a recent editorial in these columns Gov. Osborn writes us, in part as follows:

"By the way, you say 'we did not follow him (Osborn) into the Roosevelt camp.' I think you will remember that I never went out of the republican party, and that I voted for opposed the organization of the Progressive party. I supported Roosevelt as a republican, as I believe he was true and in still.

Of course a correct analysis of any proposition depends upon the point of view. But the governor is right. Harking back to the turbulent days of 1912 we remember that he was within the Oyster Bay camp, but "not momentarily an insurgent." Once the fracas was over he did not go far afield, and he did not camp over night in the brush.

Osborn's stalwart, robust honesty asserted itself at Chicago, just as it did at Lansing when certain methods came in contact with his conscience. He stands four-square to every wind that blows.

He is not only Michigan's favorite son, but he is a towering figure among the Republic's greatest.

DEFAMERS OF NATIONAL GUARD

In discussing the several methods of preparedness now being considered by the American people, the National Guard comes in for not only criticism but abuse, mostly from those actuated by prejudice or ignorance of the facts. We clip an extract from a particularly bitter article published in this current Metropolitan Magazine:

"Social stunts and the parade touch of fine but useless reviews on polished floors in boys and costly armories do not spell battle efficiency. The recruit at Plattsburg, living in a tent, gets in one month a fuller and more intensive field training than the guardsman in a year in his million dollar armory. But the Guard lives, breathes and thinks in armory terms. A fair weather body, it marches indoors. It drills well but no organization at maximum strength has yet made ten miles in the open, summer or winter, simulating war conditions. Nor has a guardsman ever fired an aimed rifle with his 50-round pack on his back."

We know nothing of the identical rant which inspired the above criticism, but feel justified in branding the paragraph as a slander.

We personally have seen the Michigan brigade, on a cold wet morning, come from camp nine miles into the country, in heavy marching order, every man with blanket roll, half of a "pup" tent, haversack, canteen, cartridge belt, mess kit and rifle, work out a complex problem in the field, bivouac at night upon the bare ground, officers and men frying their own bacon, running war conditions and movements another day, marching into camp in the evening, soaking wet, but yelling like wild cats, and good for yet another day's strenuous work.

Not a man fell out, and not a man answered "sick call" next morning. If these men are not soldiers what constitutes a soldier?

These fat heads who criticise the National Guard do not know what they are talking about. They are of the class who, in time of war, would flee across the border or cripple themselves to avoid the duty which every American citizen owes to his country.

THE COLONEL IS EXACTLY CORRECT

Passing for the moment the much discussed question of the presidency, and casting aside as utterly unworthy of comment the Bryan peace propaganda, we arise to remark that of the various methods of preparedness advocated that of Col. Roosevelt appeals to us as the most sensible and patriotic.

Answering those who advocate half way preparedness the Colonel compares the policy to the construction of a bridge but half way across the stream, or a system of fire protection that reaches only to the second story.

The president's "continental" army plan the Colonel pronounces as impractical, and places himself squarely with the National Guard, increased to the maximum of war strength of its officers, rank and file to the company unit, a corresponding increase of the regular organization, and a building up of the navy to second among the navies of the world.

In arousing the people to the needs of the hour the president is doing good work, but Congress will settle the question of method.

There is no denying the fact that perils exist. Conflagrations threaten on east and west, and we have neither adequate fire protection nor insurance.

Col. Roosevelt advocates preparedness through a preparedness that corresponds to the maximum of danger, and he is right.

ABBOTT FOR REPRESENTATIVE

Mr. F. W. Abbott, of Boyne City, announces himself as a candidate for representative in the legislature to succeed Mr. McMillan.

Calls Third Degree Brutal.

The burning at stakes, the dancing stool, the pillory, the personal application to ridicule, scorn and mockery of a century ago, so prevalent in this country—they are importations from abroad, have passed away, but in their place, we have Sidney M. Abbott in Case and Comment, was substituted and forced into the third degree sweating of suspects and corporal punishment, which is more brutal maltreatment of convicts. Many instances could be cited of the rigors of the third degree. Denials have been publicity made by police officials but the truth remains, the third degree was and still is a mockery of the law practiced in secret chambers. The "confession" of a criminal, wrung from him under circumstances too brutal to describe, has often resulted in conviction of innocent persons.

Beyond Scriptural Number.

The clergyman of a country village, representing one of the paramounts for quarreling with his wife so loudly and frequently as to be a source of serious disturbance in the neighborhood, in the course of his exhortation remarked that the scriptures declared that man and woman were one.

"Aye, that may be, sir," answered Hodge, "but if you were to go by when the man and his wife are at it you'd think there were twenty of us."

HERE'S A SKETCH OF ROBERT WICKLIFFE WOOLLEY, DIRECTOR OF THE MINT, BY EDWARD B. CLARK, HIS OLD JOURNALISTIC SIDE PARTNER, NOW DEAN OF WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENTS.

The Building is Uncle Sam's New Money Factory, and Below Are Employees Counting His Millions.

BY EDWARD B. CLARK.

ONE of Washington's humorists declared once upon a time that the reason so many newspapermen are appointed to positions in the United States treasury is that the scribes least desire to be once in their lives forced into a lot money. They gets next to much money in the building containing Uncle Sam's strong box, but he doesn't get hold of any great amount of it, although the salaries paid are in a general way more than fairly comfortable.

Robert Wickliffe Woolley is one of the latest of American newspaper men to be appointed to a position in the treasury department. As someone else has put it, Woolley makes more money than any other man in the United States, but the personal difficulty is that he is not allowed to keep the proceeds of his manufacture. He is the director of the mint, and everybody knows that the province of the mint is to turn out money for the multitudinous uses of the people of these United States.

There are not many newspaper men in the country who are better known than this present official of Uncle Sam's government. Woolley looks about thirty years old but he can add quite a number of years on to that and give no lie to the date of his birth. He has been a reporter, a sporting editor, a managing editor, an editor, and a writer of magazine articles, and today he can pick up any one of his old jobs and do it justice, and if the whirligig of politics in time shall throw him forth from the portals of the treasury department, he probably and very naturally will turn to trend in the old newspaper ways.

The writer of this has known Woolley for a good many years and worked with him side by side for a considerable length of time on a great Chicago daily. Woolley was then a sporting editor. He is an outdoor man, and have the times which all full-blooded Americans love, and moreover, he knows how to write about them, whether it be as a close finish on a Kentucky track or a 11 inning "no hit game" on the National league grounds in New York city. Woolley loves sport for sport's sake, but it must not be supposed for a moment that sport ever occupied the major part of his time.

From childhood until this day the present director of the mint has been a student of sociological conditions, of economics and of the ways and means of legislation to get for the people what seems to the progressive minded the things which they ought to have. Conversely with that, certain lines of procedure were the right ones to follow, and a determination to follow them has driven Robert W. Woolley many strenuous and exciting hours during his long newspaper career.

It is not necessary to explain to the people of the United States what a political fray is, nor is it necessary to explain what an invitible severe means it. Certain brave spirits in newspaperdom have been fighting rings and invisible government for years, and it has made no difference to the courageous ones whether the ring was composed of men of this or that party, or whether the invisible government likewise was tinged with a partisan color of a hue ordinarily deemed admirable by the crusaders. The director of the mint is a Democrat, but he has fought Democrats when they were trying to exploit the people for selfish ends.

Not long after he entered newspaper work the director of the mint had a "time of it," which tested his courage and the sincerity of his convictions. I am not going to mention the name of the place where a certain thing happened, but unquestionably the scene of it will be recognized by many and the details will be remembered by men who have served or are arrived on the borders of middle age.

Down in the South and not very far in the South, either, Robert W. Woolley was once managing editor of a newspaper of prominence in a city of considerable size. The chief editor of his paper and the mayor of the town were engaged in a row, for the mayor, it was believed, was connected with a municipal political combination which, as the editor viewed it, was far from being an institution intended to benefit the people of the community. Finally the lie was passed, and then the fur flew, and the pen and ink fighting word in certain communities.

One morning Mr. Woolley went down to the newspaper office and found the mayor of the town and his son, each with a gun in hand, holding the entire business office force of the newspaper prisoners behind their counters. The intruders were threatening to shoot anybody who attempted to leave. Woolley had no gun. He entered the office and proceeded to address some remarks made up of words ordinarily considered of the fighting kind to the armed intruders.

Woolley reached for a newspaper, took it off the receiver and was laughed at by the gunmen, who told him that they had cut the wire. Woolley stood there with the receiver in his hand for a minute while redhot verbiage was exchanged. Then Woolley walked straight by the two armed men and went out of the door, and neither one cared or dared to interfere with him.

Later it developed that while the receiver was off, although the wire had been cut, the chief editor of the paper in question had taken off his own receiver to call up the office, and found that the wire was in good order and that someone had severed he heard a large part of the conversation in the office by means of the uncut wire connected with the office telephone. He heard afterwards was used in evidence, for court proceedings were brought.

Now, it is just here that an ordinary newspaper man would have become disgusted with the profession which he was trying to follow and would have thought that the whole world was out of joint. The mayor of the town and his son were editors of a rival newspaper. This rival stood, of course, for the municipal ring, and it was things which appeared in its columns which had caused the editor of Mr. Woolley's paper to put the lie in print. While things seemingly were still as white heat between the two camps the mayor and his son, the editor, whose lie was proved to a shoot, or be shot by, made up their differences, combined the two papers, and this Woolley, who had dared everything for his chief, was forced out, and in the parlance of the street, was "left to hold the bag." In other words, Bob Woolley stood for right and principle and then lost his job.

There was a celebrated law case in Kentucky that attracted world-wide attention. After the municipal ring episode and Mr. Woolley had lost his place as managing editor, he became a reporter and he handled this case. There came down from Chicago at this time two newspaper men who since have become widely known—James Bertrand, now of the New York Herald, and William H. Lewis, the editor of the New York Telegraph. They had been sent down from Chicago to work on the matter Woolley had in hand, and they became associated with him. They found out a lot of things about him which appealed to their newspaper sense. They also discovered that he was fond of American sports. They went back to Chicago and a short time thereafter Woolley, who knew nothing about their interest in him, received an offer from the Chicago Tribune to become a reporter in the sporting department of that paper. He went to Chicago, and it was not long before he became the sporting editor of the newspaper whose staff he joined.

From Chicago the present director of the mint went to New York, and for a long time was engaged on the World. A little latter, as somebody else has put it, "he yielded to the temptation of a beautiful fruit plantation in Texas." The fruit was not altogether golden, so far as the proceeds from the sale of the crops were concerned, and Mr. Woolley went back into the newspaper profession.

For six months, he was he has described as "six eventful months," he was the editor of a newspaper in a southern town, whose locality I shall not give here, because of certain circumstances connected with the case. There it was another crusade against a municipal ring and another case of being compelled to edit with a revolver in the hand and also to walk with a gun exceedingly handy. The ring eventually was broken into bits, but meanwhile Mr. Woolley had lost his newspaper.

For a short time thereafter Mr. Woolley was the editor of the San Antonio Light in Texas. Then he went back to New York and entered upon a really notable career as a magazine writer. He was sent on many assignments throughout the country for some of the best magazines in the United States, and then he became one of the Washington correspondents of the New York World, a position which he held for about two years. Then again Mr. Woolley turned to magazine work, and in the year 1911 he became the chief investigator of the congressional committee appointed to look into the affairs of the United States Steel corporation. This committee was known as the Stanley committee.

Because of its wide-reaching effects, it is probable that a magazine article entitled, "The Pioneers of Washington," was the most notable contribution to the "news and information of the day," which Mr. Woolley ever wrote. This article was preceded by an intimation that several prominent and who chose to do so might know that he had recourse in the courts. In other words the information upon which the article was based was tested in advance. This article was signed by the press of the time "fearless." It dealt with some of Washington's big bankers and real estate sharks and their methods.

Woolley was writing just as he wrote when he was attacking municipal rings in smaller towns of the country. It is not too much to say, perhaps, that the article largely was responsible for a complete change in the manner of men appointed to positions of high trust in the municipal government of the city of Washington, for Washington in a way has municipal government, being under the rule, of course, of Congress, but having a board of District commissioners as responsible heads.

In the year 1912 Mr. Woolley was the editor and compiler of the "Democratic Text Book," and was asked of the Democratic party and of the Democratic national committee. He also compiled the text book for the campaign of 1916. At about that time, however, newspaper men believe, did not have anything to do with his appointment to office. His efforts along the line of progressive lines had attracted the attention of Woodrow Wilson. Mr. Woolley was appointed first as auditor for the interior department, an office which, despite its name, is under the control of the treasury department. Later he was given his present position as director of the mint. He is filling it.

I am writing this article with feelings of personal admiration and liking, perhaps even of affection, for I have known Woolley for years. He is a tried man. He is one of the newspaper fraternity, and after nearly a quarter of a century of close acquaintance I know that I can say that he is an honor to it. Robert Wickliffe Woolley lives just outside of Washington in Fairfax, Va. In this little town which has possession of the wills of George and Martha Washington, and some parts of the bill of rights of George Mason, it is a good place for a Democrat of strongly progressive tendencies to live.

Mr. Woolley married Marguerite Trehoim, of Winchester, Virginia. They have four children, all girls. The family life is of that kind which is ideal. In the books Mr. Woolley lived down in Robert Wickliffe Woolley, but newspaper men from coast to coast and from the Canada line to the Gulf know him much better as "Bob."

Prosperous English City

Great wealth has come to Birmingham, England, through war contracts and everybody is spending it like water, according to newspaper correspondents. An instance of the way in which quickly made money is being lightly spent is afforded by the fur trade. A further relation that within a couple of days of his getting in a big stock of valuable fur he was sold out, and further evidence is supplied by the fashionable out and extravagant trimmings of coats which middle-class women are wearing. Birmingham was an area of innumerable little factories before the war. The small manufacturers were now among the very rich, and their wives are helping to spend the war gains. An enormous business is being done in cheap jewelry, but part is due to the demand for patriotic badges, army bulges set as brooches, and so on. Furniture report a marked decrease in pawning and a corresponding increase in sales. The cheaper and more showy kinds of furniture and ornaments are being sold as fast as they can be turned out, and the Kidderminster carpet factories cannot meet the home demand.

The Eskimos have an original superstition. They say that one day Anigo, the moon, chased his sister, the sun, in winds. Just as he was about to catch her, however, she turned round and threw a great candful of soot in his face, and this escaped him, and that soon he beats the sun in the little City.

A good grade of paper can now be commercially made from the hog refuse of breweries, which has heretofore been thrown away.

THE SANDMAN STORY By Mrs. F. A. WALKER

MR. FOX TELLS A STORY.

"Mr. Fox will certainly be interested in the story of the boy's cap," said Jack Rabbit, when the time came for him to go to the fox's home on the hill again, "and I shall have to tell him how unexpectedly I found an illustration for his lesson that happiness is largely the result of being contented."

The day was a very pleasant one and Mr. Fox in his home on the hill was thinking of Jack Rabbit and wondering how he was and what luck he had had in applying the wisdom he had given him. "It is so fine a day," said the fox to himself, "that I think I will walk out a way and meet Jack Rabbit and we can chat as we walk along."

And so it happened that Jack Rabbit had not more than half completed the journey when he met Mr. Fox. "Good morning," they both said, and each asked after the health of the other.

"It is such a fine day," said the fox, "that it occurs to me that it would be pleasant to sit for a while on the bank of the pond and sun ourselves."

"It would, indeed," replied the rabbit, "and I think that it would do me good. I am afraid that I am staying too much indoors since my illness and that lack of exercise is making me lazy."

"We will sit by the pond," said the fox. "And I will tell you a story which will very aptly illustrate a bit of wisdom that every animal who would be good, to know and which every boy and girl ought to have taught them. Once the sun and the fox met in a place on the edge of the pond which divers or Washington." was the most notable contribution to the "news and information of the day," which Mr. Woolley ever wrote. MOTHER! LOOK AT CHILD'S TONGUE

If cross, feverish, constipated, give "California Syrup of Figs."

A laxative today saves a sick child tomorrow. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels, which become clogged up with waste, liver grows sluggish; stomach sour.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, or your child is listless, cross, feverish, breath bad, restless, doesn't eat heartily, full of cold or has sore throat or any other children's ailment, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," then don't worry, because it is perfectly harmless, and in a few hours all this constipation poison, sour bile and fermenting waste will gently move out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. A thorough "inside cleansing" is oftentimes all that is necessary. It should be the first treatment given in any sickness.

Beware of counterfeits. Insist upon "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Adv.

ANIMALS BUILD UP CHARACTER OF BOY

Karakule Ewe and Twin Lambs.

Dr. David Starr Jordan of Stanford university offers testimony as to what the care of animals may do in building up the character of a boy. In the lush playmates of his youth:

"I was a great dog," he confesses, "to a flock of lambs that were put in my care when I was a boy, and when I cared for for a number of years, absorbing them all myself, giving each one a name and keeping account of the amount of wool furnished by each one. Ever since then, from experience I have regarded natural history as a means of grace to a boy and girl. It can show itself in no better way than by making friends among animals.

The KITCHEN CABINET

If each man's secret, unpleased care
Were written on his brow,
How may would our pity share
Who have our envy now?

And if the promptings of each heart
No artifice concealed,
How many trusting friends would part
At what they saw revealed.

EGGLESS DISHES.

When eggs are expensive it is a relief to find good things which usually call for eggs prepared without them.

Oatmeal Dainties.—Cream one pound of butter with one cupful of sugar, add a teaspoonful of soda, one cupful of sour milk and half a cupful of hot water and sugar, then stir in six cupfuls of rolled oats. Add a teaspoonful of grated nutmeg, a half teaspoonful of cinnamon, and a cupful of a teaspoonful of cloves. Mix them with a little flour, add a cupful of raisins and sufficient flour to handle. Flour the hands and make into cakes the size of a silver dollar. Bake in a slow oven until brown.

Sour Beef.—This is a good way to treat tough beef. Take a pound and a half of lean beef from the skin, cut it in small pieces and roll in flour. Brown the meat in a little lard, then remove it and add to the same fat two tablespoonfuls of flour, brown this also, then add slowly two cupfuls of water or stock and cook until boiling hot. Put in the meat and cook slowly for one hour, then add two onions, salt and pepper to taste and finally a tablespoonful each of Worcestershire sauce and vinegar. Continue the cooking until the meat is tender. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve.

Beef in Casserole.—This is another method of cooking meat that is inclined to be tough. Take two pounds of the skin or round, wipe it carefully and lay in a casserole. Cover with a can of tomatoes, add one bay leaves and salt and pepper to season. Cook in the oven for two hours. Dish up the meat, thicken the tomatoes with flour and butter cooked together and serve the meat with potato pancakes. The acid of the tomato softens the tough fibers of the meat so does vinegar.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS.

Ink can be removed from any fabric with fresh milk if it quickly enough.

Blood spots on woolens should be carefully removed by soaking the spot with dry starch. This absorbs the blood. Then the cloth when dry can be brushed off. Treating the starch from the cloth.

Stains on white goods in the dish pan may be quickly removed by a good laundry soap. Rub the spot with the soap, then dry and the hands and let it stand. If stained when the black work is done, a lump of laundry soap tied to a rather rubbed over the back of the dishcloth will make the stain on the table will keep it from without the use of tacks.

Salt on the cores which have become rusted on may be removed by soaking the tops in a little vinegar. The acid dissolves the rust and the tops will then unscrew.

Cut but gingerbread or cake with a fork. This makes each piece light and fluffy, whereas the knife used will spoil the cake, making a heavy streak where it cuts.

Use a little kerosene in the cleaning of chickens, adding a teaspoonful to a pail of soapy water. It will be in cleaning the bathtub, silver sink, in blocks, in the drain and the rollers of the clothes wringer.

Nowadays may be seen in many ways to lighten work. Cut in small squares and hang from a convenient place. Use the square to wipe the stove, wipe out a greasy dish, or on the table as a dusting brush. Save asparagus in dressing chicken and preparing vegetables, also for nuts; they protect the sink drain. If used to wipe out greasy dishes before washing, the dishwater will not be dirty. Use them to wipe the pan, and the dishes will be cleaner. When dusty, take out the dust and shake the square over the meat, removing the cloves and more before serving.

SOME CHEAP MEAT DISHES.

The flank which is one of the cheap cuts of meat is very good when slowly cooked. Take two or three pounds, remove the tough skin and spread the meat with a well-seasoned forcemeat, using bread crumbs, herbs, parsley, minced onion and salt and pepper. Roll up and tie firmly to keep in shape. Have ready a pan of mixed vegetables, carrots, onion, celery and turnip. Place these in the bottom of a shallow baking pan with the meat on top with just enough water to cover; add a blade of mace and three or four cloves. Cover closely and cook slowly for four hours, basting the meat frequently with the liquid in the pan. When done remove the meat and vegetables to a hot dish and thicken the gravy with browned flour. Strain the gravy over the meat, removing the cloves and more before serving.

Stew Beef.—This is a good way to treat tough beef. Take a pound and a half of lean beef from the skin, cut it in small pieces and roll in flour. Brown the meat in a little lard, then remove it and add to the same fat two tablespoonfuls of flour, brown this also, then add slowly two cupfuls of water or stock and cook until boiling hot. Put in the meat and cook slowly for one hour, then add two onions, salt and pepper to taste and finally a tablespoonful each of Worcestershire sauce and vinegar. Continue the cooking until the meat is tender. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve.

Beef in Casserole.—This is another method of cooking meat that is inclined to be tough. Take two pounds of the skin or round, wipe it carefully and lay in a casserole. Cover with a can of tomatoes, add one bay leaves and salt and pepper to season. Cook in the oven for two hours. Dish up the meat, thicken the tomatoes with flour and butter cooked together and serve the meat with potato pancakes. The acid of the tomato softens the tough fibers of the meat so does vinegar.

WHEN LONDON FALLS

GERMAN WRITER FORESEES TRIUMPHAL ENTRY.

Von Hindenburg Selected by This Enthusiast to Lead the Kaiser's Troops Into the "Proudest City in the World."

An anonymous German writer has produced an extraordinary work entitled "Hindenburg's March into London," says the London Times. The book is delighting the German populace. Some extracts from the last chapter of the book in which the author describes the passage of the vast German army through the streets of the captured capital, follow.

The triumphal entry had been preceded by a great battle in which the Germans had dispersed the last levies of "decadent England." At Croydon the field marshal passes troops in review. "Comrades," he cries, "we have the proudest city in the world in our hands."

The subdued lights of the imperial city are seen by the soldiers as they camp on the night before the triumphal entry into the outer suburbs. The march across London bridge begins at nine o'clock in the morning. Hindenburg seated on his horse, with Crown Prince at his side, walking intently the first regiments as they swing past during the goose step, as if they were on the parade ground at Berlin. The soldiers look curiously at the docks burning or smoldering from Zeppelin attacks. The goal of the troops is St. James' park.

The Wellington and Charing Cross bridges had been demolished on the previous day by heavy German artillery, and all the traffic, tramways, omnibuses, trademen's vans, cabs and motor cars are concentrated upon London bridge. Thousands upon thousands swarm on the top of omnibuses in order to get a glimpse of Hindenburg and "Hans." The troops march through King William street to the "richest place in the world," that lies between the Mansion house, the Bank of England, the Stock exchange, Round the bank the troops saw an angry mob clamoring for money.

The lord mayor of the day looks down upon the strange procession from the Guildhall balcony, unkempt and worried looking; members of the stock exchange are huddled together, angry, but curious. Past St. Paul's, up Fleet street, along the Strand, through the Mall into Clubland, the conquerors march.

Mounted cuirassiers peer out from their privileged positions in the club windows at the troops. Hindenburg and some of the leaders visit the houses of parliament, where, dumbfounded in Hindenburg's embarrassment, they find a huge life size picture of the field marshal propped up on the historic woolsack. Big Ben, meanwhile, has been silent for many months. But Hindenburg's intentions he strikes the hours again on the Westminster bell.

Electrified Pants.

Pants warmed by electricity is the latest war invention. It is described by the inventor, Professor Jaeger, a professor who is at present serving in the Austrian army. Max Eichler, a well-known Vienna professor of medicine, has invented the garment.

Besides the comfort this garment would be to men in the trenches in winter, it is claimed that electrified pants and, likewise, an electrical armoured coat, might be profitably used in airships and aeroplanes. It appears from the description given that ordinary pants but still electrical warming-wires are woven in with the cloth, which is itself made especially with a view to insulation. The pants are put on like any other, and fed by cables at a distance of a hundred yards or more.

The wearer can himself connect and disconnect the heat conductor. The current is taken from a dynamo. A set of batteries is estimated at from £3 6s 8d to £4 8s 6d.

Twenty Years on Job.

Nowadays may be seen William Sebon was passing the home of Mrs. Mary Ann Lasecomb, widow of a contractor, 208 broad street, Hagerstown.

"You're just the man I want to see," she said, hailing him. "I want you to repair a hand mirror for me."

Sebon took the mirror to his shop and set to work on it.

The other afternoon he returned to the Lasgowtiny home.

"What things you have here?" she inquired, "why, I haven't seen you in years."

"Your hand mirror," he remarked, and handed it out simply marked, "25 cents."

"Why, I forgot all about it," ejaculated Mrs. Lasgowtiny.

"So did I," answered Sebon.—New York World.

Beer Glasses to Be Sterilized.

Boiled beer glasses are the only ones permitted in the saloons of Montclair, N. J., by an edict of the health department. Of course, whisky glasses will come under the same rule.

Up to the present the barkeepers have used only cold running water to rinse glasses after use. The health department believes this treatment is not sufficient to destroy germs. The new code requires not only that the glasses must be washed in boiling water, but that "Joe" shall be rinsed in cold water afterward.

The same rule applies to glasses used at soda fountains.

IRON JEWELRY NO NOVELTY

Patriotic Prussian Women Wore Such Ornaments With Pride More Than a Century Ago.

Many months ago, almost from the beginning of the war, we were told that German women, following the example of their great grandmothers, voluntarily gave up their gold rings, necklets, earrings, bracelets and ornaments for every description, to be made or coined into money for the national need.

Whatever truth there may be in this story, there is no doubt that many German women have been preserved by the government with iron rings to replace the gold ones they have parted with.

But that happened a century ago. Then Prussia, crushed by Napoleon, and bankrupt, was in dire need of money and the Prussian women gave up all their jewels and ornaments to help cope with the prevailing poverty. And out of this sacrifice a new industry arose.

This was nothing less than the manufacture of cast-iron jewelry to replace the gold and silver ornaments which the great ladies of the kingdom had given up. At first sight no material seems less promising as a substitute for the precious metals than iron. It was entirely owing to the wonderful craftsmanship of the ironmasters that the results were so extraordinary.

Strength, of course, would be a distinctive mark of such jewelry and a complete set of these iron ornaments, now in the possession of a Toronto (Canada) jeweler, is as rigid and firm as on the day it was made. This particular set, comprising a pair of earrings, necklet, locket and bracelet, has not been looked after until lately.

The ornaments have a wonderfully fragile appearance. In contrast to the exquisite workmanship. Their weight, too, is astonishingly small, the lightness of every article being quite a feature of the set.

Talk—The Manner of It.

The high schools and colleges of the day ought to do something more to teach students how to talk. The young men would be better off for some instruction of the kind, but in the case of the young women it is little less than a necessity. Their voices are carried, as by no means as pleasing as they might easily be were their possessors even reminded occasionally that a voice of modulation, variation, softness and correct and fairly precise pronunciation, is at is however, the sweet girl graduate has anything but a voice and a manner of speaking consistent with the refreshing charms with which she is otherwise endowed is unhappily, in our university in the state—typical of other—a matter frequently observed that nearly every young woman in the senior class was woefully addicted to habits of mispronunciation "Are their voices," he added, "were most distressing. What they said was well enough, but the manner of their saying it was appalling." The indictment, it must be admitted, is well founded. It is one, however, that should serve to broaden, for which there should be no support. And there would be none if attention no more than casual attention were paid to the matter in our schools and colleges. Singing is taught—to a only rarely used.—Why not teach talking?—Indianapolis Star.

Curing the Drug Habit.

The drug habit can be cured. At least, so say the authorities of the Philadelphia General hospital, after four months of experimentation with a number of men who sought its aid. After the enactment of the new anti-drug law, since March 1 the hospital has dealt with 112 of these unfortunates, and, in every case the craving for the drug, whether opium, cocaine, morphine, heroin or laudanum—was checked and broken. The victims came from every state in the Union; they were of all ages, and many of them were women. Full they were all successfully treated.

"The habit," said the chief resident physician, "can be cured. The problem is one of giving the victim a backbone. But right here is the crux of the whole matter—if a man doesn't want to be cured, he can't be cured."

It is a great and important message, full of hope to drug victims everywhere and to those who have sinned and grieve to see them in the bonds of a degrading slavery.—Columbus Dispatch.

Girl to Receive Precious Gift.

A birthday gift beyond price is being given to Miss Lina Cunningham, aged eight. It is her sight. The sight of both eyes was "relieved destroyed by a piece of metal which struck her while she was "playing indian" some time ago. Her parents were unable to pay for the services of a high-class specialist.

The Humane Society for Children became interested and canvassed the business men of the city, with the result that Sanbarton hospital offered to give the child a room free for two week. Dr. Ross P. Kershaner of the Saltburg, Austria, will perform an operation for her sight. Will restore the sight.—Los Angeles Dispatch to Kansas City Star.

Tommy Got Paid for Drinking.

A war story, which is true, was told by a civilian official at a R. A. M. C. mess. He was travelling down to Winchester in a carriage, into which several Tommies had got, and overhearing the following fragment: "Our major is an officer and a gentleman; an officer and a gentleman, I say." The other day he comes into the canteen, and says to me, 'Any commissions?' And I says: 'Yes, sir! Dog your pardon, sir, this tea ain't fit to drink. So he says to me, he looks what I served us: 'Give us a cup.' And when he'd tasted it, 'Orgh' wash, says he. 'Orgwash,' and he says to the bloke: 'Line these men up,' and when he's done that he says: 'And pass them by back their tuppences.' And I'd never paid mine!—London Chronicle.

Get the Habit of Drinking Hot Water Before Breakfast

Says we can't look or feel right with the system full of poisons.

Millions of folks bathe internally now instead of loading their system with drugs. "What a an inside bath" you say. Well, it is guaranteed to perform miracles if you could believe these hot water enthusiasts.

There are vast numbers of men and women who, immediately upon arising in the morning, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of lime stone phosphate in it. This is a very excellent health measure. It is intended to flush the stomach, liver, kidneys and the thirty feet of intestines of the previous day's waste, sour bile and indigestible material left over in the body which, if not eliminated every day, become food for the millions of bacteria which infest the bowels, the quick result is poisons and toxins which are then absorbed into the blood causing headache, bilious attacks, foul breath, bad taste, colds, stomach trouble, kidney misery, sleeplessness, impure blood and all sorts of ailments.

People who feel good one day and badly the next, but who simply can not get feeling right are urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from any druggist or storekeeper. This will cost very little but is sufficient to make anyone a real enthusiast on the subject of internal sanitation.

Just as soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening and freshening, so limestone phosphate and hot water act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels. It is vastly more important to bathe on the inside than on the outside, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities in to the blood, while the bowel pores do.—Adv.

The Uncertain Future.

During a theatrical engagement at Manchester, England, Kemble and Lewis were walking one day along the street when a chimney sweeper and his boy came up. The boy stared at them with open mouth and exclaimed:

"Lor' bless us, Jim!"

"Hold your tongue," said the old sweep, "you don't know what you may come to yourself."

"CASCARETS" for LIVER, BOWELS

For sick headache, bad breath, Sour Stomach and constipation,

Get a 10-cent box now.

No odds how bad your liver, stomach or bowels, how much your head aches, how miserable and unconfortable you are from constipation, biliousness and sluggish bowels—you always get the desired results with Cascarets.

Don't let your stomach, liver and bowels make you miserable. Take Cascarets tonight, put an end to the headache, biliousness, dizziness, sourness, sick, sour, gassy stomach, nausea and all other distresses, cleanse your inside crowd of all the bile, gases and constipated matter which is producing the misery.

A 10-cent box means health, happiness and a clear head for months. No more days of gloom and distress. If you will take a Cascaret now and then, all distress will vanish. Don't forget the children—their little insides need a cleansing too. Adv.

The "Boss."

"I am surprised to hear that the Dobsons have separated. What was the cause?"

"Incompatibility. He absolutely detested all the moving picture stars she admired."

GENTLE RUBBING HELPS VARICOSE VEINS

Bathing the swollen veins with ice for about two minutes with a gentle upward stroke brings health to suffering and is slightly good advice, says an eminent specialist.

After the ice, rubber which should always be toward the heart, because it follows the veins flows that way, apply Emerald Oil (full strength) with bits of lint.

The little smarting soon treatment soothes and improvement will be noticed at once. Emerald Oil is a clear, pleasant liquid. It is very concentrated and penetrating and can be obtained at any modern drug store. It is so powerful that it also reduces Goitre and Cysts.

Electric Restaurant.

A large popular restaurant has installed an electric refrigerator 10 yards from the foot of the wall in one of its rooms. Here food is cooked or heated electrically, and hot coffee is prepared by the same means. Since most of the important coal mines already are electric power underground for power purposes it would be little difficulty in establishing subterranean electric restaurants in any of them.

Chase S. Osborn As Seen Abroad

(From an editorial in the Chicago Post)

There's many a true word spoken in jest.

The Forty club, that old Gridiron club of Chicago, on Tuesday nominated Chase S. Osborn of Michigan for president of the United States. And Mr. Osborn came right back at them with a proposal to make them his first cabinet. He said that Washington needed them, just as the northwest needed its warmth of their friendship to drive out the ice from the straits and bring spring to Sault Ste. Marie. Whereupon they stose and cheered him.

It was a facetious little interchange, marked by a touch of real feeling underneath.

But coming, as it does, hard upon the mention of former Gov. Osborn as the possible temporary chairman of the Republican national convention, it shows, as a hostile Michigan newspaper said the other day, "that man is gaining strength with every day that passes."

Of course, it is natural enough that Osborn should be strong in Michigan. He left a record there that shows up as well as, if not far better than the records of most of the governors who have jumped from state capitals to the White House. It is a long list of accomplishments, some of them even more striking now than they were at the time he was governor, three years ago.

When Mr. Osborn was elected governor in 1910 he found his state a million dollars in debt and with an almost regulation bond-issuing power. When he ended his term two years later and refused to be nominated the debt was paid, the tax rate was cut in half and there were several millions in the treasury. That remarkable feat was performed simply through the governor's willingness to assume the almost complete financial power which the state constitution gave him. He introduced a system of scientific dieting at the state institutions which cut their cost per capita in half; he eliminated the endless waste of political administration and on these savings he gave more to "good roads" and to the University of Michigan than other had ever had.

All this proved a practical administrative quality that is far more in American executives than are the purely political abilities.

Gov. Osborn, wanting to himself a hostile legislature, framed and passed a workman's compensation law, can live thoroughly together for ten years and hardly catch sight of it. The unnecessary defect of one's character, little wishes and crotchets has put votes or his darling hobbies, are sometimes the instrument of slow torture by which a man murders his wife.

Really Serious.

The famous detective gasped as he stirred at the scene of the crime. "Heavens," said he, as he looked at the window through which the thief had escaped, "this is more serious than I had expected! It's broken on both sides!"—Philadelphia Ledger.

BULLETIN

To Regard to the Matter of Through Tickets to Charlevoix via Petoskey and Bay View From Points South of Grand Rapids

To our Membership and Guests of the Belvedere Hotel:—

We take great pleasure in informing you that an order secured by your board more than a year ago from the Michigan Rail Road Commission, requiring the G. R. & I. and the Pere Marquette railroads to resume the issuing of joint passenger tariffs and through tickets to Charlevoix via Bay View and Petoskey from points south of Grand Rapids, has just been confirmed by the United States Supreme Court in a denial of the appeal of the G. R. & I. railroad.

This means that by reason of this order, our members and the guests of the Belvedere may in future buy through tickets to and from Charlevoix and Belvedere via Petoskey and Bay View and may check baggage through to destination. The advantages of buying such through tickets and re-routing baggage at Petoskey and Bay View will be a thing of the past.

For four long years your Board of Trustees, realizing the inconvenience and annoyance caused our members and guests, has had this matter in hand through a committee of the Board appointed to pay our grievances before the Michigan Railroad Commission and pray for relief. Ever since its appointment, this committee has been steadily and persistently "on the job" with the result that it has rendered a distinct service, which will be gratefully appreciated by the membership.

By order of the Board.

Yours very truly,
Emerson W. Price, James I. Durette,
Secretary. President.

The ice harvest will begin next week in earnest, and, as usual, it will continue for two weeks with large forces of men and teams. Without doubt more ice is stored in Charlevoix every winter than at any point between Grand Haven and the straits. The demands of the hotels and fisheries create an industry which, though brief, is of colossal proportions.

SPECIAL INVITATION

We would be glad for every person in Charlevoix to visit our Club Rooms.

Drop in some evening and watch the "pin boys" work. Please do not criticise or listen to criticism until you have investigated for yourself.

Come for an hour or two of evening most and absorb some of our "Sparkling tum" and you'll always thereafter be our friend—you can't help it.

Yours for the great work and the boys.

LLOYD C. VINYARD.

Prosperity Needs Discontent.

A wise philosopher has said that no person, unless they are a man or woman of vision, can live intimately together for ten years and hold each other. The unnecessary defect of one's character, little wishes and crotchets has put votes or his darling hobbies, are sometimes the instrument of slow torture by which a man murders his wife.

SPAIN'S KING WINS PRINCESS' LIBERTY

Austrian Army Head's Daughter and Spouse Get Freedom.

WERE PRISONERS OF BRITISH

Through King's Kind Offices Princess Emmanuel of Salm-Salm and Her Husband, Imprisoned at Gibraltar, Have Been Exchanged—All Previous Efforts to Free Them Were Failures.

Madrid.—Princess Emmanuel of Salm-Salm, the eldest daughter of Archduke Frederick, commander in chief of the Austro-Hungarian army, who, with her husband, has been a prisoner of war in the hands of the British, is to be given her liberty, her husband likewise is to need, this being the latest knight errantry of the king of Spain.

When war was declared in August, 1914, the prince and princess were in South Africa on a hunting trip, the first time they had ever been so far from home. They were at once arrested and placed in a concentration camp, later sent to Gibraltar in captivity after months of negotiations between the American ambassadors in London and Berlin with the British government.

All efforts to obtain freedom for them to return home were futuitous. The prince is a lieutenant in the Austrian cavalry, a very competent cavalry officer in the Prussian army as well as in the Austrian army and, besides, a person of great official importance. He is to be extinguished, it is reported, for Colonel Gordon, a special friend of Lord Kitchener, who was captured some time ago by the Germans.

Princess Emmanuel of Salm-Salm was the Archduchess Marie Christina of Austria, and her last loss in this war, which was brought on by the assassination of the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, heir to the Austrian throne, is a curious coincidence since she was the wife selected for the archduke by Emperor Francis Joseph. He fell in love with Countess Sophia von Chotek, lady in waiting in the household of Archduke Frederick, and the royal lady was jilted. Her marriage to Prince Salm-Salm has nevertheless been a happy one. They married in Vienna fourteen years ago and have five children, three girls and two boys, who will be glad to see their parents after a separation of nearly two years since they left their castle in Westpatilla.

It was at first reported that the prince captured by the British was the son of Prince Felix of Salm-Salm, who married the American actress, Miss Agnes Leclercq of Baltimore. He came to the United States during the civil war, having had some experience in both the German and Austrian armies, and President Lincoln gave him a commission as brigadier general. He was killed at the battle of Gravelotte, having returned to Germany for the Franco-Prussian war of 1870. His widow died at Kerlsruhe in December, 1903, as Mme Charles Hemenway, having made a second marriage in 1876, but spending most of her life in Germany. Her marriage with the prince was never recognized by his family, nor never had the legal right to be called Princess Felix Salm, and she left no one who assumed that title.

Toye accepted his fate with a ready resignation, little short of alacrity. There was a gleam in his sunken eyes and his blue chin came up with a jerk. "That's talking!" said he. "Now will you promise me never to marry Camelot?"

"Mr. Toye!"

"That's talking, too, and I guess I mean it to be. It's not all dog-in-the-manger either. I want that promise a lot more than I want the other. You needn't marry me, Miss Blanche, but you mustn't marry Camelot."

Blanche was blazing. "But this is simply outrageous!"

"I claim there's an outrageous cause for it. Are you prepared to swear what I ask, and trust me as I'll trust you, or am I to tell you the whole thing right now?"

"You won't force me to listen to another word from you, if you're a gentleman, Mr. Toye!"

"It's not what I am that counts. Swear that to me, and I swear, on my side, that I won't give him away to you or anyone else. But it must be the most solemn contract man and woman ever made."

The silver teapot arrived at this juncture, and not inopportunely. She had to give him his tea, with her young maid's help, and to play a tiny part in which he supported her really beautifully. She had time to think, almost coolly; and one thought brought a thrill. If it was a question of her marrying or not marrying Walter Camelot, it must be free and clear of the door of some dreadful deed!

"What has he done?" she begged, with a pathetic abandonment of her previous attitude, the moment they were by themselves.

"Must I tell you?" His reluctance was genuine.

"I insist upon it!" she flashed again. "Well, it's a long story."

"Never mind. I can listen."

"You know, I had to go back to Italy—"

"Had you?"

"Why, I did go." He had slurred the first statement; this one was sheer deliberately deliberate. "I did go, and before I went I asked Camelot for an introduction to some friends of his down in Naples.

"I didn't know he had any," said Blanche.

"Why, he doesn't have any" said Toye, "but he claimed to have some. He left the Kaiser Fritz the other day at Naples. I guess he told you?"

"No. I understood he came round to Northampton, but I didn't pry about a cabin!"

"Only from Genoa; that's where I took the steamer and Camelot regained my cabin."

"Well!"

"He claimed to have spent the interval with some friends at Rome. These friends don't exist, Miss Blanche," said Toye.

"Is that any business of mine?" she asked him severely.

"Why, yes, I'm afraid it's going to be. That is, unless you'll still trust me—"

"Go on, please."

"Why, he never stayed at Rome at all, nor yet in Italy any longer than it takes to cross Brindisi on the train. Your attention for one moment!" He took out a neat pocketbook. Blanche had opened her lips, but she did not interrupt; she just grasped the arms of her chair as though about to hear physical pain. "The Kaiser Fritz—Toye was speaking from his book—put in at Naples late Monday afternoon, September eighth. Seems she was overdue, and I was mad about it, and never got away until the—"

"Do you mean Walter Camelot?" cried Blanche. It was like small talk from a dentist at the last moment.

"I want you to understand about the steamer first," said Toye. "She waited Monday night in the Bay of Naples, only sailed Tuesday morning, only reached Genoa Wednesday morning, and in there all of forty-five hours as these German boats do, anyhow. That brings us to Friday morning before the Kaiser Fritz gets quit of Italy, doesn't it?"

"Yes—I suppose so—do tell me about Walter!"

"Why, I first heard of him at Genoa, where they figured I should have a stateroom all to myself, as the other gentleman had been left behind at Naples. I never saw him till we scrambled aboard again Friday, about the fifty-ninth minute of the eleventh hour."

"At Genoa?"

"Stupe."

"And you pretend to know where he's been?"

"I guess I do know"—and Toye sighed as he raised his little book—"Camelot swopped on the crains that left Naples six-fifty Monday evening, and off the one timed to reach Charing Cross three-twenty-five Wednesday."

"The day of the—"

"Yes. I never called it by the hardest name myself; but it was seven-thirty Wednesday evening that Henry Craven got his death-blow somehow. Well, Walter Camelot left Charing Cross again by the nine o'clock that night, and was back aboard the Kaiser Fritz on Friday morning—till a few friends in Rome made him didn't exist."

The note-book was put away with every symptom of relief.

"I suppose you can prove what you say?" said Blanche in a voice as dull as her unseeing eyes.

"I have men to swear to him—ticket-collectors, conductors, waiters on the restaurant-car—all up and down the line. I went over the same ground on the same trains, so that was simple. I can also produce the barber who claims to have shaved off his beard in Paris, where he put in hours Tuesday morning."

Blanche looked up suddenly, not at Toye, but past him toward an oven-like sideslate against the wall. It was there that Camelot's photograph had stood among many others, until this morning she had never missed it, for she seemed hardly to have been looking in the week; but she had been wondering who had removed it, whether Camelot himself (who had spoken of doing so, she now knew why) or Matilda (whom she spoiled question about it) in a fit of unprovokable disapproval. And she felt, and felt herself, a fool for it, like a leather frame and all!

"I know what you did," said Blanche. "You took that photograph with you—this one on that table—and had him identified by it."

"It was the night I came down to bid you good-by," he confessed, "and didn't have time to wait. I didn't come down for the photo. I never thought of it till I saw it there. I came down to kind of warn you, Miss Blanche!"

"Against him?" she said, as if there was only one man with the name.

"Yes—I guess I'd already warned Camelot that I was starting on his tracks."

And then Blanche just said, "Poor—poor—dear!" as she talking to herself. And Toye setted upon the words as she had seized on nothing from him.

"Have you only pity for the fellow?" he cried, for she was gazing at the bearded photograph without revulsion.

"Of course," she answered, hardly attending.

"Even though he killed the man—even though he came across Europe to kill him?"

"Oh, don't think it was deliberate yourself, even if he did do it."

"But can you doubt that he did?" cried Toye, quick to ignore the point as that," said Blanche. "I must see him first."

"She Cazalet?"

Toye had come to his feet, not simply in the horror and indignation which had gradually taken possession of him, but under the stress of some new and sudden resolve.

"Of course," said Blanche: "of course I must see him as soon as possible."

"You shall never speak to that man again, as long as ever you live," said Toye, with the utmost emphasis and derision.

"Who's going to prevent me?"

"I am, by laying an information against him this minute, unless you promise never to see or to speak to Cazalet again."

Blanche felt cold and sick, but the bit of downright bullying did her good. "I didn't know you were a black mailer, Mr. Toye!"

"You know I'm not; but I mean to save you from Cazalet, blackmail or shame."

"To save me from a mere old friend—nothing more—nothing—all our lives!"

"I believe that," he said, searching her with his smoldering eyes. "You couldn't tell a lie, I guess, not if you tried! But you would do something, if it just a man being next door to hell that would bring a God's angel—like video about."

She was as quick to soften on her side.

"Don't talk nonsense, please," she begged, forcing a smile through her distress. "Will you promise to do nothing to—if I promise?"

"Not to go near him!"

"No."

"Nor see him here?"

"No."

"Nor anywhere else?"

"No. I give you my word."

"If you break it, I break mine that minute! Is it a deal that way?"

"Yes! Yes! I promise!"

"Then what do I do, by God?" said Jim Toye.

CHAPTER XIII.

Faith Unfaithful.

"It's all perfectly true," said Cazalet calmly. "Those were my movements while I was off the ship, except for the five hours and a bit that I was away from Charing Cross. I can't dispute a detail of all the rest. But they'll have to fill in those five hours unless they want another case to collapse like the one against Bruno!"

Old Savage had writhed like a venerable worm, in the experienced hands of the bobby's blackmailer, but they Mr. Drinkwater and his discoveries had come still worse out of a better encounter with the crucibal attorney, and Cazalet had described the whole thing as only he could describe a given episode, down to the ultimate dismissal of the charge against Bruno, with a gusto the more comical for the deliberately low pitch of his voice. It was in the little lodging-house sitting room at Nell Gwynne's Cottages, he stood with his back to the crackling fire that he had just lighted himself, as it were, already at bay, for the locked doors were in front of his nose, and his eyes roved incessantly from the landing door on one side to the curtained casement on the other. "He sometimes he passed to gave it the friend who had come to warn him of his danger; and there was nothing cynical or grim about him then.

Blanche had broken her word for perhaps the first time in her life; but she had never before been extorted from her by duress, and it would be afterwards to credit her with much compunction on the point. Her one great claim to it in the possibility of Toye's turning up at any moment; but this she had obviated to some extent by coming straight to the cottages when he left her—presumably to look for Cazalet in London, since she had been careful not to mention his change of address. Cazalet to her relief had also a little to her hurt, she had found at his lodgings in the neighborhood, full of the news that he had not ventured to communicate to her. But it was no time for taking anything but his part to heart. And that they had been disturbed, almost at once by a knock, rather as incident than to innocent man, for even now, or perhaps now the grievous case—so she thought could not bring herself to believe her old friend guilty of a violent crime, however unprovoked, for which another had been allowed to suffer, for however short a time.

"Rag-Time."

Rag time music—being in no wise serious, is the reverse of depressing. "The African Jingles of the present day create an emotional atmosphere of restlessness and excitement which is typically American, and which is opposed to health only so far as our national restlessness and lack of poise tend to make us a people whose national disease is nervous exhaustion."

Roughly speaking, lively music, such as ragtime, is likely to cause depressed persons from their mental choirs, and sedentary people, who soothe the excitable and hyperkinetic.

One Way to Make a Friend.

There are several kinds of hypocrisy, but the one that masculinity now imposes is spurious devilishness. Nothing brings the beam of contentment, serenity or the mellowness eye as a Don Juan accosting big him in the ribs and wink as you call him a sly dog—and he loves you. He may be the apotheosis of domestic respectability, but if you will but insist that you believe him capable of maintaining a seraglio with consummate deceit, you are his friend.

Utility Hats of Mourning

Making Ready the Spring Blouses

Because mourning hats have a lasting place in the scheme of things, special fabrics are manufactured for making them. Besides crape, nun's veiling and silk plaids there are silks for silks that are used for the utility hats of mourning. Crape is often used in the decoration of these hats of heavier silk, and since the process of waterproofing it has been discovered its durability rivals that of any other silk.

Three mourning hats for street wear are shown here. Dignified and conservative shapes are chosen for them and they are made with exquisite neatness and accuracy. Tucks and folds and ornaments made of the material are as characteristic of these hats as of those made entirely of crape.

At the left of the picture a sailor hat of chiffon taffeta has a brim of even width all around, covered with the silk put on plain, and a soft top crown. Overlapping box folds cover the side crown, and a novel rosette of the silk forms the trimming. It is posed squarely in front.

At the right a hat with a wider brim is covered with faille silk put on smoothly. There is a ribbon band about the crown, and where the brim lifts at the back a bow and ends of the same ribbon. The ornament at the front simulates a bird and is made of overlapping folds of silk on a foundation.

At the top a hat suited to the mission is made of a corded silk. It is a tricorne shape and the silk covers it smoothly. Ornaments resembling quills are made by winding foundations of wired buckram with blue folds of the silk. They are mounted at the front, following the line of the brim at the right, and run through rings made in the same way as they are.

These hats are correct for street wear, in shape and material, and in the methods used in making them. They are shown in the correct poses on the head. Jaunty shapes and rakish poses are obviously entirely out of place in mourning millinery.

Rose Petal Cushions.

Sofa pillows were never more ornamental. Where is the woman who can resist the appeal of the newest rose-petal one? It is shaped exactly like a rose, with the petals nearest the heart of the deepest shade. Each petal is cut separately, gathered where it is attached and by this means is shaped so that the perfect flower is simulated petal by petal. Among these satiny petals the head sinks to rest in downy ease.

Care of Complexion.

Some complexions will not accept soap and water, others cannot endure ice cosmetics. There is as much difference between complexions as there is between digestion—what is food for one is poison for another. As a general rule, for the average skin the soap and water bath at night is of great benefit. To retire with the dust and grime of the day remaining on one's countenance is to treat one's face negligently.

BETTER THAN A BAROMETER

As Reliable Weather Prophet, Old Ram Fully Justified Confidence Shown in Him by His Owner

In the Countryside Magazine, Miss Margaret Woodward tells how a farmer's barometer proved its effectiveness as a weather predictor, and confounded science. Every New England farmer she says, knows that cattle and sheep are trustworthy weather prophets.

There is a story of a party of scientific men who were making observations on a ledge near which was a flock of sheep. The professors settled a great many questions relating to natural science to their own satisfaction. As they wisted to make another trip to the ledge the next day, the weather became a matter of interest to them. One of their number visited the barometer carefully, and announced to the waiting group that tomorrow's weather would be fine.

Thereupon the old farmer who was within hearing distance remarked with a genuine Yankee drawl, "I dunno how you fellows are so cocksure about the weather tomorrow, but if that old ram yonder keeps his rump to the wind'ard, it's jest bound to rain."

And rain it did, much to the discomfiture of the professors.—Youth's Companion.

NOTHING FOR BROWN TO DO

Only Minor Matters Came Up, and Those Were Wife's Privilege to Do! Well!

Col. J. J. Irish, who is a strong anti-suffragist, said in San Francisco:

"The recent elections show plainly the uselessness of woman suffrage. I think the voters were wise. There was nothing important, nothing in Brown's books.

"Brown and Black," continued Colonel Irish, "were arguing at their club on the question as to who should be at the head of the household, man or the woman.

"'I'm the breadwinner,' Black said firmly, and, therefore, I rule in my house.

"'Well,' said Brown, 'before we were married my wife and I made an agreement that I should make the rulings on all the major things, and she in all the minor ones.

"Brown smiled wanly. 'So far,' he replied, 'no major matters have come up.'"—Exchange.

Pa's Sound Logic.

Pat was fishing in a river belonging to a rich man, over which there was a notice, "Trespassers prosecuted." Paddy ignored this statement, and went fishing for some time caught a salmon, which he brought home and cooked. A policeman passing by the door smelled the salmon and knocked.

"Well, Pat O'Hara, in whose river did you catch that salmon?"

"Well, I'll tell the honest truth. I caught it in that river near the gentleman's house over there."

"Well," said the sergeant, "don't you know everything in that river belongs to that gentleman?"

"Arra, to be sure," said Pat, "if I went for a swim in that river would I belong to that gentleman?"

"Dat's de kind of a pussun I always tock Rastus to be."

"Lemmee tell yo' something. Rastus was at de ball last night, an' when de trouble started he didn't have nuthin' but a safety razor."

Correction.

"The great American drama," remarked the eminent critic, "is still unwritten."

"You're wrong," answered the playwright. "I wrote it three years ago, but I can't get any manager to produce it."

Specializing.

"What is your boy studying at school?"

"Jedgin'," replied Farmer Cornfoot. "Ma says he can't do nuthin' in middlin' me of expenses. I should say it was mostly arithmetic."

"Yes, because she buzzes a bit."

"It's on account of the airs she puts on."

WOMAN AVOIDS OPERATION

Medicine Which Made Surgeon's Work Unnecessary.

Astoria, N. Y.—"For two years I was feeling ill and took all kinds of tonics. I was getting worse every day; I had chills, my head would ache, I was always tired. I took my wife to a doctor and he said I was going under an operation, but I did not go. I read in the paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and told my husband about it. I said 'I know nothing will help me but I will try this.' I found myself improving from the very first bottle, and in two weeks time I was able to sit down and eat a hearty breakfast with my husband, which I had not done for two years. I am now in the best of health and did not have the operation."—Mrs. John A. Rogers, 602 Fushing Avenue, Astoria, N. Y.

Every one dreads the surgeon's knife and the operating table. Sometimes nothing else will do; but many times doctors say they are necessary when they are not. Letters like letter next to the Pinkham Laboratory, telling how operations were advised and were not performed, or if performed, did no good, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was used and good health followed.

Misleading.

Rev. George R. Lunn, the new Socialist mayor of Schenectady, was congratulated on his election.

"The people have confidence in the honesty of my party's policy," he said. "Our opponents tried to put our principles in a false light, but the people couldn't be fooled. They knew that the opposition's astounderisms on our principles were as misleading as the bachelor's description of his sister's new baby.

"Asked to describe this new arrival, the bachelor replied:

"'Um! Very small features, clean-shaven, red-faced and a very hard drinker.'"

Inexplicable.

"I understand Berthson's latest novel is a failure, although he hope, it would be a 'best seller.'"

Suspicious.

"Aren't you delighted that your husband has given up smoking?"

That Careless Throw

By T. R. BENNETT

(Copyright, 1915, by W. G. Chapman.)

"It's love that makes the world go round," proclaimed the wife of the village minister.

In the case of those two, replied the husband indignantly, "it's certainly the case.

"Those two were manifestly a happy and well-harmonized pair. They little resembled conventional lovers, however. John Burnham was thirty-five and his studious face little suggested the ardent youth and sweetheart. Anita Newton was five years his junior, gentlefaced and with a sort of spiritual beauty that kept her eyes skylark through which the true soul of a pure, loyal woman showed clearly.

As they presented this lovely spring afternoon, so they had been in the public eye for over two years. Late in life love had come to glorify the ambitions of John Burnham. Anita had received his confession, and was happy. There had been in his life the stench which commonness of a revel now and she honored and respected him.

But when John had proposed to Anita it had been in the presence of her three spinster sisters. At that time it looked as though the question of getting along was solved for John. His uncle had died leaving all his possessions to this favorite nephew. When the lawyers finished settling up the estate John had left the office of the ramshackly old house with twenty acres of rocks and hills behind it.

Old Daniel Burnham had been a surveyor and John had been his assistant ever since school. It was a dull life in a way, but John loved nature and he took great enjoyment in his varied outdoor duties. When he learned that a much modest store of hoarded gold of his deceased uncle had evaporated in moonshine and that all he had that was practical was a leaky roof over his head, he set at work to make the best of the situation.

"My prospects have turned out pretty bad, Adria," he had told his fiancee. "The surveying business is not what it used to be. It may be years before I can get on a settled basis. I want to release you from your promise—"

"No, John," Adria had replied, the true lovelight shining in her eyes, "we will simply wait for Christmas."

There had been a year's waiting and business did not better with John Burnham. Like the proverbial cat he sniffed scents, but never found where went on, nothing marred its beauty or personalness. There was evenings John called at the Newton home and spent a pleasant hour with the four sisters. Two were in connecting places a washer between the bolt head and the seat plank, another between blocks C and D, and a third between the sled top and the bolt nut.

Cut block E (Fig. 9) out of a piece of two-by-four, bevel its top edge as shown in Fig. 7, and fasten the pair of hinges to the wider edge. Have holes through the block for bolting the hinges onto each runner. Use Flat Head Screws through the other holes. Then fasten the other all of the hinges to the plank seat, using bolts for the center holes, and screws for the outer holes, and spike the block to the sled top. The hinge arrangement is necessary so the seat will rise and fail as it runs over irregularities in the surface of the snow sled. Connect the bow of the stern sled with the seat plank by 18-inch pieces of chain attached to screweyes (Figs. 2 and 7).

Cross pieces F (Figs. 4 and 7) support the handle-bars. Fasten them to the inner side of the seat plank. Use broom-handles for handle-bars.

HANDICRAFT FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

By A. NEELY HALL and DOROTHY PERKINS

A HOME-MADE BOBSLED.

To make a strong, substantial sled it is best to use heavy material. Two-by-fours for the runners and for blocks for connecting the sleds to the seat, two-by-tens for the sled tops and seat, and one-by-two material for cross pieces, is the right sort of stuff. For bardware you will need some two-inch and three-inch nails, a few eighths inch carriage bolt eight inches long and three inch washers for the bolt, a pair of four-by-four-inch strap hinges about four inches long, two inch and three-inch nails, a few of iron jack-nails three feet long.

The four runners of the two sleds should be prepared first. Figure 3 shows a pattern. Saw the rib out upon a piece of two-by-four, sloping the bow from a distance of about ten inches back of the end, and rounding and slanting the stern in the manner shown. Notches A are for crosspieces on which should be each inch thick and two inches wide. Locate the first notch eight inches from the bow, the third notch near the stern, and the second notch halfway between the first and third. After marking out the runner, cut out carefully, then use it for a pattern for marking out the other.

Make crosspieces A fourteen inches long, and nail them fast in the notches cut for them (Fig. 4). Then cut the sled tops twenty inches long out of stitch stuff and fasten them to cross pieces A, nailing through the bottom of the cross pieces into them (Fig. 5). Cross piece B (Fig. 8) is the footbar on the bow sled; on the stern sled a similar cross piece, twenty inches long, forms a brace.

Figures 9 and 10 are front sections showing how the bow and stern sleds are connected to the plank seat. Cut blocks C and D (Figs. 6 and 8) two inches square, and nail C to the under side of the plank seat, and D to the top of the bow sled; then bore a five-eighths inch hole through the center of C and the plank seat, and through D and the sled top. In connecting, place a washer between the bolt head and the seat plank, another between blocks C and D, and a third between the sled top and the bolt nut.

Cut block E (Fig. 9) out of a piece of two-by-four, bevel its top edge as shown in Fig. 7, and fasten the pair of hinges to the wider edge. Have holes through the block for bolting the hinges onto each runner. Use Flat Head Screws through the other holes. Then fasten the other all of the hinges to the plank seat, using bolts for the center holes, and screws for the outer holes, and spike the block to the sled top. The hinge arrangement is necessary so the seat will rise and fail as it runs over irregularities in the surface of the snow sled. Connect the bow of the stern sled with the seat plank by 18-inch pieces of chain attached to screweyes (Figs. 2 and 7).

Cross pieces F (Figs. 4 and 7) support the handle-bars. Fasten them to the inner side of the seat plank. Use broom-handles for handle-bars.

FOR YOUR SCHOOL DESK.

Every girl should have a holder for pencils and pen holder, to keep them from scattering about in her school desk.

Cretonne of a dark color, with a small pattern, is the best material to use. For the holder shown in Fig. 1, first cut a piece of cloth 7 inches wide and 8½ inches long (Fig. 1). Then turn down 2 inches of its length (A, Figs. 3 and 4) and stitch the turned-over edge as indicated by the row of small dots in Fig. 4. The heavy dotted line in Fig. 4 indicates where to stitch the other side of the side it over to the opposite side.

The pockets are partitioned off with spaces down rows of dots (Fig. 5).

Sew a short piece of tape to the center of each side of this holder, to provide for tying the holder in a roll (Fig. 1 and 3).

Some of you girls will prefer the holder shown in Fig. 5, because of its pocket, for erasers, pencil sharpener, penknife, pencil stubs, etc. Figure 6 shows the pattern by which to cut the cloth; also, how the edges should be turned over slightly, ready to be bound with a narrow braid, to conceal the raw edge. The dotted lines indicate the folding, the outer third A folds over on to the center third B, to form the pocket, and it is stitched to B along the top and bottom edges; and the outer third C is folded on to the center third for pencils.

The pen-wiper shown in Fig. 7 is composed of four layers of light-weight flannel, 4½, 3½, 3 and 2½ inches in diameter, sewed together through their centers, with a fancy button sewed to the top.

Figure 8 shows the four circular pieces pinned one on top of the other. The dotted lines show the stitching lines how to prepare the pieces by first folding over a square of cloth from top to bottom, then from side to side, and then from corner to corner into the form of Fig. 9. Cut off the upper corner on one arc of a circle, as indicated by dotted line in Fig. 9, and notch the folded edges (Fig. 10). Use two colors of fancy alternating them, and you will have a most attractive pen-wiper.

Never carry a pointed instrument in your pocket, or lay it away in your desk without protecting the points. A cork pushed far enough on to the points to hold fast makes a good protection (Figs. 11 and 12).

Good Advice.

"Come into my parlor," said the spider to the fly.

"Don't get connected by what is said to you," said the fly another. "You're no parlor ornament, you know."

Drawing the Line.

"This world is but a vale of tears," said the sentimental landlady. "Even the beautiful rose has its thorn.

"Ch, I don't mind a little thing like that," replied the prosaic boarder, "but when it comes to finding a hairpin in the hash, I draw the line."

Long's Peak in Winter

DR. ROPER of Chicago recently made an unusually dangerous ascent of Long's peak, the giant of the new Rocky Mountain national park, and has given details of the exploit in a letter to a friend.

Long's peak, which is 14,255 feet high, was considered uncliimable for many years. Its summit is reached by passing from Boulder field, which lies 12,000 feet up, through an opening in the rocky wall known as Keyhole and upon the side of a sharp-angled slope covered with perpetual ice and snow, which slants from near the summit far down the mountain side to end in a nearly precipitous drop of a good deal more than a thousand feet into Glacier gorge.

This is called the Trough and it is ascended by steps cut in the ice and snow, or were frequently obliterated by fresh snowfalls and must be renewed continually. So too, some of the hardy scalers of the summit, which include, by the way, an increasing number of women, has lost control on this dangerous slope, though efforts are whispered of cross signal slips caught just in time.

Mr. Roper, while ascending the lower levels, met four young men, two of them with frozen feet, who had been badly overtaken on the summit by a snow squall obliterating the steps too late in the day to enable them to cut new ones on their descent.

In the Face of a Gale.

"As time was a being a factor on the summit of Long's peak the night after I arrived at the inn," writes Mr. Roper. "I was advised not to attempt the ascent for several days on account of the danger" therefore waited until the fourth day after the snow. Starting about seven in the morning, I rode alone and without guide to Boulder field, where the horse was left. I had some description of the appearance of the Keyhole, and it had been agreed on that perhaps I would find difficulty in getting by the snow in the Trough and might do better to climb the boulders along the side. The geological survey map constituted the rest of my information about the ascent.

"Walking across Boulder field I was somewhat sheltered from the wind, which was blowing a gale from the direction of the Keyhole, but when I found the wind blowing against me so strong that I could hardly stand, I therefore retraced a few steps, sat down in the lee of a protecting rock and ate a portion of my lunch. It was so cold that there appeared to be no prospect of rain at lower altitudes, and I therefore left at this point my knapsack, containing my raincoat, the remainder of my lunch and a few odds and incidentals.

Cutting Steps in the Ice.

"After leaving the Keyhole the general direction of the trail was left to me by a few cairns, but they were very scarce. The footprints in the snow of a party that had made the ascent the previous day were of considerable assistance and particularly so in the Trough, where I found their steps cut in the ice and crusty snow. I did not have to cut steps for my night steps, and as I had nothing that could be used for the purpose except my hunting knife this was very fortunate.

"The ascent from the Keyhole to the summit required an hour and thirty minutes. In the Trough I was on all fours about half the time and did considerable climbing over and amongst the boulders. I would characterize the ascent as dangerous rather than difficult. There was no snow of any consequence except in the Trough, though my brief stay at the register on the summit showed that the party had found two inches on the summit the previous day.

"It was taken opportunity to enjoy the many magnificent views on the way up the peak, and it was fortunate that I did so, as I there found a storm gathering, the clouds being about on the level with the summit of the peak and soon starting to fall. I made a slight tour of the summit and then located and examined the register of the Colorado Mountain club.

Fighting a Snow Storm.

"The snowfall rapidly increased, so that in twenty minutes after reaching the summit I started the descent, as I feared difficulty due to the snow covering the steps in the Trough. My fears were well founded, more than half of the steps were not only filled but entirely covered and obliterated, so that it was impossible to locate them. There were several places from fifty to a hundred feet wide or more between the boulders along the side of the Trough where there was no sign of any footing, and if one should start to slip it was hard to see just where one might expect to stop. The only certain place appeared to be down near Glacier lake, some 2,000 feet below.

"In these places I made steps by repeated kicks with my heels in the same time making hand holds higher up with my hands in the crusty snow.

"Personally, I was able to find the steps in that portion of the side of the Trough that was covered with ice, but I was not so fortunate in the snow. I had to go forward at the same time until I could bring my foot or knee down, and after getting so far that I swung freely below the chest I found it impossible to find safe footing and had to climb up again over the bowlders. As the snow was deep, I was in a position with a steep crusty snow slope below it, the climbing was attended with some danger, and especially so as the first part of the climbing consisted of a series of kicks and wriggles in an attempt to lift my clothing clear of the snow which was piling up forward at the same time until I could bring my foot or knee down.

"The trail was very dim after getting out of the Trough, so that I found myself a considerable distance above the trail, and nearly descended the side of the mountain. There is one instance of the Keyhole. The difficulties in getting the Keyhole in the trail resulted in my making the descent to the Keyhole in an hour and therefore retraced a few steps, but down in the lee of a protecting rock and ate a portion of my lunch. It was so cold that there appeared to be no prospect of rain at lower altitudes, and I therefore left at this point my knapsack, containing my raincoat, the remainder of my lunch and a few odds and incidentals.

Brilliant Array of Fearless Seafaring Adventurers Belonging to

"The ice party this year consisted of Storkersen, Andreesen and Thomson, all Norwegians except myself," wrote Vilhjalmur Stefansson in the opening sentence of the account of his polar expedition. Apparently the author himself, an American or Canadian, as he is, and gives no credit to Scandinavia for the part he played in the narrative of what happened. It was more than coincidence that his companions were "all Norwegians." The annals of arctic and antarctic exploration are filled with the explorers of Norwegians and few explorers have been more distinguished than they regarding their achievements.

The Norsemen have been fearless seafaring adventurers since the days when the vikings, in their little ships, ravaged the west coast of Europe and centuries after that visited the British Isles. They touched out into the unknown north seas to Iceland, then to Greenland, and nearly a thousand years ago Lief Ericson and his crew visited the land they named Vinland and what we know as New England. Ericson's discovery was made to find evidence of their coming centuries before Columbus had sailed on his memorable voyage.

(TEXT—These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God.—1 John 5:13.)

God has given one book in the Bible particularly to tell us how we may have eternal life; that book is the Gospel by John; see John 20:30-31. God has given another book for those who believe, particularly that they may know that they have eternal life; that book is the First Epistle of John, see our text, 1 John 5:13. If we are not a Christian, the book for us to study is the Gospel by John; if you are a Christian and are not sure of your salvation, you should study the First Epistle of John.

After John Wesley had been preaching some time, but without results, he received a letter from a little girl, Mrs. Wesley, of your salvation?"

GOT SAILORS' "GOATS"

REMARKABLE EXPERIENCE UNNERVED BRITISH SEAMEN.

Men Refused to Stay on Ship That In Their Opinion Had "Been the Bottom of the Sea"—Vessel Held in Thick Mud.

Not so very long ago the appearance of a new island off the coast of Alaska would have set mind other rapid projings of land on the ocean.

An island suddenly came to light off the coast of Italy, remained for two months and so quickly disappeared. Bermuda nearly the Azores rented from public life before it had been fairly launched. The Gulf of Mexico has withdressed the advent and subsidence of small islands. These upheavals of the bed of the ocean suggest all sorts of mysteries connected with the unknown depths. A British vessel once had an uncanny experience in this connection.

The vessel was out twenty-three days from Manila to the Hawaiian islands. It was a silent, dead-black night. The lead showed a deep sea, suddenly those on board felt as though they had grounded.

Daybreak revealed a low and misty sky. The island lay as if buckled in the midst of an oily sea. Steamed dissolved in patches. Nothing but water, to use the words of the master, "trembled." The ship rolled, and in the distance rose a huge balloon-shaped mass of vapor, steam or smoke. There was not the slightest sound, but a long line of chafing water developed across the steamy calmness. Then the vapor settled down, and the ship's company could hear but not see the soothing and pouring water all about them. The captain ordered a bucketful to be drawn up. It was hot and smelled like the product of a gasworks. Whereupon the captain remarked that "a new continent was being made up," adding that he wished himself well out of the way.

The air grew more oppressive every moment. The vessel gave a groaning roll and around went round that the ship was aground. Over went the lead and came up covered with blue, oozy mud. The Britisher was unbelieving. In stages, the darkness was pall-like and the atmosphere suffocatingly close. Then the air was rent with reports dreadful to hear in that darkness. There were three of these blasts and all was still again.

When the light came, red and unnatural, a strange spectacle met the eyes of those on board. It was as if the bottom of the Pacific had been laid bare. They were helpless in a sea of thick mud. The sulphur fumes were choking and all had to take refuge below. Hour after hour they passed facing the probability of a death by suffocation. Suddenly they felt that they were afloat. Then the look of awe that held them had disappeared and after a time the Britisher made his way out of the gaseous mess.

When Honolulu was reached the crew deserted, for they held that there was no luck in a ship that had "seen the bottom of the sea."

Sulphur in New Zealand.

Sulphur deposits are found on White Island, in the Bay of Plenty, on the coast of North Island of New Zealand, about 10 miles from the mainland. This island, which covers about 600 acres, attains a height of 900 feet on one side and opens to the sea on the other. Its topography indicates an old crater, and the boiling lake on the island, which is one of the awe-inspiring sights of New Zealand, is a further evidence of volcanic action. After the New Zealand Sulphur company had spent $100,000 in preparation for mining sulphur in this locality, a volcanic disturbance wrecked the camp and killed ten men.

HISTORIC TREES PASS AWAY

Historians and Antiquarians Can Only Regret, While Entirely Unable to Prevent Their Loss.

It is too bad that nature will not allow trees, or some trees, at any rate, to live forever. In many places in this country, in the East particularly, the guides or the local historians once began their talking tales with "Under that tree." The famous colonial and revolutionary day trees are gone or are going. Some of the present-day events which are likely to have patriotic or other sentimental interest for posterity might be staged purposely under thrifty trees of benefited species.

The charter oak is gone, the old elm of Boston Common is gone and the elm at Cambridge under whose abode Washington took command of the continental army is none. The trees which Alexander Hamilton planted, one for each of the thirteen original states, have either died of old age or have succumbed to the encroachment of a civilization which takes little heed of sentiment or of natural beauty. And the treaty tree at the base of which the whites signed a compact (which unconscionably they broke) with the Wyoming Indians is dead. It was under this tree at Sleepy Hollow that Washington Irving wrote of Ichabod Crane and the Headless Horseman.

The old cottonwood at Eighteenth street and the lake in Chicago died many years ago. A part of it is preserved in the building of the Chicago Historical society, but a bit of dead timber is no nothing to the living tree. The sequoias of California come pretty close to living forever. They certainly live long enough to satisfy for mere mortals's sentiment concerning deeds done in their shadow. It is a pity that the ancient sycamore and middle-aged elms, cottonwoods and oaks were not all sequoias. Trees ought to be spared for their own sakes, but when they mark the scenes of stirring national events they ought to be tended with double care and solicitude.

LIKE THE RATTLE OF RAIN

How the Trilled "R" and the Short "A" Have Been Employed by Masters of the Language.

The trilled r and the short a after it make a sound which is often wonderfully suggestive of the thing described by the word which they initiate, or of the mood of the speaker using such a word.

You do "rule in words of very diverse meanings; in rapture and in rankor; in ranack and in ravage; in rally and rampageous; even in ruffle.

All these words seem to do their work with a certain unction, and they are capable of absorbing the unction of the speaker in a remarkable degree. When a man relates that he was very hungry, hear how he rasps on the first syllable of ravenous.

See how Burns almost compels sympathy with the wanderer of life against the "douce folk that live by rule" in the mere rattle of his r's and vigor of his a's:

Ye are sae grave, nae doubt ye're wise;
Ye're sae religious, nae doubt ye're
The hairst-rowan, rash-bum boys.
The rattlin' squad:
I see you gravest gaun yer gaes—
I'se ken the road.

Good humor, dislike, anger, scorn pass over these words in the act of speaking like rain or hail over a wheat field.

Venerate Hooded Cobra.

The hooded cobra, or Naga, still has his devotees in Bombay city, and from Kashmir to Nepal in the Himalayan region throughout the Deccan and southern India, and on the west coast in particular, this curious veneration of snake gods survives, says the Times of India. An interesting account of the worship is given in the latest annual report of the archeological department. The usual form of Naga worship is the vow taken by childless wives to install a snake stone if they are blessed with offspring. Closely allied with this idea is the worship of trees, and nipal and margosa trees planted together—"married," as the saying goes—come in for a share of the devotion paid to the snake stones set up in their shade. It is believed, says this account, that women will bear children if they walk round the married trees one hundred and eight times every day for forty-one days consecutively. Unfortunately no authentic case is alleged of the efficacy of this prescription, but the offerings brought in gratitude by women to the shrines may be taken as favorable evidence.

Chinese Minister Long a Diplomat.

Dr. Wellington Koo who has been appointed Chinese minister to this country, is secession to Kui Pu-shah, was until his appointment, minister to Mexico, Peru and Cuba. Doctor Koo was an undersecretary in the Chinese foreign office until recently, and as such was a member of a diplomatic commission which conducted the negotiations in Peking with the Japanese in 1915. He speaks English perfectly, and is a graduate of Columbia university, where he received his doctorate.

OLD TOWER FAST CRUMBLING

Landmark of San Juan, Porto Rico, Undermined by Relentless Action of the Waves.

The famous "haunted" watch tower of San Juan, Porto Rico, which for half a century has fairly reeked with mystery, seems to be doomed to disappear beneath the waves which have undermined its foundations. This moldy anchoy relic of vanished glory of Spain's empire in the West now hangs precariously over the boiling tide rip which has gnawed ceaselessly at its foundations for 300 years. Originally a part of the outer defense of the great fort San Cristobal, which was built by the Spanish conquistadores to guard San Juan from land attack, the "haunted" sentry box is regarded as one of the relics of the Porto Rican capital. The story of this crumbling bit of masonry runs that within the last 100 years six men have entered the tower and were apparently swallowed up. None of the sentry, it is declared, ever was seen again. The first three disappearances of which a record has been kept occurred within the first half of the nineteenth century and were separated by considerable intervals, the last one being in 1840. Ten years elapsed and the memory of the mysterious happenings was growing thin when three more men vanished in as many days. Since then the tower has been shunned as a pestilence, but its secret has remained undiscovered. All the cases were identical in that the missing one was a member of the garrison of San Cristobal detailed for night sentry duty on the sea wall.

Immune to Cold.

"Gouverneur Morris, the New York litterateur, said at a luncheon in Brooklyn:

"American society is the most exclusive in the world. Useless, quite useless, for a litterateur to try and force his way into it.

"I know a litterateur who, on the strength of a best seller, managed to get himself invited to a dinner at Mrs. Van Astorcroft's.

"Well, did Mrs. Van Astorcroft's cordiality stagger you?' I asked him the next day.

"'Oh, no, not at all,' he answered. 'You see, before I took up writing I worked in an ice-making plant.'"

Plate to Remove Tarnish.

There has just been put upon the market a metal plate that removes tarnish from silver in a few seconds. It is a thin sheet made of a combination of metals; this is put into a dish of hot water in which two tablespoonfuls of washing soda have been dissolved; the silver is immersed in such a way that at least one piece of it touches the plate, then is taken out, rinsed and wiped dry. The dish in which the operation is performed must be of glass, porcelain or enameled metal; if the latter, the enamel must not have been broken.

Through the Solid Rock.

Owen canyon, a deep chasm through the towering Wasatch mountains, overlooking the Great Salt lake, is one of nature's show places, cut in the solid rock by the river which runs through it, the sparkling water from prehistoric times, carrying quantities of sand and gravel which simply fled out the present wonderful canyon. Ogden river was flowing west along its present course before the lofty Wasatch mountains came into existence. The raising of the mountains went on slowly for ages, so slowly that the river kept its place by cutting down its ever-rising bed. In no other way can scientists rationally account for a river rising on one side of the range and flowing directly across it.

True Humility Seldom Found.

Humility does not consist in any particular way of speaking, nor in a proper seat is in the hidden man of the heart. Mean clothes and houses, humiliating and low words, are proclaiming, as it may be feared, much more pride than will be found under humble hearts.—Jennings.

SCOTT WADES IN.

A Washington dispatch says: "Just fifty days after being sworn in as a member of the house of representatives Congressman Frank D. Scott of Michigan, made his maiden speech. Scott was not so fast in making himself heard as "Cyclone" Davis, who found it impossible to keep his seat on the second day, but he beat the of Michigan's new members at that. He told members of the house he approached the task modestly and then proceeded to expatiate on road building from the time Appian Claudius built the road to Rome 300 years before Christ.

"Scott pitched into the veteran members who disagreed with him. He told Congress Maiden he reminded him of the woman who wished to buy eggs; "she knew little of their character, but remembered that good eggs when immersed in water either stayed on top or went to the bottom, but upon reaching the market she had forgotten which."

Scott to issue with Congressman Walsh about road building in Massachusetts. Walsh was opposing the issuing bonds in the sum of $2,000,000 and collecting additional taxes for roads if its system was complete."

IF LINCOLN COULD SPEAK

In these days of war's frenzy, when women are married and married and shot; when rulers sanction useless slaughter; when women and children in unprotected cities are blown to pieces when kings, field marshals and admirals boast of their prowess in devastating villages and destroying cathedrals, in turn, on this memorable anniversary, to a contemplation of the life and martyrdom of the great Lincoln; from the heartless brutality of ambitious princes, to the tender, sympathetic benevolent heart of the great emancipator.

Lincoln could not sign a death warrant; "Shooting will not do that boy any good." He presided quietly said, when a weeping mother pleed for the life of her son. "With malice toward none, with charity for all," was the sum of his wonderful career. When the sword was sheathed the olive branch was raised by the great apostles who to be lowered when the assassin brought low his beloved head.

The life of Lincoln is an inspiration to all true Americans. Down through the ages the memory of the great president will be a benediction.

EX-PRESIDENT TAFT ON THE GENERAL PRIMARY

"From the boss-ridden convention with deliberation you will get better candidates than you will from a primary," declared former President Taft in an address to the Southern New England Textile club. Mr. Taft also expressed the opinion that legislatures were sometimes fooled "by labor, which, he said, should be made to appreciate the spirit of the constitution.

"Of all the evils which are supposed to be a cure-all for all evils," Mr. Taft said, "the direct primary is so worked that it can only be used by the rich man who can build up his own machine or by the regular machine. Both of these things the primary is supposed to have abolished. The general primary is a fraud."

JUDGE MAYNE'S JUSTICE COURT CANDIDACY

REASONS WHY THIS SECTION OF THE STATE IS JUSTIFIED IN ASKING FOR HIS NOMINATION

Hon. Fred W. Mayne, judge of the 13th judicial circuit of Michigan, is a resident of Charlevoix, to which he came more than forty years ago, a "brush of a boy," from St. Lawrence county, New York, where he was born, to this home of the fisherman, the homesteader and the Indian.

He brought with him a level head, a good common school education, a fondness for hard work, and started in to carve out a career. He taught the village school, increasing his store of knowledge, meanwhile, by diligent study, which finally reached the borderland of the law. Then he entered the law department of the Michigan University, taking the four year course and graduated with honor.

Back to Charlevoix he came and hung out his shingle as a lawyer. Of course he did not pass all others of his profession in the county, because there were no others, save the late E. H. Green, but if there was ever in the history of the county, a leader of the bar it was Fred W. Mayne. He was twice elected prosecuting attorney and twice judge of probate, and now for sixteen years he has been judge of the circuit, and is a candidate for judge of the Supreme Court, formally indorsed by the bar of the circuit.

As a judge he has had a state-wide experience, successful to a degree that has won for him the respect of the bar of other circuits. His temperament is eminently judicial, and the supreme court, round of appeals from lower courts is strikingly favorable to Judge Mayne.

There are many arguments justifying the candidacy of Judge Mayne. Two justices of the supreme court reside in the upper peninsula, all the other elective state officers reside in the southern half of the lower peninsula. The northern half of the lower peninsula, or one-third of the state, does not furnish a single elective state officer. Justice Moliver was our sole representative on the supreme bench, and the last elective republican state officer in the lower peninsula north of Grand Rapids, and Judge Mayne's friends are now merely claiming the right to name a candidate who will fill his unexpired term. The supreme court is a representative body, and best serves its purpose when the entire state is represented in its membership. The people have indicated in our court of last resort when they feel that they are represented.

Believing that the public could be protected and justice done to the individual Judge Mayne helped secure the passage of the probation law and has made use of such law freely. Under a system especially adapted to the wants of this circuit, upwards of 200, first offenders and others, have been admitted to probation under officers especially appointed by the court. In nearly every instance the party injured has approved of the probation of the offender. Under this system upwards of 150 have been probated with perfect results, 25 or so have violated the terms of their parole by failure to report regularly or other minor violations; while it has been necessary to sentence to prison only temporarily for the sake of being once paroled. His personal attention is given to each individual case. The system is a humanizer for the life and martyrdom of the great Lincoln; from the heartless brutality of ambitious princes, to the tender, sympathetic benevolent heart of the great emancipator.

Lincoln could not sign a death warrant; "Shooting will not do that boy any good." He presided quietly said, when a weeping mother pleed for the life of her son. "With malice toward none, with charity for all," was the sum of his wonderful career. When the sword was sheathed the olive branch was raised by the great apostles who to be lowered when the assassin brought low his beloved head.

The life of Lincoln is an inspiration to all true Americans. Down through the ages the memory of the great president will be a benediction.

D. E. HEINEMAN FOR LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR

A movement is well under way that already has developed strong evidence of public approval, to place the name of Hon. David E. Heineman on the republican state ticket for lieutenant governor.

Two years ago this paper did what it could to promote the cause of Mr. Heineman, recognizing in him every essential strength in personal character and record of public service. No man in Michigan public life can point to a cleaner or more useful career as a legislator than David E. Heineman.

The "David E. Heineman Committee of 1000" headed by former governor Rich, and composed of leading republicans throughout the state, is sowing the seed that cannot fail to yield an abundant harvest.

Personally Mr. Heineman is one of the most magnetic men we have ever known. His personality wins your friendship from the first moment of your intercourse with him. His cordiality is sincerity itself—nothing in his greeting that suggests anything but the thoroughbred gentleman.

CHASE OSBORN WITHDRAWS

FAVORITE SON MANTLE SHIFTED TO THE SHOULDERS OF SENATOR WM. ALDEN SMITH

In the matter of "who is who" for favorite sonship in Michigan in the chase for the republican presidential nomination, honors were even between former Governor Osborn and Senator William Alden Smith.

Following a little tilt between the two growing out of an interview which the Senator gave a New York reporter in which it was made to appear that the Senator was after the Michigan delegation for possible use on the side, Mr. Osborn shied his hat into the ring for himself alone.

But the former governor declared that if the senator wanted the delegation for himself he could have his support, but that he would stay in as a candidate rather than see the vote of Michigan in the convention used for barter.

The latest is that the matter has been fixed up, and that Mr. Osborn will support the Senator. But this does not signify that Osborn is eliminated. Garfield went into the Chicago convention a supporter of John Sherman, and his support of that eminent statesman did not lag up to the last minute. Then came the deluge that swept Garfield into the presidency.

History may repeat itself.

MISS GAY ZENOLA MAC LAREN WILL APPEAR SATURDAY FEBRUARY 19

Miss Gay Zenola MacLaren is not a stranger in Charlevoix, for she has already won many of the people of our town, by her impersonation of "Peg O' My Heart" in the Chautauqua program.

Miss MacLaren is in a class by herself. In no way can she be compared with the ordinary interpretive reader. She keeps twenty characters before you at once. She acts with fire and intensity and authority. Her imitation is perfect.

We know that those who have heard her will be there. We want every one to hear her. It is a chance to see one of the world's artists.

This number is free to all holders of season tickets. Single admission fifty cents. Reserve seat sale at the Central Drug Store, Thursday, at 7 p. m.

THE MEXICAN PUZZLE

By the mouth of that usually speechless gentleman, Senator Stone of Missouri, the President has caused it to be known that he does not want to intervene in Mexico for fear that such action would provoke a revolution which would result in Carranza's overthrow. Carranza, he is represented, was recognized by Wilson on the ground that he was the strongest of the contending rivals in Mexico and that he was most likely to be able to re-establish order in that unhappy distracted country. It now appears that Carranza is not only unable to maintain order and to protect foreign residents in Mexico but that his boldest upon authority is so slender that any vehicle menace against the marauding murderers whom he cannot control will cause a fatal revolt against the nomadic Carranza government.

In choosing Carranza as the recipient of his latest and most generous favor to the warring Mexican chieftains whom he has emeraced seemingly in rotation, Mr. Wilson has again demonstrated his exceptional inability to judge men; and as a result he finds himself loaded with the responsibility for Carranza—whom he cannot control and whom he apparently does not care to assist.

Here, too, the President displays once more a prominent defect—his reluctance or inability to face a disagreeable situation. Two courses are open to him, either of which would bring measurable relief to the intolerable conditions in Mexico. He can send our forces into the country for the protection of our people, a course which he has formally told Congress that he believes himself empowered to follow without legislative sanction. Or he could send our forces into Mexico to bolster up the Carranza government. In exactly the same way that our forces are now in Nicaragua maintaining in office a government which would not last over eight weeks if not for the American marines who surround it.

That nervousness, fretting and restlessness is no doubt caused by worms or constipation. Instead of whipping, give your child a Treatment of Kickapoo Worm Killer. Back Fire at the Instructor.

The English assignment was, "Write a short theme, using ten words which you have never used before." This is what a freshman accomplished: "One of the idiosyncrasies of this typographical expedition is that the unsalt ottoes teamster is compelled to nullify and transmogrify into useful forms by manipulation, in fact, sometimes phosphorus with the rife destrus of his quadrupeds." Curtain.

Once a poor actor was praying for bread. He was doing at home, and this fact contributed in making his speech and gestures eloquent. But his argument seemed to be of no avail. At last he neared the end of his entreaties. He redoubled his efforts. "O Lord," he said, "I pray you by all the powers that be to give me bread!" and just then the curtain let down a roll.—Cornell Widow.

And yet he seemed to make no secret of it; and yet—it did explain his whole conduct since landing, as Tuve had said.

She could only shut her eyes to what must have happened, even as Canalet himself had shut his all this wonderful week, that she had forgotten all day in her ingratitude, but would never, in all her days, forget again!

"There won't be another case," she heard herself saying, while her thoughts ran ahead of herself like sheep. "It'll never come out—I know it will."

"Why shouldn't it?" he asked so sharply that she had to account for the words, to herself as well as to him.

"Nobody knows except Mr. Tuve and he means to keep it to himself."

"Why should he?"

"I don't know. He'll tell you himself."

"Are you sure you don't know? What can he have to tell me? Why should he screen my illness?"

His eyes and voice were furious with suspicion, but still the voice was lowered.

"He's a jolly good sort, you know," said Stratton, as if this whole affair was the most ordinary one in the world. Perhaps could not have driven the sense of her remark more forcibly home to Canalet.

"Oh, he is, is he?"

"I've always found him so—"

"As have I, for that! I've seen of him. And I don't blame him for getting on my tracks, mind you; he's a jolly good sort, as you say. But he did rile me—was he in a way? That's why I meant to have the words—" He stopped and looked away.

"I know. And anything can unlike that," she only said; but her voice swelled with thankswiving. And Clara Scroton, measured, the hot small clod dried out of his eyes, but left them gloomily persistent.

"Still, I can't understand it. I don't believe it, either!" I'm in his hands. What have I done to be saved from Tuve? He's probably scouring Lon-don for me, and he isn't watching the window at this minute!"

He went to the curtains as he spoke. Simultaneously Stratton sprang up to entreat him to fly while he could. That had been her first object in coming to him as she had done, and yet, even with him, she had left it to the last. And now it was too late; he was at the window, chuckling significantly to himself for the hall servant, and he was leaning out.

"Tuve, you fine, down there! Come up and show yourself! I want to see you."

He turned in time to dart in front of the folding doors as Islanette reached them, pale and slender. The flush of impulsive bravado fled from his face at the sight of them.

"You can't do it there. What's the matter?" he whispered. "Who should you be afraid of Hilton Tuve?"

How could she tell him? Before she had found a word, the handles down opened and Hilton Tuve was in the room, looking at her.

"Keep your voice down," said Canalet anxiously. "Sit down! It's all over with me but the shouting, we needn't start the shouting here!"

He clutched excitedly at the best, and now Tuve stood looking at him.

"I've heard all you've done," continued Canalet. "I don't blame you a bit. If I had been the other way about, I might have given your rear run for your money. I've heard what you've found out about my mysterious movements, and you're absolutely right as far as you go. You don't know way I took the train at Naples, and travelled across Europe without a hand-bag. It wasn't quite the pop-gun job you may think. But, if it makes you any happier, I may as well tell you that I was at Uplands that night, and I did get out through the foundations!"

The insane impetuosity of the man was his master now. He was a living pile of impulses that had burst into a blaze.

"I always guessed you might be crazy, and I now know it," said Hilton Tuve. "Still, I judge you're not so crazy as to deny that while you were in that house you struck down Henry Craven and left him for dead?"

"Canalet stood like red-hot stone.

"Miss Islandee," said Tuve, turning to her rather sayly, "I guess I can't do what I said just yet. I haven't breathed a word, not yet, and perhaps I never will, if you'd come away with me now—back to your home—and never see Henry Craven's murderer again!"

"And who may he be?" cried a voice that brought all three face above.

The folding-doors had opened, and a fourth figure was standing between the two rooms.

CHAPTER XIV.

The Person Unknown.

The intruder was a sharp, elderly man, of so cadaverous an aspect that, but, face alone cried for his death-bed; and his gaunt frame was in a state as it swayed upon the threshold in dressing-gown and bedroom slippers that Tuve instantly recognized as belonging to Canalet. The man had a shock of almost white hair, and a lean gray beard clipped roughly to a point. An unwholesome pallor marked the fallen features; and the enveloped eyes burned low in their sockets, as they dealt with Blanche but fastened on Hilton Tuve.

"What do you know about Henry Craven's murderer?" he demanded in a voice between a croak and a cough.

"Have they run in some other poor devil, or were you talking about him? If so, I'll start a libel action, and call Canalet and that lady as witnesses."

"Who's Canalet? Who's Blanche? Who was only liberated this evening after being detained a week on a charge that ought never to have been brought, as I've told you on all along. Scotland thanked him with a bitter laugh. "I've brought him here," concluded Canalet, "because I don't think he's fit enough to be about alone."

"Nor of him, isn't he?" said Scroton bitterly. "I'm so fit that they wanted to keep me somewhere else longer than they'd say right; that may be why they lost no time in getting hold of again. Now, considerate, kindly country! Ten years isn't long enough to have you sent a decent guest. Won't you come back for another week, and see if we can't arrange for a nice little sudden death and burial for you?" But they couldn't do you ever, when I was there."

He subsided into the best chair in the room, which Blanche had wheeled up behind him; a remembrance of her looked round, thanked her curtly, and lay back with closed eyes until and stopped and looked away.

"I know. And anything can unlike that," she only said; but her voice swelled with thankswiving. And Clara Scroton, measured, the hot small clod dried out of his eyes, but left them gloomily persistent.

WONDERS OF GRAND CANYON

No Other Spot on Earth Is Believed to Possess the Same Interesting Features.

Many people still living can remember a thrill of wonder and admiration that ran through the world in reading of the daring exploit of Major Powell in 1869, in navigating the rapids of the Grand Canyon of Arizona. In a small boat. It was his account of his trip more than anything else up to that time that called the attention of the world to the magnificence of this wonderful gorge and to the brilliancy of the coloring on its rocks.

The United States has recently published a bulletin, No. 149, a report on the geology of a portion of the Grand Canyon by L. F. Noble. This gorge offers an opportunity of studying the history of the formation of our globe presented in no other place now known. On the top are deposits of the Carboniferous period, and below this strata, some of them of immense thickness, ranging down to the Cambrian period at the base. In the Grand Canyon we come to the basic rocks of the earth, the granite and gneiss. This panorama is described as probably the most complete geological map of any of the world revealed to the eyes of man.

What is the true test of character? It is in its progressive development in the hourly turmoil, in the action and reaction of daily life.—Lowell.

SKUNK KNOWS NO FEAR

LITTLE ANIMAL IS WELL ABLE TO PROTECT ITSELF.

Picks No Quarrels, but Decidedly Never Goes Out of Its Way to Avoid Them—Formidable Weapon of Defense.

The skunk is not only one of the handsomest of American varmints, he is also the boldest. He is the Swashbuckler the Cyrano, the insouciant, dashing cavalier adventurer. Confident in his powers of offense and defense he goes carelessly about his way, seeking only to be let alone. He is not looking for trouble, neither is he avoiding it.

Encounter him about sundown on a country road and he will let you alone. If you do not crowd him. Perhaps he will hop along in your pathway, keeping just far enough ahead for your common convenience. If you are acquainted with his little peculiarities you will permit him to set the pace. If you are not acquainted with them—if, perhaps, you think he is a pretty, black-and-white, kittenish little thing, and if, thinking you can pick up and try to make a capture, disillusionment will soon be your portion. For when you are just the right distance he will give his white-tipped tail a quick flirt in your general direction.

You will then parle. You will suddenly have lost all invitation to advance. Probably you will be nauseated, possibly half-choked and half-blinded. Like a Arabs "Tomes the necessary to purify Lady Macbeth's little hand wouldn't purify one apparel in a year. You are likely to feel a long-lasting bile from your fellow man for, if you are through a lot, you know—you ought to have stopped in bed—do you really want this on top of all?

Perhaps you will. Perhaps you will not. Perhaps you will have to pay the butter, or interm the sentence that the does not really keep her boarders long—than any other respected gentlewoman in that part of town, but in great keeps them so much thinner that they look longer, you may win a few pale smiles from your fellow guests, but the mistress of the man slon will soak you two dollars more per week for your wit.—Kansas City Star.

Not to Be Costly.

Wife—Oh, Tom, I dreamed last night that you bought me a new full automobile!

Hub—Good heavens! You'll ruin me with your extravagant dreams.

"I suppose it was."

Scruton ruminated a little, broke into his otherwise laugh and checked it instantly of his own accord. "This is really interesting," he crooked. "You go to London—at what time was it?"

"Nominally three-twenty-five; but the train ran thirteen minutes late," said Hilton Tuve.

"And you're on the river by what time?" Scruton asked Canalet.

"I walked over Hammerford bridge, took the first train to Surbiton, got a boat there, and just dropped down with the stream. I don't suppose the whole thing took me very much more than an hour."

"Aren't you forgetting something?" said Tuve.

"Yes, I was. It was I who telephoned to the house and found that Craven was out motoring; so there was no hurry."

"Yet you weren't going to see Henry Craven?" murmured Tuve.

Canalet did not answer. His last words had come in a characteristic hurry; now he had his mouth shut tight, and his eyes were fast to Scruton. He might have been in the witness-box already, a doomed wretch cynically supposed to be giving evidence on his own behalf, but actually only baring his neck by inches to the axe, under the joint persuasion of judge and counsel. But he had one friend by him still, one who had edged a little nearer in the pause.

"But you did see the man you went to see?" said Stratton.

Canalet paused. "I don't know. Eventually somebody brained past me in the dark," said Scruton. "Did I catch sweat to him even now?"

"Tell us about it."

"Do you mean that, Scruton? Do you insist on bearing all that happened? I'm not asking Tuve; he can do as he likes. But you, Scruton—you've been through a lot, you know—you ought to have stopped in bed—do you really want this on top of all?"

"OLD SOLDIER OF FORTUNE"

TWENTY YEARS OF THRILLING ADVENTURE. DO YOU THINK YOU COULD SURVIVE IT?

Shortly after the Civil War broke out, a boy of eleven years joined a regiment of volunteer cavalry at Lansing. After participating in nearly thirty engagements at the front, this youngster was captured by Confederate troops. He spent many months at Andersonville, at Libby and at Belle Island military prisons. He endured a cold winter without even a pair of trousers, and finally was exchanged.

After the war he became an Indian fighter, then a smuggler of goods into Mexico, then a Central American filibuster crewman. For a time he owned a dig-silver mine. Sinking along the waterfront at San Francisco, he was shanghaied and taken around Cape Horn to Ireland on a schooner—yes, twenty years of astounding adventure.

In this issue of the SENTINEL we are printing the man's own story. He is William F. Johnston, resident of the Soldier's Home at Grand Rapids, and in other circumstances he might be a great novelist or dramatist. Be sure to read "An Old Soldier of Fortune."

Written for the SENTINEL

Hooray! Hooray! hooray!
"Hooray" of a cheer!
Three grands let the honored names
Where'er they are, of fame!

From redcrosses of their loyal hearts
May Christmas joy and peace be sent,
Who planted free on freedom's lenten
The banner of the free.

Hymns for us the patriots sing
Our holiday sleep must leave!
Before the harvest of freedom's
We bless our public fane!

Oh! that the sweet spirits might wave,
The active instrument of power
Or air here to the humble dead,
In this immortal hour!

With wreaths immortal would we crown
We hearts our children—sons
But we are valiant for the right
"Tis sacrificial offering!

With deeds and days on we renew
Our royal, martyred dead,
Who gave their lives, their all for us
Our country, home and God.

During no winter within our memory has Bridge street been in as fine shape for traffic as now. This is due to the good work of street commissioner Lusk with the road scraper. The accumulation of snow next the sidewalks has been scraped to the middle of the street with the result that the gutters are in shape to provide for the deluge that comes with the spring breakup, and the contour of the roadway conforms to the crown of the pavement. We consider the expense as money well spent.

The SENTINEL last week printed 37 columns of reading matter—more than can be shown up by any other paper in the county. Turn over its pages and judge for yourself. We make this statement without fear of successful contradiction. The SENTINEL, in every essential of a first class country journal, leads them all north of Traverse City. Furthermore, as a result of this excellency, it costs from a third to a half more to print the SENTINEL than it does any other paper in the territory mentioned. Investigate.

CHARTER REVISION IN PETOSKEY VOTED

Commission Form of Government Will Be Adopted Citizens Decide

Petoskey Monday in a special election voted for a revised charter which provides the commission form of government, city manager and appointive officers instead of elective, and other new features. The vote was: Yes, 673; no, 337. In the special election to bond the city for $125,000 for a new pump the McManus power dam the proposition lost by 50 votes needed for a two thirds majority. Politicians opposed the adoption of the charter, but the press and the people of it held mass meetings in the wards, schools opera house, and ministers talked for it. It eliminates party politics and reduces the per cent which can be raised for city taxes.

This gives Charlevoix food for thought.

Political Notice

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for City Treasurer in the forthcoming city primaries, and pledge myself, if elected, to the faithful performance of the duties of that office.

FLIRTING INVITED BY FUR TORPED SHOES

Oklahoma Woman Demands Ordinance Stopping It.

Oklahoma City, Okla.—Mayor Overholser closed all the exhibition houses in this city at the request of a delegation of women out of business. Now he is receiving telegrams and letters from municipal reformers.

"Why don't you do something about this thing on all the times?" asked a prominent woman who called on the mayor's office. The mayor said he did not know what she meant.

"Well, there has been a fur torped in the window. It is going on all the time. I see it when I am down town, and you could, too, if you looked."

"Why is that a bad thing?" asked the mayor.

"Men and women, boys and girls," replied the visitor, "and the girls are just as bad as the men, stand in front of the fur torped in the window and look at it. Why, I saw two girls on the street right now who ought to be arrested."

"In what way?" asked the mayor.

"Why, they were walking arm in arm and they were so absorbed in the fur torped that they bumped into a fat woman. 'Oh, I beg your pardon,' they said, and they did not know they're disturbed, don't you?"

Mayor Overholser said there was no ordinance regulating women's dress to that extent.

"Then pass an ordinance," insisted the visitor. "Put a heavy fine on the girls who wear fur topped shoes and short dresses or else on the men who look at them."

The mayor sighed wearily.

"If you don't," the woman continued, "this town will go to the devil. I'm going there now, with its fur top shoes and flirting."

OLD CONVICT RETURNS.

After Pardon He Says Outside World Has Treated Him Badly.

Davenport, Ia.—Jim Blackburn, seventy-four years old, pardoned six months ago after serving twenty-eight years in Fort Madison penitentiary for a murder charge, has asked the local police to return him to the penitentiary.

"I'm lost. I don't know where to go," he told the police. "I want to return to prison. I spent all of my life that was worth while there. Warden Sanders was good to me, and so had most of the guards. I want to go back to the only friend I have."

The local police will probably ask the state board of pardons to revoke Blackburn's parole and return him to prison for the remainder of his time.

"ELECTRIC HOBO" NOW.

Carries With Him a Potent Stove and Has Third Rail Connection.

Maysville, Ont.—Wanderers heretofore known to adopt various means of obtaining a livelihood and are known by various types, but a new variety has just been discovered in this vicinity.

He is known as the "electric hobo." He is never without a hot meal when he can beg the ingredients with which to cook, and he doesn't have to carry a match with him or worry about kindling fires.

The Northern Electric company's third rail is his stove, and from the scorch of his boot, for he carries with him a pulpit stove. It consists of a feeble iron plate, intertwined with copper wire. When he gets hungry he stoops to conquer and makes a connection on the third rail, places the food on the stove and, when ready, eats to his heart's content. Jackrabbits, venison hens, rather than duplicate, are cooked on the electric grill.

"I think a lot of the county ranger, says he saw the "electric hobo" at work cooking his breakfast the other morning. He had connected up with a red can of water on the stove, took a piece from your fence post, a cake of soap from another and a piece of mitten on of his coal lining and shaved.

TREE DEFENDS HOUSE.

Six Times It Has Kept Wild Autos From Entering Home.

Cleveland, O.—For the fourth time in five years a large tree in Depew Public Park, at the corner of Broadway and Clarence streets, has saved the Kocarnik home from the flying automobile.

The latest mishap while Mrs. Hoffmeyer was out calling with Mrs. Hoffmeyer in an automobile he could not get the machine's steering gear to work and crashed through the Kocarnik front and into the tree.

The Hoffmeyers were uninjured save for the indignity of the Ford coming to a dead stop in front of the tree, which proved it probably will have to be cut down.

"If the tree comes down," Mr. Kocarnik said, "I'm going to have an concrete pier built to take its place. This is the second time this year that the stalwart tree has saved my home."

SUBSTITUTE FOR MEAT

PEOPLE OF UNITED STATES TURN TO VARIOUS WHEAT PRODUCTS.

Are Beginning to Realize the Value of Such Foods as Macaroni, Etc., Which Make for Health and Financial Saving.

As far back as history records, wheat has been the main food element of the human race, and today, as in the time of King Pharoah, the products made from this grain figure largely in the sustaining of life the world over.

In the United States, we have confined the use of wheat large to making flour for breadstuffs, and until recent years have overlooked the use of it in making one of the most healthful, savory and nourishing of foods that could grace our tables, viz: macaroni, spaghetti, vermicelli, noodles and kindred products.

For centries Europeans on the shores of the Mediterranean sea have used macaroni and spaghetti as their principal article of diet, and those people are today the hardiest races in the world. The tardiness of Americans in taking up this food product has been largely due to the surplus production of maize, but for the past few years this surplus has actually changed to a shortage, caused by the passing of the large ranches and cheap grazing lands and meats have been unwonted higher and higher in the scale of prices until meat dinners are fast becoming a luxury. This condition will never be changed—the day of cheap meats in the United States, as in Europe, is forever banished, so we must find a substitute that is equally as nutritious and nutritious an article of diet.

Macaroni or spaghetti can be cooked in such a variety of ways that the heartiest or most fastidious palate can be pleased—with cheese, with tomatoes, oysters, cheap cuts of meat, mushrooms, and almost any one of the most toothsome dishes can be prepared and a perfectly balanced meal served at a cost of one dish alone, and that, too, at a financial saving to the thrifty housewife—but mixing her hash with satisfaction.

The reason for the growing popularity of macaroni products in this country is the fact that large and spotlessly clean American factories have been built during the past few years for the manufacture of the Prince quality or macaroni and spaghetti the world has yet produced. Until recently the bulk of Prince macaroni products came made, grown to greater perfection in the middle Western states than in any other place on the globe, even surpassing the product of Italy, from which country it was imported by the United States department of agriculture several years ago. The Prince macaroni used was imported by the United States department of agriculture several years ago. The Durum wheat, which is richer in gluten than any other variety, is ground into what is technically termed by millers "Semolina," a fairly coarse flour from which the bran and germ of the wheat, from which macaroni products are made, grows to greater perfection in the middle Western states than in any other place on the globe, even surpassing the product of Italy, from which country it

THE LITTLE BUGLER AS HE SMOKED IN '61

THE LITTLE BUGLER IN A SOLDIERS' HOME TODAY

William F. Johnston went to war at the age of eleven years and became a plains fighter afterward. His reflections, here set down, point a moral and adorn a tale

[The "human document" is published as one of the most remarkable letters we ever read. It was written by Mr. Johnston originally, but he, an Iowa Soldiers' Home, to his friend, an editor in Nebraska.]

MY DEAR Brother George:

Your letter of November 27 is at hand, and it warms my old heart to think my little brother is interested in anything pertaining to my rather uneventful past. Of all things I despise, I'm an egotist. However, as you wish to know something about your brother Billy's early experience, I don't see how I can help telling.

I was born June 15, 1850, in Detroit, Mich., and when the Civil war broke out in 1861, I was going to school, with no thought of anything but a good time and mischief. In July, 1861, when one month past eleven years of age, I offered my services to the Ninth Michigan Infantry, Company "H." Captain Adams is captained, which was quartered at Fort Wayne. Of course, I ran away from school to enlist, and mother was almost crazy before they found out where I was. They kept me some two weeks at the fort as a drummer boy. I was so short my drum would not clear the ground when marching, and I had got into so much mischief in that time that a sergeant took me to the post gate, took me over the knee and spanked me with a leather belt; also told me to beat it for home and mother, which I did. I have always thought my father told them what to do with me.

Well father whipped me and mother cried over me, and as I had not peppered with the rebels at the fort, I was made to sleep in the barn for a week, until drawn up. But the fife and drum were too much for me, and in July, when twelve years and a month old, 1862, I again ran away from home and joined in the Twenty-fourth Michigan Infantry, which was quartered on the old fair grounds in Detroit. I beat the drum and played the devil for ten days, when I was again taken to the camp, but never went home to stay. With the invitation went some kicks and cuffs I have not forgotten yet.

But the boys were not to blame for the rough treatment they gave me as my father had quietly put them up to bringing it back, as they told it to soldiers.

My brothers and sisters thought I was a hero, father thought I was a devil, but mother thought I was just her own little lollipop just the same. But go to school I would not. There was too much attraction on the street, so in October, 1862, my mother packed a little trunk of clothing, and then started me for the Lansing Agricultural college. Well things began to happen there. I arrived at the school the afternoon of the Saturday before, and was to have been examined and put into my classes Monday morning. I might say this was the extent of my college education, and the last of my schooling.

Sunday morning Mr. Tibbits, who kept the leading house for the school, and his wife, left for the day to make a visit. Milton Ward of Detroit, who was at the school at the time, and myself took him comfortably letting been accustomed in Detroit. Sunday morning, Milton and I hooked away, and went up to Lansing, as I remember it, a couple of miles away. Milt always was my pal and was four or five years older than I. He got a big box of candy and a bottle of wine. We went out to the school for a lark. After dinner Milt and I said something and three or four little girls who were visiting boys at the school, got together in a

He down to sleep, stretched in long lines of any number of men, all curled up upon fashion, as close together as possible.

I lay down on the end of the line one cold night when some a poor fellow came and snuggled up to me. Along in the early morning when he should have turned to warm my back, he did not move I got up on my elbow and pulled his nose. He was dead. It was the most frightful experience I ever had.

Our dead were usually relieved of any good clothing they may have had on to be used by those who were almost naked. I had still on what was left of a shirt and pair of drawers that I had worn for almost a year. Can you realize or imagine how little of either were left? I went down to the dead line one morning and saw a body on which was a fine shirt of blue cashmere cloth. I went to the gate and asked the officer of the Confederate guard, an old man, if I might remove the shirt from the body to wear myself.

"My poor boy," he said, and gave permission, with tears running down his wrinkled cheeks, to take the shirt.

A red-whiskered, spindle-shanked, low-down fellow from Wisconsin that I was chumming with, and whom I had saved from a severe grip for him to eat, stole that shirt from me. I lost a silver watch I had carried with me from my home and for three hundred thousand dollars, but it did not hurt so badly as the loss of that shirt.

Shortly after this, there was a parole of sick and disabled men agreed on by the governments. I got out and walked about four miles to Franklin, Tennessee, the raggedest-looking kid that ever left city. Was few troops. They could not spare transport just stood and cried when they saw our boys. This was the nineteenth of November, 1864, and I reached home on the twenty-second and clothing money for the time I had been prisoner of war, which was about 18 months, was thirty days. I started for Detroit, I can't tell you all that happened until I got home. I got home broke after a week or ten days on the road.

Never mind the fatted calf, mother had it cooked, and I was made to feel as if we were lost for I had been reported dead long ago, and they had prepared a memorial service for me, setting what a good little boy I had been. I came home and spoiled it all. After a few days at home I went to Hamtramck camp at Harper's Ferry and from the camp was returned to my regiment, then in Washington, waiting to take part in the grand review, after which we were sent to Fort Leavenworth. I was discharged, and the regiment sent out on the plains after Indians.

I went to Denver in the fall of 1865 with a mule train, before there was a railroad in the mountains. I returned to Topeka, Kan., with bull trains outfitted in the regular army, went to California by way of the isthmus, guarded surveyors in Arizona from the Indians, and doubtless killed some of them. In 1869 I joined Baker cavalry I made a trip into Mexico with a load of phosphorus, and that night I was arrested as a spy in Guaymas and was shipwrecked on my trip from Guaymas to Mazatlan. Two out of seven were saved after floating around for thirty hours. I was stranded in San Francisco and taken aboard Cape Horn for Dublin, which was the most adventurous five months of my life. I came back to my home in Detroit in 1874 and settled down to be decent.

I am now a member of the Michigan Soldiers' home. Uncle Sam is trying his best to make me comfortable in my declining years. But nothing he can do will compensate for the years, some the ten years worse than lost from my twelfth to twenty-second, that I might have had, but that was rough in that time I have not learned since and it is not in the books.

Books in Cases.

To pack books in small packing cases, nail a strip of clapboards on and with the edges next to the sides of the cases and the backs of the bindings pointed toward the inward, and place them with crumpled newspapers to keep the pressure on the round part of the books, which may otherwise be injured by the pressure. Line the case and wrapping paper. Lay a thickness of wrapping paper over the top and fasten on the cover with screws to prevent damage.

ROMANTIC STORY OF WHEAT

World Being Fed on Grain Grown on Land That Was Comparatively Recently a Waste.

A direct result of the present war, more pleasant to contemplate than the stories of carnage, is the stimulus it has given to the chief industry of the huge central basin of North America. Winnipeg is the geographical center of the continent and from it in every direction in Canada and far down into the United States spread the rolling miles of wheat is undoubtedly the greatest wheat region in the world.

The figures presented by the American and Canadian governments for the year just closed tell a romantic story in the area of the Canadian Northwest and of the American-border states. Conquest bounds of the hitherto great wheat known to the markets was broken and yet within the memory of men not yet old every acre of it was given over to the Indian and the buffalo.

Long after our Civil war a British traveler wrote an exceedingly interesting book called "The Great Lone Land," describing his struggles with blizzards and starvation in what is now the wheat empire. He did not think much of it as a country for settlers; but time has quickly shown how much he was mistaken. Just as it showed in a few years de Tocqueville's great error when he predicted that our western advance would break against the Rocky mountains, or Macaulay's miscalculation when he asserted that we would cease to grow much at not for the upbuilding influence and character of prairie life.

There are many impressive chapters in the story of the conquest. Up there is no more picturesque than the one which is being made in our day by a grain of wheat.

French Press Troubles.

The English and the German languages have caused much trouble as papers quite as much trouble as papers in the district the water fool in French and German navigation. Recently a Parisian paper revealed at some length the wonderful activity of "General Headquarters," a British commander in Mesopotamia. Some days before another general, unknown, an Australian this time, made his appearance in the twenty-third Lancers regiment, in the publication in a number of Swiss French papers. This was "General Kuk," who was named as commander of the flying wing of the army operating against the Montenegrins, composed of the Parisian journals military critics are discussed General Kuk's and the composition of his forces. Somewhat later a note appeared in the Swiss papers acknowledging that an error had been made at Geneva in transmission and that the name is Kuks, of three words, had been mistaken for the name of a general, the abbreviation being intended for the German terms, "Kaiserlich und konigliich" (imperial and royal).

Problem of Pumpernickel.

Is pumpernickel bread or cake? This question is agitating legal and commercial circles in Frankfort-on-the-Main. If this delicacy is a bread, its sale is limited under the card system, whereas if it is cake it may be sold at will.

The police of Frankfort had been trying to stop the sale of pumpernickel without the necessary "bread card," but when a case was taken to court the decision was to the effect that it was a delicacy and could be sold accordingly, but this didn't settle the matter, as the authorities appealed to the case and declared they would keep on trying to enforce the bread card.

The Frankfurter Zeitung of November 22 says an extension is made in the case of pumpernickel made from flour sold at the government distribution stations especially for that purpose.

Children Interest Kluge.

The king of Spain has become interested in juvenile courts and has instructed the minister of justice to "rise up and submit to parliament a bill creating children's courts in various parts of Spain. The plan is to have a presiding judge, who will have jurisdiction over children under 16 years old. It will have authority in cases of vagrancy and delinquency, and where the parents are shown to be irresponsible they may be deprived of their offspring.

The courts, according to the king's suggestion, are to be modeled on similar institutions in England.

Visits to London, and before the war to Vienna and St. Petersburg, have taken at least once a year, the king frequently visiting the various courts and took an especial interest in the juvenile one.

THE BUILDING OF A COUNTRY

The Natural Pride of Those Who Take Part in It.

To those who have built railroads through and across the prairies of Western Canada, connecting that great empire of grain and cattle, horses and sheep with the world's markets in the east, must be awarded the privilege of looking upon their work, and its results with pardonable pride. If they reminisce, and tell of the hardships and the privations, why shouldn't they? The broad prairies on which the buffalo roamed and fed, are now alive with cities, towns and villages. Farms—large and small—on which ploughing has replaced the buffalo of laborious work off the farm, and making farm life one of the most pleasant and prosperous of occupations—are being cultivated by men of the highest stamp of manhood. Many of these have inherited from their forebears the physical strength and the high type of manliness that was theirs in the days when they hewed their homes out of the virgin forest, and made them what may be seen today, beautiful farms in the east. On the whole the western prairies breed a high type of manhood, were free from the fevers and diseases which would be his were it not for the upbuilding influence and character of prairie life.

When the builder of the western Canada reflects upon the results of his work, why shouldn't his chest expand? It was probably some of the feeling of pride that took possession of Sir Donald Mann, vice president of the Canadian Northern Railway, the other day in Winnipeg, when he said: "I am in the habit of giving advice, but I have no hesitation of advising the young men of Canada—every young man, to get out and get a piece of western Canada's land that now can be had for the asking, and be your own masters."

"It was 24 years ago when I first came to Winnipeg," he said. "At that time there were less than 10,000 people in all Canada west of Winnipeg, and the only bit of railway in operation was between St. Boniface and Emerson—about sixty miles. Today there are nearly 30,000 miles of railway in actual operation and the population is over two and a quarter million. A wonderful achievement in such a short period, you will agree, when you have contemplated it a moment."

"At that time all the flour, meat and many other supplies for our contracts were brought from the States. Now consider what the west is doing today. You have a grain production exceeding a billion bushels and yet only a comparatively small area of the tillable land of the country is occupied. Five years hence you will be more than doubtful of that."—Advertisement.

SYRUP OF FIGS FOR A CHILD'S BOWELS

It is cruel to force nauseating, harsh physic into a sick child.

Look back at your childhood days. Remember the "does" mother insisted you should take, and how you hated them. How you hated them, how you fought against taking them.

Well, your children feel the same way about it. Of course they do. They don't realize what they do. The children's revolt is well-founded. Their tender little "insides" are injured by them.

If your child's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing, give only delicious "California Syrup of Figs." Its action is painless, but gentle. Millions of mothers keep this harmless "fruit laxative" handy; they know children love to take it. It is a fever tonic to clean the liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach, and that a teaspoonful given today saves a sick child tomorrow.

Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Adv.

Country's Future Bright

It is generally believed that what used to be the German Southwest Africa will develop rapidly during the next five or ten years, and that the demand for agricultural and other machinery especially will steadily increase. Cotton is the nearest trade center and has for years been in constant communications with German Southwest Africa by boat. It is thought that the railway systems of the Union of South Africa and of German Southwest Africa will be eventually linked up. Opinions differ as to the comparison of the diamonds of Southwest Africa with those of the Union of South Africa. According to some authorities, they resemble the Kimberley type. Some experts on South Africa diamonds, however, hold the view that the stones have more resemblance to those of Brazil. The diamonds in certain areas have been found to be of a very fine quality.

MISSION SAN JUAN BAUTISTA

EVERYONE who thinks of California, associates a mental picture of its old missions and its big trees. The Franciscan Fathers built 21 missions in California, extending from San Diego, at the extreme southern limit of the state, to Solano, 35 miles north of San Francisco bay, a distance of almost 650 miles. Ten of these missions were placed in central California, extending from Monterey county to Sonoma county, a distance of about 150 miles. Of the ten in the central counties five were established around San Francisco bay and the remaining five in Santa Cruz, San Benito and Monterey counties.

The Franciscan pioneers, knowing California, selected with great care the fruitful valleys and the spots where the climate is mild and equable the year round. Of the five missions around San Francisco bay, the one at San Rafael, just across the bay from San Francisco, and the one at Santa Cruz on Monterey bay have entirely disappeared. Mission Dolores is the heart of San Francisco. Mission San Jose at the little town of the same name on the main motor boulevard from Oakland to San Jose, and Mission Santa Clara, the town of Santa Clara, four miles from San Jose, are kept in fairly good condition and are visited annually by many tourists.

In Midst of Great City.

Mission Dolores, built in 1776 and now in the midst of the residence district of San Francisco is the only one that is one of old missions which is surrounded by a large city. The same holds in California in laying out its $18,000,000 motor highway, which is largely completed, followed the road of the Franciscans stretching from mission to mission. The visitor to California, particularly the motorist, can this make a tour of the old missions over a wonderfully fine boulevard through picturesque valleys and mountains.

The California Landmark leaque and the Native Sons of the Golden West are making a strong campaign to restore all the old missions about which so much of the romantic history of the state is built, and to maintain them for all time.

There is no closed season for the man who hunts ruins.

Textbooks Sold Each Year.

The commerce reports state greatly exaggerated ideas prevail concerning the total number of textbooks sold in the United States each year and the annual profits resulting from such sales. Data obtained by the United States bureau of education from 43 textbook publishers in the United States show that they sold in the year sales of textbooks for use in public and private schools in 1913 amounted to $17,271,630. The aggregate for public school, elementary and high, amounted to $14,241,746. The total expenditure in public elementary and high schools in the United States approximately 19,609,940. Excluding the elementary school expenditure of California since California prints its own elementary books, the number becomes 18,213,746. For each child enrolled in the public schools in the United States, therefore, the total annual sale of textbooks is 76.3 cents.

Force of Rain in the Desert.

The following description of rain on the desert is given by a writer in Forest and Fireside: "In desert lands when it does rain, it may come with much more force than anywhere else. In less than no time the whole desert beside was a sheet of water running swiftly down, cutting a channel as it ran to pour under the rock where we had taken shelter, undermining it and threatening to throw it over upon us, a rock that weighed many tons. We had to move to a safer place and made a hurried run to another hiding place, more scrub. Then came hail and hailstones fell in such big chunks that knocked us about. I thought they would kill old Barney, who stood exposed to their fearful pelting. The rain was quite short, passed away and the water soon sunk into the sand, and it turned hot as intensely as we went on our way, leading our horses."

Bird Law Has Worked Well.

Those who were instrumental in passing the federal migratory bird law in 1913 may well feel proud of themselves, for it seems a safe bet that the increase of from 10 to 100 per cent in the wild fowl in the Canadian marshes of specially examined localities.

The KITCHEN CABINET

Any man may be in good spirits and good temper when he is well dressed. If I was very ragged and very jolly (but, I should begin to feel I had gained a point.—Dickens.

HELPFUL HINTS.

If the range is too low raise it on a zinc-covered platform. A low stove is a back-breaking addition to an already burdened one.

A rubber mat placed before the sink is a great help to tired feet, as it lessens fatigue.

When standing on cornmeal flour have, if a rubber mat is not to be procured, a small rack of strips of board on which to stand. There is sufficient spring in the device to ease the feet.

Doors and window casings, moldings and baseboards should be smooth so as not to afford a place for dust in cracks and ledges.

Whenever possible the wood or coal should be filled from the outside into a box near the stove with a cover to keep out the dust.

Dustless mop cloths, and dusters are easily prepared at home. Old woolen or flannelette underwear for mops and cheesecloth dusters are prepared as follows: Put a quarter of a cupful of kerosene into a cleaning pail, add two quarts of quite warm water, put in the cloths and make sure that they are well saturated. Wring out dry and the cloths are ready for use. Keep in metal receptacles or in an airy place as they are inflammable.

The best sanitary covering for the floor is linoleum. Varnished once or twice a year, it lasts for years. It should be well fitted with waterproof joints. The method used by some is to lay the cloth and use it until it is well flattened and stretched before tacking securely.

A painted floor if kept well painted, may be easily cleaned. Use the same color of paint from year to year, then the worn spots may be touched without being too noticeable.

A recovered table of the right height for the person to use is an indispensable kitchen adjunct. A hinged shelf placed conveniently is another help in serving and dishwashing.

A wire tray to fit into a deep pan may be used for the potatoes when frying. Scald with very hot water and let dry, saving the process of wiping.

TASTY CHEAP MEATS.

Those who would serve meats that take long, slow cooking must plan their meals some time beforehand.

All meats should be immediately removed from their paper wrappings, as much of the juice soaks into the paper. This paper itself often imparts an unpleasant flavor to meat. Keep meat near ice or in a cold place and wipe it with a damp cloth before putting it on to cook.

Red meats are easier of digestion, if properly cooked, than white meats of pork and veal.

Cheap cuts of meats are spoiled by too intense heat than by too little.

The liquor in which fresh meat has been boiled is a good foundation for soups and broths.

Salt meats should be put into cold water to cook, changing the water if the meat is very salt. The liquor is good to make bean or pea soup. Never throw away a bit of meat liquor, for even a little adds a deal of zest to it in gravies, sauces and for flavor in vegetable dishes.

Twenty minutes to the pound is considered ample for cooking most well done, usually not counting the time until after the first twenty minutes. It takes that time for most to be some heated.

In cooking meats one of two things must be decided by the housekeeper, time or money, which to you is the more valuable. Cheap and tough cuts are quickly prepared, but are expensive. We must remember that quite most costly meat is not the most nourishing, as much of the best flavor and nutriment is found in the cuts taken from the part of the animal where the muscles are most active. This same is the lowest in price.

In steaming meat there is less loss; in stewing it, about a fourth of its weight is lost in cooking. When steaming 30 minutes to the pound should be allowed in the cooking.

A small amount of meat will flavor a dish of vegetables, cooking together in the oven.

EGGLESS DISHES.

With eggs soaring higher and higher these days we must of necessity curtail their use and yet the family must have the sweet things and be supplied with a variety. A most delicious pudding which needs long, slow baking is this:

Rice Pudding.—Take a fourth of a cupful of rice, a half cupful of sugar and two quarts of rich milk with a half cupful of raisins or a few sliced sweet apples, put into a baking dish and set into the oven. Stir often for the first hour or two, then let it brown, than for three hours. This is delicious without sauce, but a hard sauce flavored with nutmeg makes it a dessert liked especially by the children and is a most wholesome one for them.

Molasses Cookies.—Take a cupful of shortening, a cupful of molasses and a cupful of brown sugar. Heat in a saucepan until well mixed, then add ginger or other spices to taste, a half teaspoonful of soda, dissolved in a little hot water and flour enough to roll out. If the mixture is cooled well before rolling it will handle better.

Apple Sauce Cake.—Take a cupful of brown sugar, a half cupful of shortening, a cupful of unsweetened apple sauce, made from cooking apples, a cupful of raisins, chopped, two tablespoonfuls of cocoa, a teaspoonful of cinnamon, a half teaspoonful each of cloves and nutmeg, two cupfuls of flour, sifted with a half teaspoonful of soda, and one teaspoonful of baking powder. Bake forty minutes in a shallow pan. This makes a good dessert served with a lemon sauce or any desired flavor.

Winter Shortcakes.—Prepare a rich baking-powder biscuit dough, make two cakes, rolling thin, spread one with butter and place the other on top, then when baked they are easily split without making them heavy. Use canned peaches, sliced oranges, or bananas or any fruit desired. Serve with cream and sugar.

This same biscuit dough rolled thin, sprinkled with brown sugar and nutmeg, then cut like cinnamon rolls and baked are delicious little cakes for tea.

VARIATIONS IN DRESSINGS.

The simple French dressing made with three tablespoonfuls of oil to one of sharp vinegar, a dash of cayenne and powdered sugar and a teaspoonful of salt may be added to as to favor by a few finely chopped stuffed olives.

For cucumber salad a hard cooked egg, minced fine, added to the French salad dressing is especially good. Chopped chives and dressing served on cottage cheese is another good combination.

Chili sauce, tabasco, Worcestershire, catchup and various kinds are all good in French dressing.

Pineapple Dressing.—Mix all of the ingredients except whipped cream and cook until thick: two egg yolks, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, one-half of flour, and one-half cupful of pineapple juice. When serving with a fruit salad thin with cream or condensed milk.

Boiled salad dressing is very good on cottage cheese.

Chili Dressing.—Make an ordinary French dressing as above, add a few drops of onion juice, get this by scraping with a spoon the cut side of an onion. When ready to serve, add finely chopped green peppers and sufficient chili sauce to color the dressing a rich red. Shred cabbage very fine and mix with the dressing.

Thousand Isle Dressing.—There seems to be as many varieties of this dressing as there are islands. To a mayonnaise dressing add whipped cream, chopped parsley, stuffed olives, hard cooked eggs and chives. Your own best lettuce.

Serve mashed roquefort cheese with seasonings added to French dressing on head lettuce.

For mayonnaise the chief success in its making is that dishes and ingredients are well chilled with ice, otherwise the dressing separates.

Mayonnaise is used with meats and vegetables, but is not used in fruit salad dressings. Many chef combinations will occur to the cook who is thinking about attractive dishes.

Chic Blouse of Wash Fabrics

The better grades in cotton voiles, marquisettes, organdie and other sheer stuffs have proved themselves surprisingly durable and are like crepe de chine and crepe georgette in this respect. They look as fresh as flower petals but wear as starchy as dotted muslins or any other of the dependable weaves that are relied upon for the practical everyday blouse. They are all in the running now that the time is here for making up blouses for the oncoming season.

With the trend of the public's taste constantly turned toward thin and sheer fabrics for all purposes, and the demand for things washable, cotton voile is likely to stand near the head of the list as a material wanted for spring blouses. It is shown in many patterns employing color, in figures or stripes, on a white ground. These are either woven or printed in, with increasing demand developing for the woven in designs.

In blouses, as in dresses, there is a fancy for combining materials of two different kinds in one garment. Illusions of hemstitching, bands of colored organdie are stitched to the collar or cuffs to form a border, in white blouses, and a little embroidery, like the bands in color, provides a relief to the plain body of white. Voiles with colored dots in graduated sizes, and scalloped edges, finished with buttonhole stitching, are among the prettiest of spring offerings. The dots are in rose color mainly, blue and lavender, and occasionally a light brown or green makes the choice more varied.

The chic tailored blouse pictured here is made of voile with dotted stripes in a deep tan shade on a white ground. Between these are narrower stripes of white satin dots. The band extends over the shoulders, forming a shallow yoke at the front, and all seams are set together with a narrow piping in white. The fronts are cut to form a narrow panel in white down the center, with a double row of pearl buttons as a decorative feature in the blouse. Long fastenings and a fly make it possible to dispense with buttonholes if desired.

The sleeves are finished with deep cuffs of the voile. A removable collar and cuffs of white hemstitched organdie are the final touches in a design that betrays careful planning. It is a model that may be copied easily in any of the spring wash fabrics.

Black Corduroy Coats.

Black corduroy is said to be coming in for the shorter sport coats. They should be worn with white skirts.

Skirts of checked wool velours have belts and pocket flaps cut in one.

Fashions of the Hour in Bags

Bags of embossed leather in oriental colorings and figures made their entry in the areas of fashions just before the holidays. They made an instant success, sharing the favor given to novelties in silk bags, and nothing more beautiful is likely to replace them for some time.

They are called Tokyo bags and are made in various colored leathers having the design of Japanese lacquer wrought in many rich and harmonious color effects on a solid ground. They follow the mode in the matters of size and shape, as set forth by plain leather bags, and are beautifully lined with plain or moire silk. After those occasions in western needs their alliance returns to the Orient in the matter of handles. Anything less beautiful than the strands of silver beads and the ivory and silver knobs would be too harsh to harmonize with them, and their handles are an indispensable fascination.

Fashions of the hour in handbags make them a delight to the orderly soul. They are a place for everything in them, and everything in its place, so in a watch or a locket. Compartments for the card case, the notebook, the coin purse and a place for the pocket checkbook or letter or memoranda are all provided. A convenient outside place for the handkerchief and a convenient inside place for the tiny powder box and mirror make the up-to-date handbag a marvel of modern arrangement. There is no reason for a scrapbag appearance to the belongings which are carried in a handbag these days.

Cape Effects.

An important feature of many afternoon gowns is the cape effect. While this adds a quaint touch to a woman's appearance, one must use judgment in using this feature. On some figures it is a decided improvement. For instance, the woman who is inclined to be too large or too narrow with them and their handles are an indispensable fascination.

Waiter Had a Reason.

It happened aboard a diner on an eastern road and the hero of the sketch was the waiter, a coal-black, exceedingly polite person, whose manner was proof sufficient that he lived to make life brighter and fairer for his patrons. "Waiter," said a tow traveler, as he sat himself down at one of the little tables, "bring me grapefruit, but toast, coffee and two poached eggs." "Round," stated the waiter, bending forward confidentially and speaking under his breath, "scuse me, sah, but effen you I'd tek somethin' else this mawnin' fur breakfast. I'm feared I can't reckommend the eggs. "What's wrong with them—aren't they fresh, or what?" raised the white man. "Well," said the darky "they must be fresh so far as I knows. BILIOUS, HEADACHY, SICK "CASCARETS"

Gently cleanse your liver and sluggish bowels while you sleep.

Get a 10-cent box!

Sick headache, biliousness, dizziness, coated tongue, foul taste and foul breath—always trace them to torpid liver; delayed, fermenting food in the bowels or sour, gassy stomach.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast out of the system is reabsorbed into the blood. When this poison reaches the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sickening headache.

Cascarets immediately cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowel.

A Cascaret to-night will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist means your head clear, stomach sweet and your liver and bowels regular for months. Adv.

NEW TREATMENT FOR SWOLLEN VEINS

Swollen veins are dangerous and often burst. Sufferers are advised to get a two-ounce original bottle of Emerald Oil (full strength) at any drug store and apply a few drops into the veins and bunches a few times daily.

Physicians recommend Emerald Oil; it is powerful, penetrating and a small bottle will last several months, because it is very concentrated. Apply night and morning until the veins disappear. It is an antiseptic, powerful that soothes glands, and stops goitre disappear when used steadily.

NEWS and GOSSIP of WASHINGTON

President's Attempt to Put World Into Two Camps

WASHINGTON—When it came time for the president to arrange for the customary dinners to the diplomatic corps this winter, Mr. Wilson and his social, military and diplomatic assistants found themselves up against a hard proposition, due to the European war. From the first it was evident that two dinners must be given, and no the president undertook to divide the diplomatic world of Washington into two camps, each of which would be hospitable.

First, he put in camp No. 1 the entente powers, and in camp No. 2 the central powers, so far as good, Teutonic, closing his ears to the whisperings of those who professed to know the sentiment of the neutral countries. Mr. Wilson took the little blue-covered diplomatic book issued by the state department, and began to camp No. 1 the first neutral representative on the list. The next he put in the second camp, and alternating thus, he had the world divided into camps, with the United States standing between.

It was an ingenious though simple plan, and seemed to give assurance of peace at the festive board. But on second thought the chief executive saw a snag and adopted another. The belligerent leaders of each camp were left as they were, but as ing with each of these groups the representatives of all the neutral countries were invited. Thus no one was offended and the lucky neutrals had two dinners instead of one.

Little Incident in a Street Car in Washington

A FAT, wabbly woman, overburdened with what you might literally call a fat, wabbly baby, and with the packages of the day's bargain hunt, entered a crowded car. No man showed symptoms of chivalry, and as a fat, wabbly woman daughter of a strap maker is somewhat distressing show of herself, a young woman arose and gave up her seat.

This act of courtesy aroused no belated gallantry in the male passengers, each of whom read his paper or looked bluntly satisfied and unharrying as, of course, he had a right to do if he wished.

After a bit a man boarded the car saw the girl, cordially shook her free hand and said to her in the voice of one who owns the world and all there is in it:

"If you want to hear me speak here's your chance. Come up to the capitol with me now for business. Mary will be there.

"Thank you, not this time, senator. We have a tea on hand for the afternoon. Try to look in on us.

Our home men are not toadies, but there are always exceptions. And they happened to be in the car. Every newspaper lost its lure for the reader masked behind its pages. Every stolid passenger who had ignored the mere everyday woman who had given them an object lesson in unselfishness became enthusiastically solicitous to place his share of the car at the disposal of the booming-toned senator and his friend.

Neither paid any attention, thanks be; and that was all there was to it except this—

It was only another proof of a now generally accepted fact—that young women who go out in the world to battle for right of way are acquiring a protective tenderness for all who are old and helpless—a protective tenderness which men are throwing aside, and which selfish, home-pampered women and girls never did have, and never will.

Foreign Lotteries Worrying Postal Authorities

INCREASE in the number of government lotteries abroad, as the war drags on, more and more, is forcing United States postal authorities to be especially watchful to prevent their advertisement in this country. The lotteries are given publicity in the United States in two ways, it is said at the post office department. Individual letters are written to American citizens in an effort to induce them to purchase tickets and news stories are circulated of fabulous sums won.

Letters soliciting clients, if they fall into the department's hands, never reach their destinations. Some get through the department if on the outside they do not present suspicious appearance. All the suspected letters are diverted and opened. With news stories the department does not find it so easy to deal. The solicitor's office of the department holds that any news story advertising a lottery must be barred from the mails. Under this department's ruling this means any story giving publicity to a lottery. It does not have to be a paid advertisement.

Many news stories of European lotteries have been printed recently, the department says, which approach closely a violation of the law. A story that mentions a lottery in the name of a foreign country is held to be a distinct violation. A story, too, that might be expected to attract such attention to a lottery that readers would investigate is held to be a violation.

Most of these lotteries have arrived on in Europe now are for war benefits. Hospitals, the wounded, soldiers' dependents and other war victims are aided.

Uncle Sam Looks After the Health of the Oyster

DESIROUS that more of the hundred million inhabitants of this country should realize their good fortune in living near the waters in which oysters grow better than anywhere else in the world, the federal government is doing all that it can to increase the consumption of this cheapest of animal foods.

For a generation the bureau of fisheries of the department of commerce has made a study of the oyster, and has revealed means of its life history that have made possible its propagation with increasing success, and to such an extent that its price has remained practically the same for 70 years. More recently the bureau of chemistry of the department of agriculture and the public health service of the treasury department have been co-operating in a sanitary survey of the oyster beds of the Atlantic coast, which has resulted in the closing of those found to be in any way polluted. The work of the various agencies has been focused on the idea that government announces that oysters are more sanitary and better than ever before.

In the enforcement of sanitary regulations concerning oyster beds the federal government has, of course, been restricted to oysters entering interstate commerce, but by cooperation with various states the good effects of the federal work have been extended practically all over the country.

SUBMARINE RESCUE DEVICE.

One of the recently invented submarine-rescue devices is designed to furnish the imprisoned crew a supply of air and also extend a line to the surface of the vessel, to facilitate the rising of the disabled craft.

An important part of the apparatus consists of a collapsible box containing an air bag, which, when inflated, rises to the surface, carrying with it a swivel-jointed pipe within which is a hose. The air for this lifting chamber is taken from the submarine, but as soon as it reaches the surface the pumps in the submarine must be on at work sucking in oxygen.

A cord which is tied to a cable attached to one end of the craft is fastened to the box. To pulling this up the rescuers are able to obtain a heavy line with which the submarine may be raised. Wires carried by the box establish telephone communication between those under the water and the rescuers.

THE SANDMAN STORY

By Mrs. F. A. WAUND

THE CAVE WITCH.

In a cave, on an island, lived an old witch. She had a black cat with yellow eyes, which alone like fire in the night. This old witch had two daughters. One baked the bar, with long, bony fingers and a sharp nose and pointed chin. The other daughter was good to look upon. When the wind blew and the storm came, this old witch would build a fire under a kettle which hung on three crossed sticks in front of the cave. Then she would call the witch daughter and her cat, and stirring the contents of the kettle with a stick, she would repeat in a sing-song tone.

Once around to stir the sea,
Twice around good luck to me,
Thrice around the stars go down,
Thrice around the sun go up.

Then the witch daughter would sing:

Witch cat, witch cat, black as night,
Thrice around thou scratch and bite.

And the cat would whirl around three times and claw the air and snarl in the most terrible way. Sometimes they would make the other daughter stir the kettle, and the old witch and her girl and the cat would whirl around the kettle, singing their weird songs, until the poor girl at the stick would almost faint from fright. Then the old witch would laugh in a cackling voice and call her a poor, afraid mortal.

One night when the lightning flashed and the thunder rolled they called the good girl to stir the kettle, and when one old witch was singing Stirring the Contents With a Stick.

"Thrice around the ships go down," the lightning flashed very brightly, the girl saw a ship sinking, and she dropped the stick she was stirring with and ran into the cave.

The old witch ran after her and dragged her back, telling her to stir the kettle or she would set the cat after her. "I will never stir it again," she said. "You are making the ships go down and drowning the people on board." Hit the old witch pulled her to the kettle and put the stick into her hand. Then a happy thought came to the girl. She would stir in the opposite direction when the old witch sang: "Thrice around the ships go down," and as she stirred the storm ceased, but the old witch and the witch daughter were whirling around so fast they did not notice it.

Suddenly the girl heard a great splash, and, looking in the direction from which it came, she saw a chariot, drawn by two horses with golden manes, and driving them was a man with a white beard, and in his hand he carried a golden rod, on the end of which were three prongs. The girl dropped the stick and the old witch and the daughter dropped upon the ground on their faces. "So I have found you at last," said the man in the chariot. "You have been causing all this trouble at sea."

The cat had crept up to him and was ready to spring at him when the good daughter screamed for him to look out. "Oh! she cannot hurt me," he said. "But I will get her out of the way at once." And he touched the cat with his rod, and she became a stone.

The old witch and her witch child began to beg for mercy when they saw what had happened to the cat, and promised never to stir up the sea again if he would spare them. The man did not answer them, but turned to the good girl and said: "You are to come with me; the old witch stole you when you were playing on a wave one day. You were a mermaid, and she changed you into a human. She intended to change you into a witch, she did not know that she could make you a witch out of a mermaid. What shall we do with them?" he asked. "Shall we turn them into a heap of stones and let the waves wash over them, or shall we change them to sand and let the waves wash them out to sea?"

"Could you make them good women?" asked the girl. "That would do some good in the world."

"Very well," said the old man. "You get into my chariot," and as she looked back she saw a house where the cave had been and a pleasant old lady and a girl waving good-by to her.

FIST IS TURNED INTO FACE

Amateur Ventriloquist Can Have Much Amusement With This Stunt —Illusion is Funny.

The fellow with a sense of humor may have a lot of fun by means of a few little patented forms by which the clenched fist may be transformed into a clever representation of the human face. As the clenched hand is held with the thumb up a tuft of hair is placed between the thumb and forefinger. Then between the middle and forefinger is inserted a stiff cardboard shape representing a nose and a pair of eyes. A touch of pins between the third and fourth fingers completes the counterfeit of the face, and when a piece of cloth is drawn around the hand the illusion is very marked and amusing. With a little practice the little finger may be moved and the effect is that of a person talking or singing. Even a very amateurish effort at ventriloquism is possible if one has a tuft of fun out of this little stunt. The patents have to be made up in this face have been recently patented, but there is no reason why anyone should not get one together for his own amusement, making use of a couple of old shirt buttons on a tuft of hair, eyes and a tuft of cloth for hair.

TOY MOTOR QUITE PLEASING

Plaything Invented by Topeka Man is Delighting to Boys Who Have Seen It in Motion.

A Topeka man has invented a toy motor which is said to be delighting all lads who have seen it or secured one. This little motor can be put in a man's vest pocket and retails for a quarter. The usual motor is run a boy's downhill or other plaything costs from 75 cents to several dollars.

The Topeka inventor has invented and is now selling a simple apparatus to take the place of the more expensive motor. A boy can pick up an old battery somewhere or buy a new one at a nominal store, attach it to the motor, take a string to act as a belt, and the toy-maker will do the rest.

His Notion of It.

The teachers of Sunday-school classes should always make sure that their scholars understand what they are taught, as the following dialogue which recently took place will show:

Teacher—What did Samson do to the Philistines?

Scholar—He arose and smote them hip and thigh!

Teacher—Quite right! Now what does that mean?

Scholar—Why, that he up and spanked them!

Finding Out.

"Mother (to her small son, who is doing a Jackie piece on the sabbath)—Bobby, are you sure that a Sunday parade you are doing?

Bobby—Well, you see, I can't tell until I've done it.

Canada's Wonder City

By WALTER ROBB.

OF ALL the cities on the Pacific coast of this continent, none is more surprising. The genius of a railway man, aided by a shipload of high explosives and a lavish expenditure of money, brought it into being with the same surprising rapidity with which the stage magician produces a rabbit from his hat.

The writer, with a hundred other Americans and Canadians, first heard of the city's existence one spring day a half dozen years ago. The Australian mail boat Makura, after a record trip across the Pacific from Sydney, N. S. W., was proudly nosing her way into Vancouver harbor when hold up by an outward-bound tramp loaded to the limit with iron and materials. The men were bound north to make the first blasts in the work of removing a mountain of rock for the site of the new city, which was to be the western terminal of Canada's newest transcontinental railway, the Grand Trunk Pacific. Vancouver and Seattle were agog with the news—a new sea port on the north coast of British Columbia within a few miles of the Alaskan border.

Today, where less than seven years ago the first white man set his foot, there is a busy, prosperous community of 60,000 people living and working in the thoroughfares overshadow a great inland harbor, which is in the center of the world's richest fishing grounds.

Can Handle Great Vessels.

A few weeks ago, without any fanfare, the Prince Rupert Dispatch watched the steamer Delhi, salvaged from the Alaskan coast, enter the harbor and deposit in dry dock. This marked the opening for business of a $2,000,000 structure, the largest dry dock and shipe-repairing plant which can handle a merchantman or battleship of 70,000 tons displacement. It is enterprise such as this that spells sure prosperity for the northern city.

Cities which have been earning a livelihood for decades from the thousands of ocean carriers would be proud to own such facilities as this great floating dry dock.

This fabb which moves mountains to make place for town sites and spends millions on a single machine is making Prince Rupert famous, and the faith of its people is justified. They are 550 miles nearer Yokohama than from London, your trip will take you through Prince Rupert. Moreover, the city is the front door to Alaska, and a natural gateway to the "Last Great West."

In the course of a few years its docks will be the receiving point for much of the commerce from the Orient for Eastern Canada. From Prince Rupert this commerce will be carried all the way through Canada in the shortest ocean, or by way of St. Paul, Minneapolis and Chicago to United States points.

Center of Big Fishing Industry.

Prince Rupert will be one of the factors to be reckoned with in the business life of the continent. One of the great sources of wealth already tapped is the fishing industry. Millions of pounds of halibut are taken each month from the neighboring waters, and a remarkable fact is that this fish is being eaten in the English seacoast cities which have been deprived of their fish supply through the submarine perils of the North sea. Hundreds of carloads of this Prince Rupert halibut are moved in refrigerator cars, and the fish is in perfect condition when it reaches the consumers' tables nearly six thousand miles away from the waters where it was caught. The Skeena river, which empties into the harbor of Prince Rupert, is one of the greatest salmon rivers in the world, and thousands of people are employed during the canning season along its shores.

Prince Rupert has had no great boom or "jamboree" to attract, but it is finding its feet among the older competitors along the coast. The pioneers had great natural obstacles to overcome. Every street is cut out of solid rock, and blasts costing $15,000 were by no means a rarity; and today blasting and street making is still going on, with a great deal of paving to be done.

Prince Rupert is right in the path of the Chinook winds, warmed by the Japanese current. There is much fine soft rain during the spring, but the winters have a compensating mildness, and throughout the cold months the steamers from Seattle, Vancouver and Victoria go in and out the ports carrying passengers and cargo, and sail through sheltered waters far removed from the menace of floating ice.

Canada is proud of her new Pacific port, and she has a friend in by the Prince Rupert pioneers is among the citizens of all sections, and the city building of which this continent has record.

PRINCE RUPERT AND ITS HARBOR

WHEN SPECIE HAD VANISHED

In Civil War Times Small Accounts Were Settled With Clippings From Paper Money.

Noticing in your paper that the units are being worked right and day turning out cents and pennies, remember the condition of 1862, a letter to the Pittsburgh Gazette-Times states. Coin was hoarded and disappeared crossing the Potomac at Berlin and Harper's Ferry in my efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull memory in the back of your head, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach loses its tongue and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The kidneys are clogged, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to soak relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's noxious waste get your druggist to get 3 fluid drams of Anurin, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acids of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, and makes a delightful effervescent lithia water drink.

FOOD FACTS.

What an M. D. Learned.

A prominent physician down in Georgia went through a food experiment which he makes public:

It was my own experience that first led me to advocate Grape-Nuts food; and I also know from having prescribed it to convalescents and other weak patients that this food is a wonderful rebuilder and restorer of nerve and brain tissue, as well as muscle. It improves the appetite and restores pain, just as I did in strength and vitality very rapidly.

"I was in such a low state that I had not strength enough to dress and go to the mountains, but two months there did not improve me; in fact I was so weak I could not walk half home. My food did not sustain me, and it became plain that I must change.

"I began to use Grape-Nuts and in two weeks I could walk a mile, and in five weeks returned to my home and practice, taking up hard work again. Since that time I have felt as well and strong as I ever did in my life.

"As a physician who seeks to help all sufferers I consider it a duty to make these facts public."

FRUIT LAXATIVE FOR SICK CHILD

"California Syrup of Figs" can't harm tender stomach, liver and bowels.

Every mother realizes after giving her children "California Syrup of Figs" that this is their ideal laxative, because they love its pleasant taste and it thoroughly cleanses the tender little stomach, liver and bowels without griping.

When cross, irritable, feverish, or breath is bad, stomach sour, look at the tongue, mother! If coated, give a teaspoonful of this harmless "fruit laxative," and in a few hours all the poisonous waste, undigested food and undigested food passes out of the bowels and you have a well, playful child again. When its little system is full of cold, throat sore, has stomach-ache, diarrhoea, indigestion, colic—remember, a good "inside cleaning" should be first thing given. Ask druggist for a fifty cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups printed on the bottle.

"Groundhog," which to many is a term of reproach, is a name given to many particular species, but means rather the large class of fish, that live on or near the bottom of the sea, including cod, pollock, haddock, halibut, hake, solo, and many others less common than these.

Biblical Names Popular.

A paragrapher asserts that England can boast that no other country possesses so many scriptural place names as are found in that country. The name of Jericho occurs six times on the maps. Peculiar five times and Nineveh, St. Zion, Mt. Ararat and Mt. Ephraim three times each.

The official bowed and said: "Certainly, sir, but would you not prefer to wait for them inside?"

Mr. Curtis agreed that this arrangement was more to the point and so one of standing outside, so he permitted the official to turn him down front and seat him near a bunch of princes, dukes and other assorted royalties.

Manicure Sets for Horses.

What science has done for dumb animals is shown in the exhibit at the meeting of the Kansas veterinarians at Kansas City.

If a horse falls on the ice and breaks his leg it is no longer necessary to kill him. An instrument resembling a spline or cast is made to hold the leg. There are medicine tablets and capsules ten times as large as those given human beings. There are medicines so mixed that they taste like lemonade to animals. The stylish horse is also remembered. There are fine curry combs and brushes and an "organs manicure set" designed for polishing the hoofs.

COULDN'T KILL MULE

"OLD TOBE" NONE THE WORSE FOR LONG IMMERSION.

Incident of the Civil War Shows How Hard It Is to Separate Government Pack Animal From Uncle Sam's Rations.

Z. P. Hotchkiss, adjutant of Phil Sheridan post, G. A. R. of Oak Park, Ill., tells the following experience with a government mule. As an army telegrapher Mr. Hotchkiss was attached to the staff of General Canby in the Gulf Mobile campaign.

"The entire outfit for the construction of the army telegraph lines," says Mr. Hotchkiss, "was carried on the backs of forty pack mules. A coil of half a mile of wire hung upon each side of the saddle.

"There were six young operators, one from each corps, mounted on horses. To these boys had been intrusted the government cipher and knowledge of the strategic movement of the troops. These secrets were safe, as none of the young fellows ever betrayed a trust.

"For the Mobile campaign the mules were drilled in the streets of New Orleans to follow the lead of the mule-tender or the horses of the chief operator.

"One day, while following in the rear of the army up the peninsula from Dauphine island, the entire train was trailing along in the rear of the chief operator, who knew nothing about ocean tides. The reel mule, "Old Tobe," fell into the water and rolled the wire; was in advance, and, before he had gone an arm's length in the Gulf of Mexico. The operator's horse was soon beyond his depth and swimming for dear life. The instant it was seen that 'Old Tobe' had sunk beneath the waves the reel mule reached out his horse to where the reel mule had done good, and after diving twice, came up gasping for breath.

"The foal critter is walking toward the Spanish fort, he said, but I'll get him this time, sure." He dove again, and the operator saw the belly-band of the submerged mule and old the animal of his load. Old Tobe floated to the surface, shook the water from his ears, was towed ashore, rumored out, and a few hours later was again making the march for Fish river Wave for dragging a little, he showed little sign of his experience; but he had been under water long enough to have killed anything but a government mule."

Some 200 army operators, who, though many of their number were killed or taken prisoners of war, are ineligible to a government pension, are the recipients of private pensions in their old age from their comrade, Andrew Carnegie.

"Him" Didn't Stop Screams.

John McKinney, living in Shelby county, was in Shelbyville recently with friends. He became separated from them and they went home without him. It was too far for McKinney to walk, so he called up a county living in Shelbyville and asked him some money to pay for a night's lodging. The county told McKinney to go to his (the cousin's) home to spend the night.

John started out and found a house which he thought was the right one. He pounded on the door, but no one came to answer. Then he tried a window. He raised it and crawled through. He was greeted by the shrill scream of a woman, who was standing on a bed. John remembered that she did not scream for it was "him." "Him" didn't stop to see Miss Lulu Long. She continued her screaming. A brother came running into the room with a shotgun. McKinney soon had his hands stretched far above his head. Hearing the noise, the cousin, who lived next door to the Long home, rushed to the rescue and the disturbance was soon cleared.—Indianapolis News.

Heredity and Eugenics.

Only a misguided enthusiast, says the report of the American Medical Association, would venture to make great claims at the present time for any theory of heredity applied to civilized organisms. The doctrines of heredity and the new eugenics are based must first be supported by critical investigation. The limitations of the practical aspects of eugenics must be clearly formulated and emphasized. It is well enough to maintain in a general way that vitality is partly inherited and partly acquired, and that a sound physical and mental inheritance is a greater asset than the inherited unconscious advantages like wealth. Many individuals, however, have assumed that the new science is primarily intended to foster a scheme of general gross mental interference with marriage. As a matter of fact, the most earnest students of eugenics have at least hoped to promote the gradual establishment of standards in public opinion.

Now We Have It.

The earth passed between the planet Saturn and the sun January 1, and passed between Neptune and the sun January 7. There being no planets to intercept the heat from the earth and the sun and cause cold weather after February 16 and April 16 there will be a rapid rise in temperature. Cold weather will prevail from February 16 to April 26, which will cause spring to begin practically about February 16, and will cause warmer and drier weather than usual from February 16 to April 26, 1916.

During that warm period the principal cold changes of weather will occur just after the moon or any planets pass between the earth and other planets or visible stars near the eclipse. When precipitation occurs it will be near the dates of those planetary, lunar and stellar conjunctions.—D. N. Grover, in Baltimore Sun.

Gouvernour Morris, the Novelist, Slept in Suites When Other Correspondents Didn't.

Private information from the battlefields of Europe indicates that Gouvernour Morris, the novelist, has had a cinch over the other correspondents.

In many of the hotels the correspondents were herded in one room at night, while Morris had a suite all to himself. Then again Morris was on friendly if not intimate terms with high officials and military commanders, while the other boys had to scrape around as best they could.

It was a mystery to the other scribes to understand how it was that Morris, caught on so easily, got the best of everything and went hobnobbing with royalty, until one day a petty officer approached one of the newspaper men and said:

"Will you kindly tell me what state is that Mr. Morris is governor of?"

The above calls to mind the fact that years ago George William Curtis, editor of the Easy Chair in Harper's Magazine, was in Obersammergau to witness the "Passion Play." BEGIN HOT WATER DRINKING IF YOU DON'T FEEL RIGHT

Says glass of hot water with phosphate before breakfast washes out poisons.

If you wake up with a bad taste, bad breath and tongue is coated; if your head is dull or aching; if what you eat sours and forms gas and acid in stomach, or you are bilious, constipated, nervous, sallow and can't get feeling just right, begin drinking phosphated hot water. Drink before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will flush the poisons and toxins from stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels and cleanse, sweeten and purify the entire alimentary tract. Do your inside bathing immediately upon arising in the morning to wash out of the system all the previous day's poisonous waste, gases and sour bile before putting more food into the stomach.

To feel like young folks feel, like you felt before your blood, nerves and muscles became loaded with body impurities, get from your druggist or storekeeper a quarter pound of limestone phosphate which is inexpensive and almost tasteless, except for a sourish tinge which is not unpleasant. Just as soon and hot water begins to flush the system, you will become real cranky on the subject shortly.—Adv.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and a oz. of Glycerine. Apply to the hair for a few nights. A good dressing and very good hair tonic. Gray hair is very unsightly and causes one to look old. Gray hair is not healthy and should be restored if possible. This will do it. It will gradually darken the color, and it will not stain the skin. It will stand a great deal of washing and will make hard hair soft and glossy. Barbo Compound, 50c, and $1.00 sizes, for sale by druggists, or direct on receipt of price. Agents wanted. Barbo Co., Chicago.

President's Attempt to Put World Into Two Camps

WASHINGTON.—When it came time for the president to arrange for the customary dinners to the diplomatic corps this winter, Mr. Wilson and his social, military and diplomatic assistants found themselves against a hard proposition, due to the European war. From the first it was evident that two dinners must be given, and so the president undertook to divide the diplomatic world of Washington into two camps, each of which would be harmonious.

First, he put in camp No. 1 the entente powers, and in camp No. 2 the central powers. So far, so good. Then, closing his ears to the whisperings of those who professed to know the sentiment of the neutral countries, Mr. Wilson took the blue-covered diplomatic book issued by the state department, and placed in camp No. 1 the four neutral representatives on the list. The next he put in the second camp, and alternating thus, he had the board divided into camps, with the United States standing between.

It was an ingenious though simple plan, and seemed to give assurance of peace at the festive board. But on second thought the chief executive gave it up and called another. The belligerent representatives of each camp were left as they were, but along with each of these groups the representatives of all the neutrals were placed, so that no one could be offended anyhow, and the lucky neutrals had two dinners instead of one.

Little Incident in a Street Car in Washington

A FAT, wabbly woman, overburdened with what you might literally call a gaudy bag filled with trophies of the day's bargain hunt, entered a crowded car. No man showed symptoms of chivalry, and as a fat, wabbly woman displeases a street car, it makes a somewhat distressing show of herself. A young woman arose and gave up her seat.

This act of courtesy aroused no belated gallantry in the blood-cooled gents, each of whom read his paper or looked blankly ahead and swearing, as, of course, he had a right to do if he wished.

After a bit a man boarded the car, saw the girl, cordially shook her free hand and said to her in the voice of one who owns the world and all there is in it:

"If you want to hear me speak here's your chance. Come up to the capitol with me now for luncheon. Mary will be there."

"Thank you, not this time, senator. We have a tea on hand for the afternoon. Try to look in on us."

Our home men are not toadies, but there are always exceptions. And they happened to be in the car. Every newspaper lost its lure for the reader masked behind its pages. Every solid passenger who had ignored the mere everyday woman who had given them an object lesson in unselfishness became simultaneously solicitous to place his square share of the car at the disposal of the booming round senator and his friend.

Neither paid any attention, thanks be; and that was all there was to it except that—

It was only another proof of a now generally accepted fact—that young women who go out in the world to battle for right of way are acquiring a protective tenderness for all who are old and helpless—a protective tenderness which some are throwing aside, and which selfish, home-pampered women and girls never did have, and never will.

Go to ---LEVINSON'S--- Get the Habit

Chase Osborn Was Always Lucky to Have This Kind of Enemies.

(From The Detroit Times)

Chase Osborn, while he was governor of Michigan, came to Detroit to attend a dinner in the Pontchartrain hotel.

While Osborn was a candidate for governor he made numerous enemies, among politicians and newspapers, because he wouldn't promise to turn the office over to them, in the event of his election, in return for their support.

After he had been elected he made some more enemies out of politicians and newspapers and officeholders who found they could not dictate to him and could not run his office.

When Osborn appeared in the Pontchartrain at the dinner hour, he found some of these enemies present—there were men there who had antagonized him and there were men there whom he had denounced.

The found represented there a newspaper that had abused him personally.

It would have been the part of the politician to have taken his seat, smilingly, among these and to have forgotten, or pretended to have forgotten, a few things for the time being, but it happened they had not invited a politician but a MAN and a man of PRINCIPLES and so sincerely FOR them and SO OPPOSED to any compromise with politics that he would have choked had he tried to eat.

Osborn turned, asked for his coat and hat and left the room.

He refused to sit with men in Detroit who had refused to sit with HIM in Lansing.

To have condescended to do so would have given the lie to his declared purpose both as a Republican and as governor of the people.

Conciliation was the object of the dinner.

It was to have been a love feast, whereat the enemies of Osborn, for personal and party reasons, were to have fallen on the political neck they would have preferred to wring.

But the man they had invited as the guest of honor wasn't that kind of a hairpin.

On said day and date, Chase Osborn became known to the smug bunch of politicians and newspapers dominating the Republican party in Michigan for so long, as a "troublemaker."

Now that the name of Chase Osborn is being prominently mentioned in connection with the presidential nomination in the Republican party, his politician and newspaper enemies are proving that they have good memories.

They are still of the opinion that he is a "troublemaker."

They are crying "Troublemaker."

And for this they are richly deserving of the thanks of Osborn.

Because the nominee of the Republican party this year, for his very fitness and qualification, will have to be known both to the party and to the country as a "troublemaker" in the Republican party in the very sense that the smug bunch of Osborn's enemies in the party here in Michigan regard him as a troublemaker.

The nominee of the Republican for the presidency this year must be a Republican who, when the time came in Chicago for Republicans to choose between the party's first principles and its false leaders, STUCK for principles.

The nominee must be a man who appreciates that what the Republican party needs nationally is the same kind of housecleaning Osborn gave it in Michigan.

The nominee must be a man who realizes that the Republican party's first need, before it can take its old place in the confidence of the people of the nation, is the branding and casting out of those who have USED it for their selfish personal and class purposes.

This is what Osborn did in Michigan and it is by those whom he exposed for their pernicious activities that he is known as "troublemaker."

As the campaign progresses and as the name of Chase Osborn is discussed as a presidential possibility, many kindnesses will be said of him, all of which he will deserve.

If ever there was presidential timber, that timber is Chase Osborn.

But of all the indorsements that he will receive, none will be stronger and none will glorify him more than this characterization he receives from the Republicans in Michigan who did their part in bringing about the homeless division of the party four years ago.

Better their opposition, by far, for ANY candidate in this presidential campaign, than their support.

Osborn is to be congratulated.

"THE BARGAIN" AT THE MAJESTIC

"The Bargain" is a great Western story—western characters, western scenery—laid in the Grand Canyon of Arizona—and typical western situations. William S. Hart, the famous Broadway favorite, plays the leading role, which abounds in situations demanding daring and courageous acting.

In the first scene, the country is shown to advise that Jim Stokes, the "Two-Gun Man" is in the neighborhood, headed for the border, and warning is given to place a double guard around the stage on its trip through the canyon. This warning is needed, for Jim is planning to hold up the stage and cutaway a package of gold on it consigned to the express company.

At the Majestic Theatre, Friday evening, February 25th.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY EVENT

ANNUAL WASHINGTON-LINCOLN BANQUET ONE OF THE GREAT OCCASIONS IN SOCIETY'S HISTORY

The Washington-Lincoln Banquet of the Charlevoix Historical Society was held at the Masonic Hall, Friday evening, February 18th, with the usual large attendance.

The music of the High School Orchestra announced the opening of the banquet hall, where in America's finest setting, the grand old Stars and Stripes, adorning every wall, handsomely decorated tables beautified by lighted candles, were inviting all to the evening's feast. Under the shadow of the flag the speakers found true protection, while its noble companion, the G. A. R., one was convincing proof that all was well.

A tantalizing reminder of Washington were the healthy young trees with veritable cherries while carved figures of Washington and his hatchet hovered safely around. Miniature sections of rail fences results of Lincoln's industry, with figures of the rail-splitter interpreted the meaning of the evening.

Following the benediction by Rev. C. E. Taggart, with "Buenas Aires," and all good cheer the feast was ushered in, "mind things and that more may come."

BASKET BALL

The Eagle Patrol basket ball team of Charlevoix defeated the Central Lake Scouts Saturday, February 19, by the score of 31 to 15. The score however does not indicate the evenness of the teams. Central Lake having a title the edge on team work, but much poorer than the Eagles in basket throwing. Many times they would get the ball under their basket and then be unable to score.

Many persons pronounced this game the best so far this season outside of the Independents and high school games, one reason being on account of the almost wholly absence of fouling, but nine being made during the entire game, four by the Eagles and five by Central Lake.

Hampton starred for the winners; Cameron for the losers.

Another red-letter event is booked for Friday night of this week at the rink—two matched games being on the program. The Harbor Springs Independents vs. Charlevoix Independents are to be represented by a team of Petoskey High is matched against Charlevoix High.

As the record now shows, Charlevoix High stands defeated by Petoskey High and the local team is out to get some scalps.

The Princess goes for the locket and finds it has been stolen. Carmencita, her maid, has stolen it and, being jealous of her rival, Junnita, for Jose's affections, has sold it to Gaines, an American art collector.

Political Gossip From Washington

The Ohio secretary of state rules that President Wilson must declare himself a candidate if delegates pledged to him are to be elected from the Buckeye State. He holds that a single note from President Wilson to him will be sufficient and that notes need be sent to all the candidates for delegates. And this is the fact of the fact that the President does not love to write notes.

For a second time, this administration has declared an embargo on munition shipments into Mexico. The first embargo was for the purpose of preventing Huerta from getting arms. That embargo was removed so that Villa could be supplied. Now the embargo has been established so that Villa cannot get fighting moral. And all this by a President who announced his intention of not interfering in Mexico, though he took possession of a Mexican city by force of arms and then withdrew.

A Washington correspondent says:—"The trip of the President is over and I do not think he has won a single member of Congress over to his plan of preparedness," said a Democratic member talking to a group of his colleagues. "We have ninety Democrats who are opposed to this military program of President Wilson, and so far as I know, there is not a faltering member in our ranks. When this matter comes up for consideration, I am confident every one of them will stand firm, for we all believe we are battling for a principle. The speeches of the President which often bordered on the hysterical, have not stirred the American people so far as I have been able to learn. I think the American people have got the idea pretty well into their heads that this was a political junket on the part of the President, and they have refused to be "fired up" by his beautiful rhetoric or his catchy expressions. This meeting we had in Washington during his absence, which was a protest against his plans and his methods, was mighty significant. The great theatre where it was held was packed to the doors and I think the enthusiasm and sentiment that was back of it so that occasion radiates the views of the great army of Democrats all over this country."

"If the Republican party comes out plain and straight for a reduction of improvement and further development of the rural mail service in its next national platform, it will get the votes of thousands and thousands of farmers in this country, many of whom have heretofore identified themselves with Democratic party," said a middle west Congressman on the Rural Delivery Committee. "Since the Wilson administration assumed control of the government, to the interest of what is termed economy, it has been curtailing, crippling and reorganizing the rural routes of the country. The question of service has not been considered. It was purely a question of saving money at the expense and to the detriment of the postal facilities of the people who live on the farms. Routes have been changed from places where facilities for through mail were good and hitched on to post offices where they had had no through mail at all. From one end of the country to the other this has caused dissatisfaction and grumbling and the farmers are up in arms over this policy. They know that rural delivery was created, fostered and developed by the Republican party, and if the party takes a strong stand in favor of improving it, they are going to get the rural vote all over this country."

Protection From Lightning

A slate roof on a house helps a lot to protect it from lightning. Sheet metal roofs, metal ornaments of size and gas or water pipes, if close to the roof, are bad. They may divert the course of the lightning bolt. In all such cases the roof drainage should be connected with the roof or with lightning rods work over though the latter be only a nuisance.

The Central Lake Construction and Lumber Co., a corporate company, has been formed for the purpose of manufacturing and selling building lumber of all kinds, sashes, doors, mouldings, roofing etc., and also to contract building of all kinds. The principal stock holders are O. P. Parker and Clyde Barber of Central Lake, and Ralph Watkins of Caledonia.

A terribly sad accident occurred last week at the home of Mr. Geo. Bradshaw over toward Central Lake. Mr. Bradshaw and his son were in the house getting ready to go out cutting wood, and thought to take the shot-gun along on chance of getting a rabbit or two. Geo. Bradshaw Jr., the son, was bending over to fasten his overshoes when in some way the father dropped the gun, which discharged and the load struck the son, shattering his arm and then entering his abdomen, inflicting injuries from which he died a few hours later. The father and mother are completely prostrated by the accident.

Petoskey News: The deal was closed Monday which dissolves the partnership of James Saigeon and John Ferris in the grocery firm of Saigeon & Ferris, which for twelve years has done business on East Mitchell street. Mr. Ferris has taken over the entire interests of Mr. Saigeon, who has purchased the Bay shore Mercantile company at Bay Shore of Frank Van Skoik, who has conducted the store there very successfully for nine years. The change in the ownership of both stores took place Monday and Mr. Saigeon has already gone to Bay Shore to take charge. He will not move his family there until spring but with the arrival of warm weather will occupy a residence in that village. All three of these men have been well known in the grocery business for many years and all have been successful. Mr. Van Skoick plans to take a needed rest as his health has not been the best for some time. He has not yet announced his plans further than that.

Philosophical Observation.

Hyacinths.

Hyacinths that have been forced in water are of no account after blooming. But those flowered in pots can be dried off gradually. Plant them in the open border and they will flower the following year out of doors. The flowers will likely be small, but even small hyacinths are attractive.

Toye rocked his head at both question and answer, but inclined it quickly as Camlet turned to him before proceeding.

"I went in and found Henry Craven lying in his chair. That's another—he was so I found him—lying just where he had fallen in a heap out of the leather chair at his desk. The top right-hand drawer of his desk was open, the key in it and the rest of his bunch still swinging! A revolver lay as it had dropped upon the desk—I had upset the ink—and there were cartridges lying loose in the open drawer, and the revolver was loaded. I swept it back into the drawer, turned the key and removed it with the bunch. But there was something else on the desk—that silver mounted truncheon—and a man's cap was lying on the floor. I picked them both up. My first instinct, I confess it, was to remove every sign of manslaughter and to leave the scene to be reconstructed into one of accident—suicide—any thing but what it was!"

He paused as if waiting for a question. None was asked. Toye's mouth might have been sewn up, his eyes were like hatpins driven into his head. The others two simply stared.

"It was a mad idea, but I had gone mad," continued Camlet. "I had buried the victim alive, and it couldn't change me that he was dead or dying. I didn't make him a white man, and neither did it necessarily blacken the poor devil who had probably suffered from him like the rest of us, and only strove him down in self defense. The revolver on the desk made that pretty plain. It was out of the way, but now I saw blood all over the desk as well; it was soaking into the blotter, and it reached the bottom out of my idea. What was to be done? I had meddled already; how could I give the alarm without putting myself away to that extent, and God knows how much further? The mere awful moment of the last came as I built up the alarm without; it was the ball outside the door! I remembered watching the thing on the floor as sec if it would move.

"Then I lost my head—absolutely. I turned the key in the door to give myself a few seconds grace or start. It reminded me of the keys in my hands. One of them was one of those little round branch keys. It seemed familiar to me even after an exile years. I looked up, and there was my father's Michael Angelo chest, with its little, round branch keyhole. I opened it as the outer door was knocked at and then tried. But my mad instinct of altering every possible appearance was too strong for me, stuck to me to the last. And I took the black watch and chain into the closet with me, as well as the cap and truncheon that I had picked up before.

"I don't know how long I was above ground, so to speak, but I knew my father's objects had been to make his retreat sound-tight, and I could guarantee a quarter-hour. My instinct was to be where I was when I came down, so I went back into the room. That encouraged me, and two or two and a half seemed telling how I got on through the foundations, because you know all about the hole I made myself as a boy in the floor under the cellars. It took some finding with single matches; but the fear of your news gives you eyes in your fingers, ends and elbows, too by Jove! The worst part was getting out at the other end, into the cellars; there were heaps of empty bottles to move, one by one, before there was room to open the manhole door and to scuttle over the slab; and I thought they rang like a peal of bells, but I got there all back again, and apparently nobody cared in the cellars.

"The big dog barked at me like blazes—his old friend, the other day—but nobody seemed to hear him either. I got to my boat, timed a fellow on the towing path to take it back and pay for it—why haven't the police got hold of him?—and ran down to the bridge over the weir. I stopped a bit car with a smart shaver smoking his pipe at the wheel; I should have thought he'd have come forward for the reward that was put up, but I pretended I was late for dinner I had in town, and I let him drop me at the Grand Hotel. He cost me a fiver, but I had on a waistcoat lined with notes, and I'd more than five sewn in a belt at Charing Cross. If you want to know, it was the time I had this gave me the whole idea of doubling back to Lambeth; I must have been half way up to town before I thought of it!

"He had told the whole thing as he always could tell an actual experience, that was one reason why it was so intire so lamentable at every point. But the elder man's sunken eyes had advanced from their socket to come intire amusement. And Hilton Toye laughed out loud when the end was reached.

"You figure some on our credulity!" was his first comment.

"I don't figure on anything from you, Toye, except a pair of handcuffs as a first installment!"

Toye rose in prompt acceptance of the challenge. "Seriously, Camlet, you ask us to believe that you did all this to screen a man you didn't have time to recognize!"

"I've told you the facts."

"Well, I guess you'd better tell them to the police." Toye took his hat and stick. Scruton was struggling from his chair. Blanche stood petrified, a dove under a serpent's spell, as Toye made for a sardonic bow from the landing door. "You broke your side of the contract, Miss Blanche! I guess I'm up to mine to complete."

"Wait!"

It was Scruton's raven croak; he had tottered to his feet.

"Sure," said Toye, "if you've anything you want to say as an interested party."

"Only this—he's told the truth!"

"Well, can he prove it?"

"I don't know," said Scruton. "But I can."

"You?" Blanche chimed in there.

"Yes. I did take that drug, if you don't mind Camlet." It was Blanche who got it for him, in an instant. "Thank you! I'd say more if my poisoner was worth having—but here's something that's listen to this, you American gentleman: I was the man you were after in Buenos Ayres, and in at that a minute; it was my second letter to him; the first was to Austria. In answer to some of my stuff, he was the full history of my downfall. I had a warrant to smuggle it out. That letter was my one chance."

"I know it by heart," said Camlet. "It was that and nothing else that made me leave before the shearing."

"To meet me when I came out!" Scruton explained in a hoarse whisper, darting over his shoulder at Toye's to that man, as I'd told him I should in my first letter! But you can't hit Dear things off to the day of the week; he'd told me where to write to him on the vessel without; he was in Naples, but that letter did not get the other door. "Well? Aren't you going too? You were near enough you see! I'm an accessory all right—he dropped his voice—"but I'd be principal if I could instead of him!"

But Toye had come back into the room, twinkling with triumph, over rubbish his hands. "You didn't see? You didn't see? I never meant to go at all; it was a bit of bluff to make him own up, and it did, too, bully!"

The couple gasped.

"You mean to tell me," cried Cass, let, "that you believed my story all the time?"

"Why, I didn't have a moment's doubt about it!"

Camlet drew away from the chuckling creature and his crafty glee. Blanche came forward and held out her hand.

"Will you forgive me, Mr. Toye?"

"Sure. If I had anything to forgive, it's the other way around, I guess. I'm glad you gave I did something to help." He edged up to the folding doors. "This is a twoman job, Camlet, the way I make it out. Guess it's my watch on deck!"

"The other's the way to the police station," said Camlet demerely.

Toye turned sullen on the word. "It's the way to hell, if Miss Blanche will forgive me! This is more like the other place, thanks to you, sir. Guess I'll leave the angels in charge!"

Angels or not, the pair were alone at last, and through the doors they heard a quivering croak of welcome to the rather human god from the American machine.

"I'm afraid he'll never go back with you to the bush," whispered Blanche.

"Scruton?"

"Yes."

"I'm afraid, too. But I wanted to talk somebody else out, too. I was trying to say so over a week ago, when you were talking about old Venus Potts. Blanche, will you come?"

(THE END.)

ONE ON THE FLOORWALKER

Presumably He Knew Duties of His Position, But He Was Not Proficient in Spelling.

The worst thing about the following is that it is true, and what's more, that it happened in one of Pittsburgh's stores.

The girl, stylishly attired, stepped up to the still more stylishly dressed floorwalker and inquired where she would find the chiffon. The floorwalker consulted a notebook. Her surprise came when he gravely told her that she did not keep chiffon.

"Why!" she gasped, "you cannot possibly mean that."

In her vagerness she stepped closer to the stylishly-attired man than Eleanor Gate says a stylishly-attired woman should, and looked over his shoulder at the notebook.

"Oh! I see," she said, flatly, as she turned off as ask the girl at the glove counter about the chiffons. The man has been looking under the s-a—Simmons Star.

Trapping Partridges.

How partridges are trapped in Virginia and North Carolina, in the winter is described as follows: A box measuring from 15 to 20 feet, and about eight inches high, is put down with stanchions, horizontally in the chicks, is an opening similar to the hoop nets for fishing, the opening in the net is cone-shaped, diminishing in size. The netter mounts a horse and starts at the distant side of the field, riding in a walk backward and forward, his objective point being the net. He encounters a bunch of birds they will run before the horse, but begins to so direct his course as to drive them to the net, being always careful not to flush them. When he reaches the net he dismounts cover the opening and enter, the birds running being similar to driving sheep into a pen. When the birds are safe the netter dismounts and secures his game.

Food by Proxy.

Most of us know some particular dish, the thought of which is so stimulated in us by reading about it. But the writing must be skillful, or it may actually spoil. The proper method of the stage produces the same effect, all smokers have experienced the almost overwhelming desire to puff when some actor, who is playing somebody lights a cigarette on the stage; these strange and rapid fissures can make of the fashionable theater when a party sits down at a table and is whirled through six courses in about five minutes, surrounded by champagne bottles in ice buckets and trays of liquors, have absurdly exciting effect.

Not a Nation of Singers.

In this country, though we have produced many fine voices, we have never become a nation of singers. There are, it is true, in most of the leading cities choral societies, but the singing of large groups of people is comparatively uncommon among us. Here is a matter for regret, for among all large nations of singers where there has been more or less training the effect is beautiful and inspiring. In fact, there are few things in music more impressive than the singing of hundreds of voices.

Throttling a Scourge.

Prediction is made by government officials that in a few more years typhoid fever will be almost as rare as smallpox. This prophecy is based on the rapidly increasing use of the vaccine and consequent immunization of entire localities from the disease.

"You Broke Your Side of the Contract, Miss Blanche."

New Party Dresses for Little Girls

Pretty dresses for little girls are made of the finest of cotton batiste and organdy, with crinkled taffeta is tiny and is available for their dressiest frocks. The blouse is made of yards of sheer white wash fabric, coupled with the dainteiest of lace and the elegance of handstitching makes dresses like those shown above always a happy choice.

The party frock shown on the pleased little maid at the left is made of the white net flounciny. Its lower edge is finished with small scallops and ranges of little embroidered flowers. A narrow ruffle of the edging is set on to the plain net underskirt and the full "slipover" with baby waist is worn over it. The sleeves are merely short ruffles of the edging.

A plain slip of pink chiffon taffeta is worn under the net, and a pink sash of satin massaline ribbon ends in a butterfly bow at the back. Of course a pink hair bow reminds one of a blossom, in the flaxen curls of its proud and happy wearer.

For the older girl a dress of white organdie is shown in which narrow val lace and hand embroidery appear to best advantage. This little frock is in two pieces, consisting of a short skirt made of two flounces set on to a long plain underbodice, and a straight hanging blouse finished with hand embroidery at the bottom, which falls over the sash. The blouse and the underbodice both fasten in the back.

The blouse is made with a small square yoke of val insertion, edged with lace, and into a deeper yoke of the organdie, which is covered with fine tucks. The body of the blouse is fulled into this yoke at the back and front and hangs in one length all round. Large uneven scallops follow the outline of the lower motifs which are embroidered at the bottom edge.

The two flounces on the underbodice which form the short skirt are edged with narrow val insertion and edging in fine quality. The insertion is set into the full, three-quarter length lingerie movement. She heard of marvelous healings and gifts, including the gift of tongues, and was very desirous of taking a proper attitude to the matter. She felt that a few scattered tetts were not enough, but that she should read the bible in a connected way for light. So, one night, after earnest prayer for guidance, she sat on the side of her bed, and holding at Matthew, read straight on till she had gone through the seventh chapter of Revelation, completing the New Testament next morning. She saw that minutes may even be of tragic origin and that they will characterize some things to be avoided in the last days. LOVE AND LAW

By Justine Wickersham

"The day of your success, Ransom dear!"

"You hopeful helper and unconquerable optimist!" returned the brother of Nettie Baird. "Don't hold your hopes too high. Instead, this may be the day of my downfall."

"O, never that, brother, dear!" cried the loving sister, turning quite pale at the sad, anxious face of her brother.

"Nettie," he said gravely, "this is the crisis. You know the unheard-of sacrifices we have both gone through to enable me to qualify for the bar. You remember the years of starving alone, waiting for clients who never came. Finally there comes to me the great Wyford case. The plaintiff is poor, the fee contingent—

"But a little fortune if you win the case."

"It has taken my last dollar to meet the court costs and expenses," continued Ransom. "And I am going to lose the case."

"Oh, Ransom!" uttered his sister in dire distress.

"Yes, I feel certain of that. You must never sigh, what I am going to say to you, but Judge Lindsay is a dishonest man and an unscrupulous judge."

"You shock me!" said Nettie.

"The fact is notorious among those who have suffered through his bench and paid for unjust decisions. I have been warned of this, I regret to Ransom gravely. "They say he will never again be appointed to the bench, but that the truth as to his rejection may not come out, so he has been secured and clever in covering up his nefarious deals.

"Ransom, it is almost impossible that a high servant of justice could be thus influenced."

"Did you notice yesterday, Nettie," proceeded Ransom, "that when the opposing counsel tried to bring up a point of law I made, the judge sustained him, for it seemed very sound to me? I knew I was right, but I never dreamed that they would deny an established point in legal jurisprudence.

"But the judge gave you until this morning to argue your authorities in your contention," suggested Nettie.

"Yes, because he knew it would be next to impossible for me to prepare them under the prescribed limit of time. The law library of the bar association was closed. As you know, I have no reference books myself. Business it would have been as all night task gathering up the information I needed."

"Oh, brother," exclaimed Nettie, "I forgot to tell you. When I was in the gallery of the courtroom yesterday listening to your case, a beautiful young lady sat next to me. She seemed as interested as I was. And who do you think it was?"

"How can I tell, Nettie?"

"It was Barbara Honeck Adams. She is a daughter of the dead Judge Ephraim Adams. Don't you know he you admire him? I told her we had his portrait here at home and how you worship him; moreover, she says she helped her father a great deal in his home legal work and knew all the legal atmosphere. When that point came up in your argument when the judge demanded precedents, she said that it was a pity you had not availed yourself of the opinions law library her father had left her."

Nettie walked with her brother to the courtroom, as she had done during the trial. Just at the door she met a young lady also entering the place, who smiled, advancing and shook her hand.

"Ransom dear, this is the young lady I told you about—Miss Adams."

"I am glad and proud to meet you, Miss Adams," said Ransom. "Your father's works on law have been great sources of help to me."

"Thank you," bowed the young lady and then she flushed slightly as she went on. "I hope you will not think presumption, but I was so interested in your case that after I got home I took every book I could find bearing on the point in dispute. You were right and the judge is wrong. I have taken the liberty of bringing you a recommendation of my father's, which she handed Ransom several folded sheets of paper closely written over.

An hour later when the case was reviewed and Ransom cited his authorities, the opposing counsel looked flustered and the judge positively scary. The latter was more conscious and unfair after that than ever, however. Finally the attorney for the defense introduced an unexpected witness. He swore to investigating certain points in the case, decidedly adverse to Ransom's client. From the start Ransom discerned that the man was a base perjurer.

His was unable to oppose any contradictory testimony. The odds of knavery and falsehood were too many for him, he realized. From that moment Ransom was sure that the case was lost.

He looked surprised as a ballf came from beyond the railing and handed him a folded note. Involuntarily he glanced up at the two young ladies in the gallery. From there his sister nodded and Miss Adams seemed to bow encouragingly. Ransom knew that the note must be from the latter. He opened it, to read the puzzling sentence:

"Ask the witness if he was an investigator five years since in the Evans bribery case. Then tell him that is all. Then say to the judge that you intend to recall the witness in its successful testimony."

When the opposing attorney had concluded his questioning, Ransom arose to his feet.

"Your honor," he spoke, not sure of his ground but resolving to obey this new friend of his extremity. "I wish to ask the witness one question. Were you an investigator in the Evans bribery case?"

"But a little fortune if you win the case."

"Yes, I feel certain of that. You must never sigh, what I am going to say to you, but Judge Lindsay is a dishonest man and an unscrupulous judge."

"You shock me!" said Nettie.

A HOME-MADE CHEST-WEIGHT.

The objection to the common form of chest-weight exercisers is that it cannot be fastened to a wall without injuring the plaster, is eliminated in the set shown below by reason of its being attached to the edge of a door.

The cross board A, to which the pulleys are attached (Fig. 1), should be prepared first. Cut this board 3 inches wide and 18 inches long. Get a pair of clothes-line pulleys, not screw pulleys, but the kind with "eyes" that fasten with staples. Attach these pulleys to the cross board, one near each end, and place the same distance down from the edge, as in Fig. 1.

Fasten a pair of strips 8 inches long to the back of board A (B, Fig. 2) placing them in the center of the length of the board, one inch above what will be the lower edge of the board, and spacing them two inches apart, or just far enough to allow the door to slip between. Strips B are provided to rest upon the door knobs for support of the cross board. Fasten them with nails driven through board A into their ends. Drive a nail into each of these strips near the outer ends (C, Fig. 2), and tie the end of a six-foot length of clothes line to one of these nails (Fig. 1).

To attach the chest-weight to a door, it is necessary to use a 10-foot edge of board A upon the door back, and strips B upon the door knobs. Place the rope attached to one of the nails C around the face of the door, around the hinged edge, beneath the lower hinge, back to the second nail, and fasten the second rope to the nail. To prevent board A from scratching the edge of the door, tack a piece of leather upon the edge.

The weights are made of tin cans filled with sand or earth, preferably

Part A is hinged to provide for the removal of mail. In the end of the box at C, cut an arch for the letter drop.

The arched top of the box is made by fastening the pieces of cardboard D (Figs. 2 and 3) to each end of the box, and then attaching a long piece of cardboard to the tops of these. Slash the curved edge of pieces D, and turn them down for flaps to glue to the sides of the box.

Have your little brother or some small boy friend play the part of Dan Cupid (see Fig. 5). Get a school bag for a mail sack, a pair of cardboard wings (Fig. 6), a cardboard bow and arrow (Fig. 7), and a postman's cap (Fig. 8) are needed.

Make the cardboard band A of the cap to fit the boy's head, and cut tabs on the edge of the top piece B to turn down and glue to the inside of the band. Also cut tabs on the upper edge of piece C, and glue them to the inside edge of band A. Make the insert D of red paper, letter "Cupid's Mail" upon it, and glue it to band A.

The postman should collect the mail previous to the serving of refreshments, and sort it over, placing his one pile the valentines placed for girls, and in another pile those posted for boys. Then, before the girls' valentines in his bag, he should distribute them among the boys. Each boy should then be called on to read whose name is written upon his valen-time. When the partners have been selected in this way, the postman should deliver the boys' valentines to the girl partners of the boys whose names are written upon the backs.

A heart hunt is a jolly game for helping the fun at the valentine party. There should be large hearts, small hearts, half hearts and quarter hearts, and these should be concealed in every accessible hiding place, prior to the guests' arrival. Count one point for each heart recovered.

Make heart-shaped candy boxes like that shown in Fig. 9 for the prizes at the supper table. Cut the top and bottom out of heavy red paper, making the bottom shaped like a rectangle with four tabs as indicated in Fig. 10. Cut little tabs upon the edge of the bottom piece (Fig. 11), bend up these tabs, and paste a strip of paper to them to form the sides of the box (Fig. 12).

TURKEYS ACT AS SNAKE HUNTERS

Spot Reptiles, Give Alarm and the Ranch Owner Does the Rest.

A TRUE SNAKE STORY

The Writer Admits It Himself, and Its Anyone Who Doubts the Tale Its Will Exhibit the Farm as Proof.

Pueblo, Colo.—Nineteen rattlesnakes in ten days is the score being written one of an actual score that stands to the credit of Mrs. Robert White of the Siloam country.

Last summer Mrs. White raised turkeys and depressed rattlesnakes. Over 200 turkeys perched the roosts and ridge poles of the White farm during the dark hours last fall, but all summer long during the daytime they wandered afield. With the first shriek of the coming dawn there were streaks, alas, of turkeys. For miles and wide they skirmished pasture and plain for grasshoppers and, it may be said, parenthetically, no one complained of a shortage in the grasshopper crop last fall. They were everywhere in evidence—a turkey's paradise. But the White turkeys, and there were hundreds, did not, it is observed, the event-to-be-looked-for service of them.

Now a turkey and a rattlesnake are diametrical elements, particularly the turkey. The yell that a turkey emits on stumbling upon a rattlesnake is "a nation to snakes" and adds shrieking shriek runs the entire gamut of an awful horror, despair, protest and vengeance, to terminate in a piercing climax of strident turkey defiance. It was done it again, and it keeps it up, and other turkeys come and merge their united voices into one prolonged wall of a hopeless agony that would rout barnacles from the keel of the ship that never comes in. Then they form a cordon of turkeys in an active state of chronic eruption, so to speak, around the reptile and sing the second verse and the chorus and then a mixture of verse and chorus and they keep that up, individual turkeys throwing handsprings and high bawls over the scene of action until the snake doesn't know whether it's a fool or a houndtuck.

Scored Every Time.

Well, when the White turkeys got into one of these rattlesnake glood dances Mrs. White always heard the shriek, and she'd sally to the rescue, knowing the snake would prove a merciful boon to mankind in reality and immediate annihilation.

The turkeys were always bound about it, never raising any war alarm, but on 19 special occasions within a period of ten days they went through a paroxysm such as the Spectator has attempted to describe and they scored a rattlesnake every time.—Pueblo Spectator.

WOMAN SUES FOR $11,000

Kansas City Housekeeper Demands Back Wages in Court Action Against Employer.

Kansas City, Mo.—A suit for $10,000 damages for personal injuries and for $1,025 in back wages was brought in the circuit court against James W. S. Peters, a lawyer, who lives at the Innsbrunda by Agnes Crampton, his housekeeper.

In her petition Mrs. Crampton says she began to work for Mr. Peters July 1, 1910, and continued in his employ until July 30, 1913.

According to the terms of her employment she says, Peters was to have paid her $15 a week. She declares he paid her only small sums, but promised her from $100 to $125 a month if she would not leave.

Firemen Rescued a Pet Cat.

Columbus, O.—Firemen responded to a recent alarm at Flora and Dechter avenues, where an excited woman could only point to the top of a tree in her back yard where her pet cat was roosting in apparent comfort. The firemen rescued the feline which, it was claimed, had been in the air 36 hours.

Mangled by Her Cat.

Newark, N. J.—Mrs. William Yorts of this city was attacked by her cat the other day and so badly bitten that she will be disfigured for life. Mrs. Yorts's pet got into a fight with a neighbor's cat, and, when its mistress tried to stop the conflict with a basket of cold water, turned on her.

Woman's Brigade Saved Home.

Milwaukee.—A backer brigade, headed by Mrs. Edgar Stanger, her maids and a few laddie women, recently prevented the destruction by fire of the Stanger home here. The women were clad in kimonos and nighties.

ADRIFT IN OPEN BOAT FOR 34 DAYS

Horrible Experience of Six Malays Who Were Driven Out to Sea in Storm.

Manila, P. I.—Thirty-four days at sea in an open boat with very little to eat or drink was the horrible experience of six Malaya subjects of the Netherlands, who, while trading from Sanaiter to Menado, were driven out to sea by wind and waves.

Two died from starvation and the other four reached Sasitan in a most emaciated and exhausted condition, where they were given every possible care. The unfortunate men were allowed ward removed to Zamboanga and are slowly recovering from their terrible trip.

It seems that the men belong in Menado and had been in Sangiter on business. The wind became stronger as they got well started on their journey home and the waves rose correspondingly and soon they were unable to control the vinta in which they had embarked and were forced to ride with the storm, which lasted for several days.

They had a small store of eatables and some drinking water, but the former was soon exhausted and the water supply also dwindled. Two of the men were unable to withstand the tortures of lack of sustenance and died a few days after the storm abated. They were buried overboard and the remaining four almost crazed, endeavored to make land. They drifted and sailed for many days and at last, when hope had almost fled, sighted the town of Basilan. When they arrived they were so weak that they had to be assisted off the vinta and it was some time before they could give a connected account of themselves or of their trip.

DENIED KISS; PULLS A GUN

Georgia Treatment Follows Engaged Couple's Quarrel on Way Home From a Dance.

Milena, Ga.—Refused a farewell kiss by Miss Lula Stanton after she had told him she intended to postpone their wedding, which had been announced recently, Levi Stribbling shot at the girl as she ran toward her father's home and Stribbling followed. He was met by the girl's father, who shot and killed him as he was again trying to shoot at Miss Stanton.

Stribbling and the girl had been to a dance and quarreled on the way home. Stribbling obtained a revolver and returning to the Stanton home, called the girl to the door and asked for a farewell kiss. She refused and the tragedy followed.

"YELLOW DOG" IS NOT LIBEL

Oklahoma Judge Says in Newspaper Case That Term Might Be One of Endearment.

Muskogee, Okla.—It is not libelous to refer to a man in a newspaper article as "a yellow dog," according to the decision of District Judge R. P. de Graffenreid. Charles Hubert Jones filed a suit for $5,000 damages against a local newspaper for an alleged libelous story printed about him. The attorneys in the case frankly admitted its merits down to the question of whether referring to a man as "a yellow dog" was a libel. The court after two weeks, announced the decision that it could not mean a "yellow dog" might be so applied as to mean a term of endearment instead of a

MAN IS LOCKED IN BOX CAR

Suspects for Week on Apples and Is Arrested Trying to Cut Way to Freedom.

Kansas City, Mo.—To be locked for nearly a week in total darkness in a box car loaded with apples, is what wholly on the fruit during that time, but was arrested while trying to cut his way to freedom, was the experience which James McMahon, a laborer, has just passed through.

Jerome Hodson, a special officer, passing a sealed car in the K. & M. yards when a queer scraping sound inside attracted him. Yelling an inquiry, Hodson received a reply, seemingly whispered.

Hodson unlocked the door, and McMahon, weakened and emaciated, lay in the center of a pile of cores on the inside.

WONDERFUL PROGRESS IN CANADA

It Is Over the Hill—Splendid Bank Clearings, and the Crop Returns Reveal Vast Possibilities for the Future.

"There are opportunities for investment in Canada now that may prove attractive to American capital. Land prices in the west are low and wages less than on this side of the line, and whatever the outcome of the war, the future of the Dominion is assured as one of prosperity in the development of its vast resources." Chicago Tribune.

A short time ago the Canadian government asked for private subscriptions to a loan of fifty million dollars. Less than a month was given for completion of the subscription. On November 25th, the day upon which subscriptions were to cease, it was found that 110 million dollars had been subscribed or 60 million dollars more than the amount asked. If there were any so pessimistic as to imagine that Canada was passing through a period of hard times the wonderful showing of this subscription should put aside all doubts of Canada's rapidly increasing prosperity.

The bank clearings of Winnipeg for 1916 were a billion and a half of dollars. Think of it, a billion and a half, there were the bank clearings of the great city of Winnipeg, Western Canada. Regina, Saskatoon and Moose Jaw also show big increase in clearings. The lumbering industry shows that the city has done the biggest business in the history of its lumber business in its history in 1915. A great deal of the lumber and clearings, representing business on a per capita basis of over $7,000 per head for every man, woman and child in the city, and has gone ahead of big manufacturing cities like Detroit, and runs a close second to Detroit. It has also been the big year for cattle in the middle west cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul, and has exceeded Los Angeles, Seattle and other shipping centers. It is now side by side with the ten leading cities of North America in amount of bank clearings. But because the war has made Canada recover quickly from a natural economic depression it does not follow that, at the end of the war, the country must suffer a relapse, and straightway go back to a state of inactivity and hard times.

Canada's undeveloped fields should prove a mighty factor after the war in adjusting the country's business from one period to another. The staggering figures of this year's crop, showing increases in production of 50 per cent over last year, give a slight idea of the future wealth stored in vast stretches of prairie plain yet uncucked by the plow. The Northwest Grain Dealers' Association on September 1 estimated that the wheat crop of the three Prairie Provinces would amount to 250,800,000 bushels. On November 1 that estimate was increased to 307,220,000 bushels. The Dominion government on September 13 estimated the Western wheat crop at 275,772,250 bushels, but on October 13 those figures were changed to 304,200,000 bushels.

Monetary Returns for the Western Crop.

And the amount of money which the west is receiving for its grain has not yet been wholly appreciated. Up to the 15th of December the Canadian sent had received from 179 million bushels for 193 million bushels of its grain crop, of which 149 million bushels are wheat, 40 million bushels of No. 1 Northern wheat for September 30th, and 34 million bushels, 94 cents, and for the first three weeks of November 41 million, on the 15th of December there was fully

PERE MARQUETTE

How there came to be a Pere Marquette Railroad

"As it stands today, the Road embraces 41 lines originally entirely separate. These lines gradually grew into three small systems—the Flint & Pere Marquette in eastern Michigan, the Chicago & West Michigan in western and the Detroit, Grand Rapids & Western in the central part of the state. These three systems were consolidated in 1900 to form the Pere Marquette Railroad.

A FEW FACTS

"The Pere Marquette Railroad didn't 'just happen'. It is the result of a steady growth due to manifest need. The little lines couldn't furnish connected service—consolidation resulted.

AND A FEW THOUGHTS

Today we have through service to nearly all the principal cities of the state. Would we return to the old order of things? Not we! This Railroad is here today by virtue of the efforts of some of the best men Michigan ever had. We of this day cannot know of their struggles, their determined perseverance, their sacrifices, their indomitable courage and heroism. But the bands of steel stand for all these.

"This is Michigan's Railroad. It serves us in Michigan principally, and it must be conserved in order that it may continue to serve us as it should. It needs your word of encouragement. It needs your business. It needs your help in securing adequate rates. These things will enable the Road to so maintain itself as to guarantee its future on a basis which will meet your transportation demands and promote the progress and development of the state. We are doing everything possible to bring about this result. Are you doing your part?

AUTHOR NOT WISELY GUIDED

Book May Have Deplorable Effect on Humanity, in the Possible Passing of the Fat Man.

An American author who has made a name for himself in American letters threatens to upset the good work of an eighteen-year dream the food a fat nervous man indulges in at his meals with "too, too, solid flesh." Fat men—there are, of course, no fat women—who have adopted the generous Thompson regimen assert that they are steadily developing in avoirdupois and yet are enjoying bountiful repasts. It is no wonder.

The fat man is the delight of the world. He is universally conceded. The fat man is a philosopher, despite what Shakespeare makes Caesar say, by inference, in his expressed desire to have about him "fat, sleek-headed men," complaining that the lean and hungry Cassius "thinks too much." The fat man exudes a joyous, unctuous optimism that inspires and cheers all about him. He thinks, however, that he would prefer to be thin, not realizing the origin of his blessings. The only thing that has prevented his becoming thin is the fact that most systems of diet require a sort of starvation—and his provender is more dear to him than a sylph-like form.

But now that he may eat luxuriously and grow thin he is likely to desert the society that has profited by his beneficent spirit and become skinny, unimpressive and pessimistic. Then in time of stress and trial thin, worried people will have no billowy shoulder upon which to weep, no fat philosopher to encourage, sustain, console. In time of trouble a fat man is the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. He is a fortress against the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune—though Falstaff, fat and scant of breath, strangely failed to take advantage of his obesity.

One tremolos to think what the world will be when the fat man becomes extinct. Yet the facts must be faced in all their horrors. When the fat man has grown lean this will be a waste and desert world, given over to bony cynics who will howl in the high places and preach the gospel of despair. Therefore, the rash author is entreated to take his baleful book off the market.—Chicago News.

Ivory comes mainly from the African elephant, though the tusks of elephants and of the hippopotamus and the walrus are also used. The average weight of a tusk is about twenty pounds, but they are found weighing three times as much.

Laughable Mistake.

A very popular preacher once had a brother so much like him that few people knew one from the other. One day he went to see his aged parents, and the occasion being some family festival, he expected his brother to be there likewise. On entering the room he stepped forward to greet his brotherself all the heartiness which a long separation engendered, and found, from a mirror at the other end of the room, that he was offering his hand to himself!

HOT REPLY TO ATTACK ON OSBORN

SOO MAN DECLARES HE'S GOING TO CONTINUE TO MAKE TROUBLE FOR FREE PRESS OWNER AND HIS CROWD

SAYS F.P. REFUSED TO PRINT ANSWER

In a letter which has been sent to all Michigan newspapers, Chase S. Osborn of the Soo replies to a recent editorial attack upon him which was featured in the Detroit Free Press. The Free Press editorial, Mr. Osborn's reply and his reasons for submitting his reply to the Michigan press, follow:

To the Editor:

February 8, 1916, the Detroit Free Press published an editorial attack upon me, double-leaded, top of first column, editorial page.

To the attack I replied as follows:

February 10, 1916.

Editor, Detroit Free Press:

It is a long way to Sault Ste. Marie. But nevertheless the Free Press February 8 got here, with its double-leaded top-of-first-column editorial.

You say I am a "defunct political personality." Why then that double shotted editorial? Hope the grand old F. P. isn't growing anaemic. Also that phrase epithet "defunct political personality" is neither original, nor new, nor mordant. They flung it at Lincoln after the Lincoln Douglas campaign, and they battered McKinley's teeth with it just before he was president, and they harpooned Roosevelt with its dull barbs three years ago. It is only very recently the republican party was accused of being dead, and that has been said of Bryan almost forever.

However, when you say I am "a troublemaker," you come nearer the mark. Once Mr. Stair called me a murderer, or made some such trifling charge. But written down as a trouble maker forces a confession. I am one. I have made trouble for Mr. Stair upon more occasions than one. I made trouble for the Royal Ark gang of saloon keepers when Mr. Stair was their backer and public spokesman. I made trouble for organized boose in Michigan when Mr. Stair was defending it. I made trouble for that notorious grafting fraud, the Michigan Bonding Company, while Mr. Stair was its partisan. I made trouble for the despicable Vote Swappers' League of Detroit, when Mr. Stair was a member of it. I made trouble for the ambulance chasers and ill-fame in Michigan and helped to pass a Workingmen's Compensation law. I made trouble for the big gamblers at Mr. Clemens and Mackinac and for the tinhorn gamblers at the county fairs. I made trouble when I enforced the two-cent passenger fare law, and made the rich tax dodgers pay their taxes and among them nearly trapped the sly Mr. Stair.

I have always made trouble when the Steel trust was trying to run Michigan as a private corporation, and I expect to keep on doing so.

In fact, while I was governor I made trouble for all the political grafters and official recreants, swatted the disease-laden political blowfly in Detroit, and made trouble for every noxious human insect in Michigan.

I have been a consistent Republican all of my life, come of Republican and abolition ancestry, and hope to be a Republican as long as I live.

Action is the joy of life and service the source of the deepest satisfaction. I have had sweet taste of both and I am happy. In fact, if Mr. Stair will reform, I will be his friend.

Yes, I am one kind of a troublemaker for certain people and I am very proud of it.

I was a defeat for Michigan and not for me when, in a three-cornered contest in which all the lawless and the lawless-minded were supporting Stair and progressives did not vote, I was not elected.

Yours truly,
CHASE S. OSBORN.

My letter to the Free Press was sent by both ordinary and registered mail. They refused to print my reply.

In the days of chivalry even the most characterless knight would refuse to joust against a fellow knight who was unarmed, and both knights were always provided with weapons. Mr. Stair printed an attack upon me in his paper, and, rhetorically, to put it mildly, as to refuse to print my reply. In this he cannot be considered a fair adversary.

I am sending you the editorial and my reply in order that you may know the facts of the situation.

Yours respectfully,
CHASE S. OSBORN.

Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan,
February 16, 1916.

Caucus will be held Thursday, March 9, 1916 at 1 o'clock p. m. at the Marion Township Hall for the purpose of nominating officers for the ensuing year, and transacting any other business that may come before the meeting.

D. C. NETTLETON EXPIRES SUDDENLY

PASSING OF CIVIL WAR VETERAN AND PIONEER OF CHARLEVOIX COUNTY

David C. Nettleton died suddenly Saturday night as he would have wished to do—painlessly and surrounded by his comrades of old Baxter Post.

It was on the occasion of a social gathering of the few remaining local veterans of the civil war at the home of J. M. Felix, on Mason street. A lunch had been served, and the party was seated in the sitting room, and Mr. Nettleton was reading aloud an article appropriate to the occasion, when he collapsed and expired instantaneously. At midnight the remains were taken to the family residence on Dixon avenue.

Deceased was born in Ohio in 1840, and was raised to young manhood in that locality, learning the trade of wagon-maker. While yet a young man he responded to "the call of the wild," went west and was prospecting in the mountains when the war broke out. He at once enlisted in the 2d Colorado Cavalry, which was attached to the western army, in which he served until the close of the war. During the latter part of 1866 he was in command of a detachment of army scouts on Indian service, and encountered many dangers. When his term of enlistment expired he was offered a commission to continue in that service, but declined.

He soon after came back East, and in 1867 he located on a homestead near the head of the south arm of Pine Lake. He disposed of the homestead after a year's residence there coming to Charlevoix, where he erected a wagon shop and resumed work at his trade. Many of the older settlers will remember the old shop on the south alley corner opposite the present Hotel Michigan. The building still stands on the same alley, further back.

Possessed of an expansive intellect, he soon abandoned the drudgery of the workshop and applied himself diligently to the study of surveying and draughting, which work naturally led him into broader field of endeavor, and at the time of his death he was the owner of the only complete private set of abstract records in the county, and it was in this work that he had chiefly devoted himself for the past fifteen years, except now and then taking the field with the transit.

In 1870 he was married to Fannie, only daughter of the late John S. and Phoebe Dixon. Mrs. Nettleton died in 1890. In 1892 he was married to Rosa Saunders, who survives him. Mrs. Nettleton, of Traverse City, a daughter by his first marriage, and two sons, Douglas, of this city, and Arthur, of Gary, Ind., by the second union.

To say that D. C. Nettleton was the soul of honor seems but a mere platitude. During an intimate acquaintance with him covering a period of more than forty-five years, we can truthfully assert that we have never found a flaw in his character. Differing with him at times on important questions of national economic interest, we could never ascribe to him aught but honesty of motive and sincerity of conviction. He was a rare intelligence, and his high ideals of human welfare, at times, led him almost to the borderland of Utopia. He was an omnivorous reader, and his mind was "pinetar to receive but mete to retain." A striking element of his character was that of intense patriotism. He loved his country and on every occasion he honored its flag. He was an honor to American citizenship.

The funeral was from the residence on Wednesday afternoon, Rev. C. E. Taggart officiating.

County Normal Notes

Catherine LaLonde spent Wednesday at home last week.

The class is making drawings of the eye and ear in psychology.

Miss Wilhelmina Eastcott, of Ellsworth, visited the normal last Wednesday afternoon.

Florence Maddaugh taught the third and sixth grade arithmetic in the training room during Miss Hines absence.

During the absence of Miss Hines the normal class did observation work among the grades in the Central building.

Miss Hines attended the National Educational Association at Detroit last week and we feel very proud of the fact that she was one of the speakers.

The new set of practice teachers are: Rena Carroll, Chart Case, Catherine LaLonde, sixth grade reading; Mary Boice and Sadie Donkey, third grade reading.

The normal class was favored with a talk on Mount Vernon last week by Miss Whiting. She has had the pleasure of visiting the beautiful home and her talk inspired each member of the class with a desire to also visit the historic spot.

The normal class was invited to a potluck supper last week at the home of Marcia Goss. A very enjoyable time was spent by everyone present and the sleigh-ride formed no small part of the day's pleasure.

BUTTARS BUSTS TRADITION AT HISTORICAL GATHERING

CHARLEVOIX PIONEER SAYS SUPPOSED MARQUETTE TRAIL NEVER EXISTED

Sessions Said to Be Most Enthusiastic Ever Held By Organization in Mid-Winter

"The Marquette trail is only a myth," said Archibald Buttars of Charlevoix, oldest living pioneer of northern Michigan, in a talk before the eleventh regular mid-winter meeting of the State Pioneer and Historical society at Petoskey last week. Mr. Buttars said when he came to Petoskey the trail which is now marked by a handsome boulder erected by the D. A. R., was nowhere to be seen, the only path used by the Indians being a trail along the water's edge. Father Marquette, if he ever traversed the spot marked by the boulder, did so in the latter part of the seventeenth century and the trail was never known as the Marquette trail until so name by Captain H. O. Rose about 50 years ago.

Judge Failthorp also shattered another supposition long considered a fact when he said there had been established a saw mill and grist mill at McGulpin's Point, near Mackinaw City in 1798 or 1800, and a land grant of 800 acres given by the government to Patrick McGulpin. It had been long considered as a fact that no land grant had been issued to white settlers in the region before about 1805.

Clarence E. Bennett, society president, says this was the largest and most enthusiastic mid-winter meeting in the history of the society, nearly 1,000 persons being present for each session. The Emmet county society is making permanent historical records under the leadership of Judge B. T. Halstead, H. S. Babcock, Mrs. Ethel R. Pasquille and others, confining everying to facts which can be verified.

Enos Petoskey, last surviving son of old Chief Petoskey, for whom the city of Petoskey was named, and Thomas Petoskey, grandson of the old chief, appeared in historical costume at the various sessions.

WILL GET FISH HATCHERY---MEBBE!

NECESSITY RECOGNIZED BY THE FEDERAL FISH COMMISSION—APPROPRIATION ASKED FOR

While the little fishes are being hatched by the millions down at the local auxiliary hatchery the fact is being driven home by Congressman Scott that the usefulness and ultimate profit of artificial propagation of lake fish for the fishing grounds of the straits and island region demands the establishment of a full hatchery to take the place of the present branch Charlevoix hatchery, and Mr. Scott has introduced a bill to appropriate $60,000 for that purpose.

The proposition is endorsed by the federal fish commission and has been reported favorably by the House fish commission.

As the work is now conducted the total fall gathering of trout and white fish eggs is shipped in trays to the main hatchery at Northville and returned here later for hatching; and still later for the spring planting of the fry on the grounds. All this means the expense of transportation two ways and a certain percentage of loss of fertilized eggs.

It is conceded that Charlevoix is the logical location for a fully equipped hatchery. It is the headquarters of the Booth and Bentel wholesale plants, which fact alone emphasizes the argument from the straits on the north to Manitou Islands on the south, which takes in both Traverse bays and the Fox and Beaver islands. Charlevoix is the Gibraltar of the lower end of Lake Michigan, again this fact is clinched by the existence of the auxiliary plant here.

The late superintendent Frank Clark years after year strongly urged the establishment of a hatchery here, and his successor, Mr. Thayer has been equally zealous in the matter.

It looks now as if the matter will go through in good shape.

THE BLANCHARD STORE

The grand opening of the splendid new Blanchard Hardware Co. store will occur Saturday, March 4th, and promises to be a big event.

We have thought it best to defer a general "write-up" of the store until our next issue, when the opening will be included in the work, which will embrace photo views of both exterior and interior.

Our readers will readily concede that a complete story of the enterprise in one issue will be better than a division of the work in two issues.

SEVEN and one-half acres, close in will sell at a bargain; well located. Call on or telephone, H. S. MARSHA.

Oven for Testing Sharpnel.

To facilitate the testing of shrapnel there has been devised a thermostatically-controlled electric oven which is now in use in one of the government arsenals in Pennsylvania. In the testing of shrapnel shells it is necessary that a temperature of 120 degrees Fahr. be maintained continuously for a period of 24 hours. In the new electric furnace the control of temperature is secured by means of a thermostat which breaks the heating circuit when the temperature exceeds the limit set and again makes it when the temperature has been lowered to the required degree. Arcing across the contact points has been reduced to a minimum by means of a condenser shunted across them. It is claimed that the temperature of the oven is in a continuous test of 24 hours did not vary more than one degree.

Well Divided Wealth.

In few countries is wealth more evenly distributed than in France, where people are now putting their savings into the war loan. Most men are rightly considered to have acquired a certain degree of comfort when they own the house they live in, and M. de Foville, in "L'Alsatian en France," tells us that 61 per cent of the rural population of the region live in their own houses, whilst in certain districts over 80 per cent are thus housed. Small wonder that our allies are the best taxpayers in the world, a summons for raise and taxes in Prussia being almost unknown.—London Chronicle.

On the Field of Honor.

In a field in the Department of the Aisne, where the English were beaten in September, 1914, some of our territorials discovered two isolated mounds covered over with grass and surmounted by wooden crosses, one of which bore the word "Tin" and the other the word "Rubbish." Greatly affected, our territorials scattered flowers, of which they made bouquets, which they promptly placed upon the mounds. Then, with a trembling hand they wrote upon the crosses this inscription: "Dead on the Field of Honor!" There the incident remained until one dark woman an officer, who understood French, lifted the soil broken up and covered in one of the mounds many empty cans, and in the other a lot of worn-out clothing.—Le Cri de Paris.

Soldier Leaves Fortune to the Poor.

The Koelnische Zeitung reports that Dietrich Hemiger, a wealthy business man of Osnabruck and sergeant in one of the Westphalian reserve regiments, has left his entire fortune of $80,000 to the poor of his native town. The gentlemanly man was killed in France in September. When he went to the front he deposited his last will with a notary.

PETOSKEY FISHERMEN ON ICE OFF CROSS VILLAGE

Some Petoskey people probably wonder what attracts so many Petoskey fishermen to Cross Village, says the News, but if they could hear all the fish stories coming from that fishing village in winter they would at once know the crop of "pipe dream" tobacco had been good.

During the past few days the fishing has not been good and the fishermen lay it to the moon. Some people may wonder at this, but those fishermen who do their fishing by the moon signs usually are very "lucky" fishermen.

One man writes from Cross Village explaining that in the "light of the moon" the fish stay in deep water and are hard to get. He reports Sherman and George Houts good fishermen but that these men have not caught the fish the moon changes again. He reports Sherman Houts having secured several trout weighing from ten to twelve pounds each and that George Houts hooked a monster but he got away.

Many of the fishermen have gone to Crane Island and are spearing. With open water—"blue moon" the Indians call it—in sight off Shilagalee lightHouse and an east wind many of the fishermen stay close to shore. Many of the fishermen use wind breaks and few of them have shanties as do those fishing on the bay here.

One fellow who is fishing there told a story the other day of having met one of the fishermen returning toward shore during a storm a few days ago while another party was just going out. He said he was going home and "Rubbish" Greatly affected, our territorials scattered flowers, of which they made bouquets, which they promptly placed upon the mounds. Then, with a trembling hand they wrote upon the crosses this inscription: "Dead on the Field of Honor!" There the incident remained until one dark woman an officer, who understood French, lifted the soil broken up and covered in one of the mounds many empty cans, and in the other a lot of worn-out clothing.—Le Cri de Paris.

A STORY OF THE GREAT NORTHWEST

CHAPTER I.

Out of the Vine Maples.

Silets sat, her knees drawn up to her chin, on the flat top of a fir stump. Beside her lay Coonsah, lousy mustie on huge paws, his eyes as pale as the girls own dahs. They were bill-bred both. Perhaps that account of for the delight both found in the solitude of this sattle, where they could look down toward the west on the feathery, green sea of close-packed pine and fir, of spruce and hemlock—and toward the east on the narrow strip of tide-water slough and the unpainted shacks of the lumber camp huddled above its rollway. It was the magnificent timber country of the great Northwest.

Silets was wondering, as she always did, how the mountain rat to the south, how far it was to that Prince of whom she had heard so much from the tramp loggers who came and went with the seasons, their "turkers" on their backs and the "woman" being the irresponsible forever tugging at their concentric cinch.

Over the facing ridge she knew that the cold Pacific roared and coaxed on its white fangs with they tons to the hill of Vancouver isle. She could look in imagination when the pines were still; yet she had never seen it.

She had pictures of it in her mind many pictures. She knew well how it would look when the wind set in—a gray floor, a world of it, that seemed with the cross-current and a tardy sun. Of the cities she had no clear pictures. They were artificial man-made, therefore alien to her, who knew only nature, though she had listened intently to romances from every corner of the globe; for Dolly's lumber camp had seen a super-list.

It all resolved itself into their dreams when she sat on the edge of a fir stump, or, better, sat in the so called cloud high alcoves of the very spot of this little place.

There had been no sun, neither today nor for many days; and yet there was an unemphatic suggestion of spreading night as if shadows forewarned Silets had longed for a break, one of those short pageants when the sun should shoot for a moment into the gloom, transfiguring the world. Now, as she scanned the west, the dog sat dreily on her knee, her pink tongue drooping with his huge head thrust forward, his nondescript ears awaiting. A hundred feet below in a tangle of vine maples a man was laboring. Five only the slim trees parted and out of their tangle struggled a horse, a mannikin—Silets knew the little nostrils and full, excited eyes. After every few steps it rocked to the right or left with the instinct of the mountain horse to stagger and recover balance on the uphill side. It paused a moment, panting, with its head hung, the man in the saddle pulled it sharply back.

With the first sight of the intruder the girl on the high stump had sprung up, leaning forward, a frowner gathered in her face. It was the horse that caused it. Somehow was it fine within her and sympathetic and her heart beat hard. She stripped her braids tight in both hands and sat-lowed.

"Blunderer," she said aloud. "Oh, the blunderer!"

Then she cupped her hands at her lips and called down: "Hi, hi, man! He knows how to climb! Let him alone!"

The man looked up startled and tightened his grip on the rein. The gallant animal went down upon its sides, rolling completely over, to lodge, for one moment, against the trees, man swung sideways out of the saddle, facing humanity with a splendid grin.

Before he could gather himself for action the girl tore down upon him.

"What have you done?" she cried wildly, "what have you done to it?"

She dropped on her knees and her hands went fluttering over the black head in a very passion of pity, touching the white star on the forehead, smoothing the quivering nostrils.

"Why didn't you let him climb his own way? He knows—he's a homer, a pacer. Nothing could go straight up!"

She raised her eyes to him and he saw they were burning behind a film of tears. He saw also what gave him a strange feeling of shock a faint, blue tracery extending from the left corner of her lips downward nearly to the point of the chin, a sharply broken fragment of a scattered design. Her eyes were very dark and her hair, pulled after the first fashion of women, was straight and very dark also.

"Blunderer!" he said, "I'm sorry."

"Come in, Mr. Sandry—you're just in time."

Dolly turned back to the lighted room.

"Silets, give Mr. Sandry my place Harrison, I'll have to take your filing shed for tonight. Tomorrow we'll fix things in better shape."

The sawyer, an important personage and one to be conciliated, frowned in his plain, but the foreman had lost sight of him. He reached out a huge, hard hand and took the bridle-rein from the newcomer.

Already this man was standing inside the rude building, with a high-headed air of force, of personality that made itself felt in the most stolid nature present. He glanced down the double line of faces and for a second, just a fractional, fleeting moment, seemed to hesitate. Then he laid his hat on the small table, walked round to Dolly's empty seat, swung a leather putter and a well-built shoe over the bench and sat down. He was in place and a vague feeling of adjustment or solidity accompanied him as if he was there, as he said, to stay. Every man in the room felt it, and one of those strange sensations of portent communicated itself to them, as when the everyday skirr of life come to a turn in the road.

Dolly's was on the eve of a change.

The girl was putting a thick white plate, hot from boiling water, before him, deftly laying the waiting cutlery, pushing back an intruding dish

It Was a Call That Demanded.

There was an air of detachment about her. No sparks flew, he did not even touched him. She was always so aloof in a quiet way. Now, as she tended the stranger silently, one of her long braids slipped over her shoulder and fell across his knee. He drew away from the contact sharply and a quick pain of opens and the action

"Hell!" murmured a man at the other side in mild annoyance.

He was given the importance of the arrival of the Dillingsworth Lumber company could keep him from the eyes of men from the ends of the earth.

Dolly's was a place where men knowing wherever fancy and the lumber camps led them through the mountains and the big schooners, sailing up and down or moving on bound by no rules, as in the mountains, and the men who lived in the shadow of the lumber camps.

Then a resolute strength tightened his lips and he laid the Bible gently down and blew out the light.

It was cold in the little room and the rain was dripping from the eaves.

CHAPTER III.

The Wondrous Hills at Dawn.

He was awakened next morning by the thunder of heavily shod men coming in to fill the bunkhouse. The smell of cooking was in the air, and the cook under his door showed lamplight.

The rain was still dripping softly from the eaves. As Sandry came into the eating room the old woman in the kitchen was looking over the crowd of men as impersonally as he himself had done the night before, with a poise as assured and a subtle force as strongly indicated.

Her bright, old eyes, alse as his men, met his lifted glance as he seated to Dolly's empty seat, swung a leather putter and a well-built shoe over the bench and sat down. He was in place and a vague feeling of adjustment or solidity accompanied him as if he was there, as he said, to stay. Every man in the room felt it, and one of those strange sensations of portent communicated itself to them, as when the everyday skirr of life come to a turn in the road.

play of the confining bridle. After an interval that tried him severely in spite of himself he saw the stranger reached the sharp crest of the ridge. Below him the vine maples, the wind lay slough, the yellow buddle of the camp, the toy railway, with its tiny engine, the dinky wheels, the toy mill in a white spiral, the rollways and the huge log trail winding up the other side like a giant serpent. Even as he looked there came from the recesses of the whitebelloh whose invisible line creep away into the "the above the cabin, toy engine and dinky to work with a volley of cooks, the spools creaking and the great steel rope lifted heavily along the trail.

Presently a long, gray shape, stealthy and sinister, came creeping over the lower ridge, gliding down the face of the hills, silent, relentless, a veritable thing of life. He leaned forward, watching it come to rest above the rollway, half a little while the antlered man darted here and there, and antlered man darted here and there, and antlered man darted here and there, and

OUR PUBLIC FORUM

Wm. H. Taft
ON PROHIBITION.

Ex-President Wm. H. Taft, in giving his views on prohibition, said in part:

"Ours is a government by law; not by rule of thumb, but by rules of conduct which have equal application to all. Any exception to the equal operations of the law upon individuals is necessarily most injurious to the future operation of that law for the public good, because one exemption from its operation is certain to lead to others. The public detriment arising from violations of law, followed by immunity from prosecution or punishment, can hardly be overstated. It is, of course, the duty of the legislator in the enactment of laws to consider the ease or difficulty with which, by reason of popular feeling or popular prejudice, laws after being enacted can be enforced.

"Nothing is more foolish, nothing more utterly at variance with sound public policy than to enact a law which, by reason of the conditions surrounding the community in which it is declared to be law is incapable of enforcement. Such an instance is sometimes presented by sumptuary laws, by which the sale of intoxicating liquors is prohibited under penalty in localities where the public sentiment of the immediate community does not of will sustain the enforcement of the law. In such cases the legislation is usually the result of agitation by people in the country who are determined to force their fellow citizens in the city better. The enactment of the law comes through the country representatives, who form a majority of the legislature, but the enforcement of the law is among the people who are personally opposed to its enactment, and under such circumstances the law is a dead letter. This result is a great argument in favor of so-called local option, which is really an instrumentality for determining whether a law can be enforced before it is made operative. In cases where the sale of liquor cannot be prohibited in fact, it is far better to regulate and diminish the evil than to attempt to stamp it out, by the enactment of a drastic law and the failure to enforce it there is injected into the public mind the idea that laws are to be observed or violated according to the will of those affected. I need not say how altogether pernicious such a loose theory is. General Grant said that the way to secure the repeal of a bad law was to enforce it. But when the part of the community which enacts the law is not the part affected by its enforcement, this is not a practicable method.

"The constant violation or neglect of any law leads to a demoralized view of all laws, and the choice of the laws to be enforced then becomes an uncertain as the guess of a political executive in respect to public opinion is likely to make it. Such a policy constantly enlarges in the community the class of men with whom the sacredness of law does not exist."

Nature's Marble of Solid Silver.

Recent development at some of the mines of the Cobalt district of Ontario, Canada, has resulted in the production of more of the wonderfully rich silver ores for which the camp has famous during the days of its first working. At the Temiskaming mine there has been found a vein from which assays a special record for high value.

A certain six-hundred-pound slab assayed about ten thousand ounces of silver per ton being therefore about one-third pure silver. There is no gold in the ore, that being one of the several peculiarities of the ores of the Cobalt district.—Popular Science Monthly.

Woman Letter Carriers in Saxony.

Since the war broke out almost two-thirds of the Saxon postal employees have been called to the colors. Latter the mail service became so crippled that the authorities found themselves compelled to suspend the civil service laws and to follow the example of Prussia and other states by employing women as mail carriers.

Leipzig and Dresden already have one hundred female "postmen." Most of them are widows or daughters of mail officers employed who were killed in the different theaters of war. Three of the women act as drivers of large mail wagonettes.

Working Under Difficulties.

Raising a vessel submerged in tropical water is a very dangerous business, according to an account in Shipping. It involved the salvage of a gunboat that had been sunk in the harbor of Progreso, Yucatan. The sailors were in constant danger owing to the attacks of "voracious fishes, some of which are more ferocious than sharks and far more determined in their methods of attacking human prey."

Precocious Youngster.

One day Charles' father was sitting by the window reading his paper when he felt his son kick against his knee. As he lowered his paper and looked at him the little fellow said: "Say, papa, let's 'of out with the porks. I am tired of staying around here with nothing all the time."

Not Universally Popular.

"A man let shows off too much smartness," said Uncle Rome, "gits so he ignors almost as much confidence as a sleight o' hand suit in a poker game."

Children have a colony of mosquito that is interesting. They seem to be under the special care of Bob Boutheon, who has them in near the south side of Round Lake. When Bob Whitney chased swarm toward that side, where they feeds them with the scraps of the neighborhood. The foot of Vance street is another favorite resort for them, and where they are fed with fresh bloodings. They follow close on time, and they are certainly very interesting.

Facts as to the extent of the fishing industry of St. Joseph have been presented to the chamber of commerce by Deputy State Game Warden Richard Condon. Warden Condon's figures show that there is an investment of some $80,000 in boats, tugs and dock-age properties in this city. Over 96,000 pounds of fish are caught annually, the catch of the 1916 season is valued at around $50,000, and nearly 500 miles of nets are stretched every year. Upward of a hundred men are employed most of the year in this industry and the annual pay roll amounts to approximately $40,000.

CANNOT CATCH PINE LAKE TROUT.

Game Warden Oates Hands Down Decision Reversing Scientific Classification of Fish.

In answer to a letter from a Boyne City attorney game warden Oates puts the lid on in the matter of catching Mackinac trout in Pine Lake. He says:

"All trout found in any of the inland waters of this State are classed as brook trout in regard to their technical description or scientific name of the species, therefore trout of all kinds, including Mackinac trout, cannot be taken from any of the inland waters of this State, except with hook and line from the first day of May until the first day of September.

By a literal interpretation, all fish, from a whale to an eel, are of one family; but brought down to precise scientific classification Mackinac trout are of the salmon species; brook trout are trout. But whether they are or not, the warden is splitting a hair.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY MEET

THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF CHARLEVOIX COUNTY HELD ANNUAL MEETING AT EAST JORDAN

The Board of Directors of Charlevoix County Agricultural Society held their annual meeting at the Russell House, East Jordan, Michigan, on the 17th day of February, 1916. Practically a full board was present, there being but two absentees.

A special committee representing the board of supervisors, consisting of Messrs. Meech, Miller and Bailey, met with the Board.

H. B. Hipp was elected President of the Association for the balance of the year to succeed H. L. Olney, deceased. Robert Price was elected vice-president to succeed H. B. Hipp.

Director S. S. Shapton's resignation was read and accepted and Fred J. Meech of Charlevoix was unanimously elected to fill vacancy caused by this resignation. Ira Olney was unanimously elected to succeed director H. L. Olney, deceased.

The temporary finance committee reported the total receipts of the year as amounting to $3759 67 with total expenditures of $3716 80, leaving a balance of $42 78 in the treasury.

R. A. Brintnall resigned as secretary of the Association and D. L. Wilson was appointed to succeed him.

The following committees were appointed for the ensuing year:

Executive:—Price, Ward and Rogers.

Finance:—Lewis, Wangeman and Burns.

Speed Committee:—Nat Burns, Chairman, Loran C. Madison, Geo. Houghton, W. L. Davis and Adam Jones.

The following superintendents were appointed: Division A., S. E. Rogers; Division B., Henry Nowland; Division C, F. H. Wangeman; Division D., F. H. Wangeman; Division E., Fred J. Meech; Division F., Fred J. Meech; Division G., Ira S. Olney; Division H., John A. Nowakie; Division I., Mrs. Robt. Price; Division J., Mrs. W. F. Empey; Division K., Mrs. Robt. Price; Division L., S. H. Ward; Division M., May L. Stewart.

Several changes were made in the rule governing exhibits, among them being the admission of the Arbors of the Arbor Order of Gleaners to compete in competition with the Granges for premiums in Divisions G. H. and I, and in abolishing the limitation clause in Division H (fruit displays) so that in the future instead of being limited to three plates, the Grangers and Arbors may each exhibit an unlimited number of plates.

The date for the next annual fair was left open, pending the action of the Emmet County Fair Association.

A general discussion was indulged in over past and future fairs, resulting in a determination to make the next annual fair one that will set a new mark in every department.

The directors expressed their appreciation of the faithful work done by the retiring secretary, Mr. Brintnall, and regretted his withdrawal from the office.

Much enthusiasm was apparent and patrons of the fair may look forward to the best county fair held in northern Michigan.

MAKING GOOD

This matter of a boy "making good" is most splendidly illustrated in the career of Arba Cameron, son of the late Alex Cameron, of this city.

It seems but a short time ago that Arba graduated from the Charlevoix high school. Then he went to college and emerged into the world's activities as a mechanical engineer.

He at once entered the employ of the American Bridge Co., the largest concern of its kind in the country. His rise in that service has been phenomenal. From a foremanship to the superintendency of the Minneapolis plant was a jump that he made about three years ago, in which position he evidently made good, as he has just been promoted to the superintendency of the Chicago plant, the second largest of the company, employing 350 men.

But when he comes to Charlevoix, which he frequently does, he is the same Arba that we remember as a high school boy, earnest, studious, respectful and always a young gentleman. And he will continue to climb.

WRECK OF STEAMER BEAVER BOUGHT

Last week James McCann, of St. Jamse, bought the remains of the steamer Beaver, which is submerged in Lake Huron in the Straits, "for the yard." Mr. McCann already had a one-sixth interest in the boat.

In the spring she will be raised and towed to St. James, where she will be rebuilt and put in commission, either as a big fishing tug or for passenger service, it has not been fully determined which.

The fire which put the Beaver out of commission destroyed the upper works, decks, and a part of the inside lining and frames. The outside planking is comparatively uninjured.

The engine and boiler were not injured to any great extent.

The Census

The Constitution requires a general census every ten years. The first was taken in 1790. The cost of taking this census is paid by the United States government, not by the state governments. The separate state may, of course, take state censuses on their own account, for which they must pay out of their own treasuries.

Optimistic Thought.

It is not the greatness of a man's means that makes him independent so much as the smallness of his wants.

DOUAUMONT IS HELD BY KAISER

Germans Beat Back French Attacks on Fort.

CLAIM 15,000 ARE PRISONERS

Five Assaults to Recapture Outlying Work of Verdun Fail, Says Berlin—Teutons Claim Champneuville and Cote de Talou—Paris Denies Latter Point Taken.

LONDON, ENG. — The German assault on Verdun slackened somewhat in intensity over most of the line which now faces the French and the guns of the forts. Narrowing their most desperate attacks to the sheer front between the Douaumont heights and the sixteen north of the village of Vaux, to the east, the Germans here concentrated their efforts in a strong attack, but failed to gain ground. The position of Fort Douaumont—the French official communique do not call it a fort, but a "position"—is still occupied by small enemy forces. The French have closed up on this position on three sides and announce that the Germans force is maintaining itself in the position only with difficulty.

BERLIN — Five determined attempts made by French troops to recapture from the Germans Fort de Douaumont, one of the outlying Verdun fortifications, were repulsed with sanguinary losses, according to the official statement issued by the German headquarters staff. German troops, it was asserted, had stormed the fortified works of Hardaumont, as well as the town of Champneuville and the Cote de Talon. The number of unwounded Frenchmen taken prisoners in the assault, totaled 15,000.

The text of the German official statement follows:

"Western theater: On various portions of the front these were intense artillery and mine battles.

"South of Ypres a British attack was repulsed.

French Attacks Repulsed.

"On the heights to the right of the Meuse the French attacked by surprise, repeated five times with fresh troops, the fortified work of the fortress of Douaumont. They were repulsed, with sanguinary losses.

"To the west of Verdun our troops have taken Champneuville, the Cote De Talou and have advanced as far as Nave on the southern border of the wood connecting with it.

"To the east of the fort we took by storm the extended fortified works of Hardaumont.

"In the Woevre plain vigorous fighting is taking place on the German frontier, the battles extending as far as the Cotes Lorraine.

Capture 15,000 French.

"According to information at present in hand, the number of unwounded prisoners amounts to nearly 15,000.

"In Flanders our aeroplane squadrons repeated their attacks on the camp of the enemy troops.

"A bomb attack on Metz by enemy aviators resulted in the injury or death of about clothing and seven soldiers. Several houses were damaged.

"In the neighborhood of the fortress of Verdun our troops brought down in an aerial battle and by the bombardment of artillery fire. The occupants of the machine included two captains who were captured."

French Praise Germans.

PARIS — Except around Fort Douaumont the French war office reports some abatement of the German attacks in the Verdun region. To the east and west of the Douaumont position the French troops are closely pressing the German detachments which were able to gain a foothing in three sections, and which, the war office further reports, are maintaining themselves with difficulty.

The French say that the Germans have occupied the Cote de Talou.

CAMEL IS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Canadian Colony to be Protected Spell of Prohibition.

NEW YORK — J. R. Bennett, colonial secretary of Newfoundland, who arrived from St. Johns by the steamship Stephano, said that in anticipation of a protracted period of prohibition, the drinking folk of Newfoundland were laying in a big supply of drinkables.

The colony has voted that it shall be not only dry, but that no one shall bring into it any alcoholic drinks. The official secretary said he had no doubt that the law would be rigidly enforced in 1917.

St. Louis, Mo.—Miss Helen Morgan, daughter of the late John Pierpont morgan, will speak on national preparedness at the conference of mayors which will begin here March 8.

British Rout Turks in Africa.

LONDON, ENG. — A Turkish column was attacked and routed by South African troops at Angata, Egypt, according to a British official statement, which adds that the fleeing Turks are being pursued.

SLAVS CUT OFF FLEEING TURKS

40,000 Moslems Surrender in Drive on Mush.

RUSS SWEEPING ASIA MINOR

Entire Campaign of Ottomans in State of Disruption—Kaiser Is On Western Front—Teutons Hurry to Strike Blow to Influence Roumania, Slipping to Entente.

PETROGRAD — Grand Duke Nicholas, commander of the Russian forces in the Caucasus, has left Tiflis for Erzerum.

PETROGRAD — The capture of Mush and the remnants of the Turkish Thirty-fourth division strikingly illustrate the significance of the Russian victory in Armenia. It is no isolated incident, but merely a phase of the complete overthrow of the Ottoman plans in Asia Minor.

By occupying Mush the Russians apparently have cut connections between the Turkish center retreating from Erzerum and the Ottoman forces at Mosul on the Tigris.

The Turkish force at Mush and the town of Allah, which also surrendered, consisted of about one corps (40,000 men). Its task was to guard the northern approaches to Bitlis. The escaped force is retreating south, and probably will attempt to join the corps which has its base at Mosul.

Kaiser at Charleville.

PARIS — The arrival of the kaiser last week at Charleville, in the French Ardennes, where the German general headquarters on the western front are located, coupled with the Verdun attack on the Yser, leads colors to the belief entertained by all the French military critics that the Teutons are about to deliver a heavy blow in France.

Reports that the German crown prince has massed 100,000 reserves and a huge number of heavy guns to support an attack on Verdun are confirmed, but it is believed that the attack will be in the nature of a big diversion while another great force attempts to blast its way through the French defenses.

Erzerum Hastens Teutons Plans.

The newspapers point out that the fall of Erzerum is likely to precipitate the plans of the Germans, who feel acutely the necessity of offsetting the political and moral effect of the Russian victory and checking Roumania's present heading rush toward the allies' camp.

The latest unofficial information from the French front shows that the Germans in general without being accomplished any particular point since the capture of Douaumont. Paris, however, no longer expects an attack on Verdun in the near future. Mr. Bryan, of Colgate University, was popular as a man of fine delivery and deep thought. Pres. Kaye in a number of lectures, showed that he was a keen wrangler. The Palmer instructor was very practical in her methods and showed no fear whatever of the "Whirlwind." She was less practical but none the less popular in fortunetelling. Supt. Tuft, of Traverse City, came in at the last moment with a new breath of enthusiasm from without and the interest could not possibly flag on that crucial morning. He's a capital hand at story-telling too with a fund of beautiful truths bound up in compelling poetry.

School Commissioner's Column

Mary L. Stewart, Commissioner.

Plan books furnished to each teacher free of charge from this office.

Your State Red Book is either in the hands of your director or your township clerk.

New drinking fountain expected to be installed in Norton's Bay and Barnard schools. One more barrier between children and disease.

One hundred eight plates set at the Teachers Supper. Supt. Holiday was master of merry-making, and handed the stunts, nee compliments right and left. It was hard on those East Jordan teachers but he gave them a year to recover.

Three school boards made the request that the State Standard School Inspector be invited to visit them and help them to consider the Standard School proposition. The expense of this visit is borne by the state department. All the school board has to do is to welcome this expert and to be open to conviction.

February 22-26 the Commissioner was in Detroit attending the annual meeting of the National Educational Association. She hoped to gain some idea or suggestion that may later be used in Charlevoix county to aid in putting our schools on the American map. For this reason she was unable to be in Boyne City on the 5th as previously announced. Any difficulty will be arranged by correspondence or by a later visit.

A number of teachers and parents regret the loss of a leader in the spring activities of the Rural School Athletic League. Why couldn't each township have the meet just the same? The teachers of each township could arrange by phone or correspondence. That's easy! The banners don't cost much. A pop-corn stand would help them. Then after you have them they mean a whole lot.

No notes last week. The Commissioner was attending the Farmers' Institutes, driving thru the drifts, hearing some splendid programs, specifying a little bit herself, and enjoying pot-luck twice daily. There was splendid substance in the course this year—just how a farmer may judge what he oil needs without a scientific test, how he may supply this by proper planting without relying on commercial fertilizers, why Michigan should lead the world in dairying, just why milk testing pays, and that a movement is actually on foot to procure a county agent for Charlevoix county. Hurrah for the county agent! Join the boosters' fast increasing crowd!

The finest Teachers' Institute ever was! Large attendance, earnest speakers and courteous listeners. Dean Free, Bryan, of Colgate University, was popular as a man of fine delivery and deep thought. Pres. Kaye in a master of details and has a way that wins and keeps winning. The Palmer instructor was very practical in her methods and showed no fear whatever of the "Whirlwind." She was less practical but none the less popular in fortune-telling. Supt. Tuft, of Traverse City, come in at the last moment with a new breath of enthusiasm from without and the interest could not possibly flag on that crucial morning. He's a capital hand at story-telling too with a fund of beautiful truths bound up in compelling poetry.

Northern Michigan

A systematic effort is to be made by the Commercial association of the Traverse City the summer resort patronage to which it is entitled. Plans for attracting aeroplane was brought down perfected and with the opening of the new golf course and country clubhouse, reservations of rooms have already been received from out of the state. The chamber of commerce will establish a directory and bureau of information to secure rooms for every stranger that reaches Traverse City, and intends to have a room or two available are listing them with the secretary.

Petoskey News: Twenty Petoskey men active in the work of making Petoskey a bigger, better and livelier city, were on hand at the meeting of the golf club Friday evening at which the committee on grounds made its report. There has been considerable speculation as to whom the committee would recommend locating the golf links and every man present Friday evening was ready to express his views on this important question. The grounds on which the club has secured options are on the east side of the city. The grounds on the west side are within the city limits, within walking distance of the down town section, include beautiful lake front ground and as a golf links is the top golf player to be the finest in Michigan. The other grounds mentioned by the committee was the old circus grounds near Bogesh and other suburban other property. This property is not as valuable as is the west side grounds but it is not as suitable for a golf course, the earth is not as well adapted for the purpose and it is back from the lake and two miles away from the down town section of Petoskey.

California Republicans Turn Down 50-50 Agreement on Delegates.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Congressmen Mann, leader of the Republicans and Progressives in the nomination of California delegates to the Republican national convention to be held in Chicago June 7 had been rebuffed by the executive committee of the Republican state central committee at a meeting here. The Progressive proposition was to let the Republicans nominate half of the twenty-four California delegates if a like number of Progressives could be acceptable.

It was declared by the committee that the California delegation to Chicago should go uninstructed.

GENERAL LECKIE WOUNDED

He is Second Canadian Brigadier Injured Within Week.

OTTAWA, ONT. — Word has been received that Brigadier General Leckie of Vancouver, commander of the Second Canadian Infantry Brigade, who arrived from St. Johns by the steamship Stephano, said that in anticipation of a protracted period of prohibition, the drinking folk of Newfoundland were laying in a big supply of drinkables.

The colony has voted that it shall be not only dry, but that no one shall bring into it any alcoholic drinks. The official secretary said he had no doubt that the law would be rigidly enforced in 1917.

The good sleighing and fine night brought out a large crowd for the musical held at the Albert Beattie home on Friday evening. Over 75 people were present and enjoyed a most pleasant evening. All numbers on the program were well received, especially the Barnard Yells. The home made candy table was soon 'a thing of the past,' proving that it was some candy alright. The I. T. Class realized over $10 and are to be complimented for the success of their first undertaking along this line.

In the "wee small hours" of the morning a tired but happy crowd returned from a Loap Year party at the Grange Hall in Marion. A sleigh load was originally intended but it proved to be almost a "hiking party," and the "Gicogees" spent considerable time hunting roads and getting out of drifts. However, this only added the extitement needed for a fine time. The following were present: The Misses Georgia Scroggie, Maude and Eilene Fairchild, Annie Willis, Dorothy Hesltie, Lorna Bush, and Lucile Lewis. The Messrs. — George Agee, Willis, Bert Scroggie, George and Howard Bennet, Shapton and Beattie.

Formation of Ice.

The surface of a river or lake freezes into solidity, first at the top; as more water freezes it leaves beneath that already frozen. Ice seems very strong if the temperature of the air has been for a sufficient time at or below freezing point, but freezing is only possible after the whole mass of water has been cooled down to its point of maximum density, so that the subsequent cooling of the surface can give rise to no convection currents, which would cause dissipation of heat.

Worth While Quotations.

GRACEFUL OLE AGE

By KIN HUBBARD.

Uncle Niles Turner, who is roundin' out his one hundred and fourth year, recently was asked how he accounted for his longevity. Lookin' up from a rough draft o' th' Belgian frontier he said:

Why waste money on some flimsy, poorly planned cabinet that means at the best only more shelf-room? The Hoosier brings you 40 inventions that actually save you time and labor and miles of steps. Remember we are demonstrating all these things at this sale.

SHERIFF'S LAUGH IS THE LOUDEST

But Thieves' Laugh Is Hollow as Jug That Once Held the Spoils.

SHOCK AWAITS THEM

Release From Prison Will Reveal That Expected Treasure Is a Phantom—Which Is Why Sheriff Laughs.

Terre Haute, Ind.—To begin with, "Dusty" Graham is a retired hold-up man. He was retired last week by a criminal court judge for eight years. He laughed at the time and told friends that when he is released eight years from now he will have the proceeds of his life of crime safely waiting for him. Sheriff Krettenstein laughed just a trifle louder than "Dusty," for he knows that "Dusty's" laugh is poorly founded. There will be nothing waiting for him.

Now for the complications: Harry Davey and "Dusty" took $7,000 from the paymaster of the Lattas Creek mine on October 11. They hid with the money in the outskirts of the city, and finally "Dusty" went into town to render with friends, and Davey remained hidden in a field, with the money in a sack. "Dusty" and his friends returned to the field in an automobile to get Davey, and when Davey saw them approaching he mistook them for policemen and fled, leaving the sack of money.

Found the Jug.

"Dusty" and his friends recovered the money and ordered the chauffeur, who was not interested in the crime, to drive the party to Ziegler, where they stopped at the home of Barney Davey, a brother of Harry, the easily alarmed. The chauffeur had heard a conversation that he thought the police should know about, so later Harry Davey was arrested and his brother's house was searched for the missing money. The money had been hidden in a jug by "Dusty," said, although the police found the jug they did not get the money. After the search was over "Dusty," who had been in hiding, returned to the house. Two days later Barney Davey, who had not been arrested, found that the jug was missing from the piano, where he had placed it. He suspected "Dusty" and tipped the police regarding his prowess. "Dusty" was arrested.

Just a Minute More.

Now, gentlemen, the story is not much longer. Harry Davey, in jail, had suspected that "Dusty" had informed on him and caused his arrest to keep the money for himself. When "Dusty" arrived as a prisoner they compared notes, decided that the accusers after the crime had found them and they began confessing. As a result five men are indicted and awaiting trial. No one could get a trace of the money.

Finally it developed that two boarders in the home of "Barney" Davey, who had no connection with the crime, had found the jug and the money and had fled with it. These men, "Burt" Hickey and Guy Tanner, have been arrested and all but $600 of the money is gone.

In the meantime the real criminals are waiting to get out and find the ex-paymaster's jug.

Found the Jug and the Money and Fled.

BLANCHARD HARDWARE COMPANY

Inauguration of Heroic Business Enterprise---Puts Seal of Confidence in Future of Charlevoix

OPENING EVENT LIKE A HOLIDAY---COLLATION AND ENTERTAINMENT—MUSIC AND MUNIFICENCE

IN the late October days, about the time the autumn leaves were beginning to change their color and the coal bin and wood pile were starting to occupy your thoughts, there stood in the space between the postoffice and Old Settler's building, an ugly house that knew not the touch of a paint brush, and against which nestled, as if in desolate sympathy with its ancient neighbor, a small wooden structure, the worse for wear, but lingering in the lap of municipal ambition.

Before October was erased from the calendar the old warehouse was demolished and the little old building was put on rollers and removed to some place in Flanders. On the first day of November the first dirt was removed and on the third day of January there stood a complete and finished structure, which stands to-day as a mile-post in the path of progress—a combination of art and utility that puzzles the writer to fitly describe.

Mr. F. L. Bartholomew, of Chicago, son of the owner, and a professional architect of ability, made the plans and specifications, and under his watchful eye every stroke of work was done, from the concrete footings to the tar and gravel roof. Here is the roster of the craftsmen:

Carpenter—John Curtis.
Sub-Contractor, Brick layer—Ed. Brock.
Electric Light Wiring—Floyd Better.
Electric Fixtures—Wood Brothers.
Steam Heating—R. Boothron.
Excavating—E. B. Ward.

The structure has a Bridge street frontage of 46 feet and a depth of 104 feet. It has a deep basement, and, as an adjunct, across the alley in the rear is a warehouse 40 x 60. Of course the store building is a brick structure, as the heavy but hidden side-wall and rear wood testify. As you stand across the street the front of the building presents a very fine but comparatively little brick surface, but they are wire-cut creamy tapestry brick, blended with some cream and terra cotta. The crowning feature is the 1000 square feet of plate glass frontage. The ground floor front oak doors are the only wood in the front, the glass being set in iron. The front story seems open to the street and the display of ranges that you look upon from the street seem as if exposed to the elements. A three foot space of prismatic glass extends the entire width of the building above the lower show windows.

THE OUTSIDE PERSPECTIVE

It is as you enter and cast your eyes upward and about you that you can imagine yourself in a metropolitan establishment, and you can almost hear the trolly cars passing. The decorative color scheme is red walls, cream ceiling and black shelving. There are few counters; show cases abound. The shelving and wall-cases are of the Warren patent variety, combining beauty with convenience—indeed every necessary convenience is provided. Every article of hardware merchandise is visible to the customer. In the center of this floor is a quadrangle of show cases, also part of the Warren system. Above this quadrangle in the floor is an opening to the second floor, fifteen feet square, around which is a railing with openings on the four sides in which a display of sporting goods is artistically arranged to tempt the golfer or the base ball student. In the rear of this floor is the paint room and the freight elevator.

A broad stairway leads you to a landing, flanked on either side by returning stairways to the second floor. Off the landing on the south side is the business office, open on the east side, and affording an unobstructed view of the entire first floor area. The office is tastefully furnished with every convenience, while on the wall hangs a large and excellent portrait of the late Mr. Blanchard. As we look upon this counterfeit of the kind face of our old friend we can almost see a look of amusement take possession. On the opposite side of the landing is the ladies' rest and retiring room, comfortably and conveniently furnished.

We have reached the second floor. This floor is chiefly devoted to stoves, ranges and refrigerators. Magnificently lighted through plate glass the full width and height of the room, this floor may be termed an art exhibition.

In the northwest corner of the basement is the steam heating plant. The basement, which is floored with concrete, is occupied by heavy goods, such as nails, iron, wire fencing, etc., and in one corner Manager Allen has confined a small workshop for himself.

One of the modern features of the building is the Kirchen system of ventilation, which changes the air in the entire premises every hour. Steam radiation is universally arranged. But in the evening the lighting effect is what calls for superlative praise. The latest patterns of brass and porcelain fixtures, when the switch is turned, do truesdilly fairy prince work, and illuminate the street beyond.

It was long the dream of Mr. Blanchard to erect a block on this Bridge street frontage, of which he was for many years the owner, and it stands today, in form same, as well as in the structure itself, a Blanchard memorial. And it is a richly deserved honor to a pioneer business man and good citizen.

Mrs. J. D. Bartholomew, a sister, and Mr. Blanchard's sole heir, is the sole owner of the property and the business. Mr. H. K. Allen is the manager. He comes from Minneapolis, where he had a thorough training in the hardware trade. He is well equipped in all the details of his line of work, is progressive and industrious. His standing in his former field of work is strongly indorsed by reputable concerns in the twin city. He will be assisted by a competent force of experienced men.

There are perhaps those who may question the wisdom of such an heroic business venture from a financial standpoint. The criticism may be answered by the statement, that a mercantile venture of this magnitude must favorably effect all branches of local trade by the extension of trade boundaries. Certain it is that the enterprise is one indicating courage and confidence. It is to be hoped that the future of this section as agricultural acreage, for which we all so ardently hope, and which gives good promise of fruition, will amply justify the outlay.

THE OPENING

The formal opening so munificently mapped out by Mr. Allen, was carried out to the smallest detail, and it was a great Saturday. The doors were opened at eight in the morning, but it was not until two o'clock that the festivities were begun, and then the throng came and kept coming until late in the evening. Floral decorations were profuse, and the employes of the company, from the manager down, did everything possible to make the occasion a pleasant one for visitors, hot biscuits and coffee, prepared on the spot, were served to all, old and young, while a very entertaining program of vocal and instrumental music was rendered by our best talent. Everybody received a souvenir, and their fill of biscuits and happiness.

There was 125 pounds of flour used in the baking of 200 biscuit, in one of the New Model Peninsular Stove Co. ranges. This company was represented here by Mr. E. P. Ostatt. Eighteen pounds of honey sweetened the biscuit. Another demonstrator was Mr. McDonald, of the Michigan Wire Fence Co., but there was not the remotest connection between the wire fence and the biscuit and coffee.

ARCHIE IS CERTAINLY UP AGAINST IT

PETOSKEY LADIES ASSERT MR. BUTTARS IS A WICKED ICONOCLAST

A Petoskey special to a Grand Rapids paper has this to say about Archibald Buttars and his Pere Marquette trail bomb that he threw into their camp lately.

Archibald Buttars, aged Charlevoix pioneer, has brought down on his own head the wrath of the women of Petoskey and the members of the Daughters of the American Revolution, everywhere, by his statements before the recent meeting of the State Pioneer and Historical society, in Petoskey, that the Marquette trail through Petoskey, and which was so marked by the members of Pe-to-se-ga chapter, D. A. R., of Petoskey, was a modern myth.

Such historians as Dr. Leach and men of the present day, such as A. T. Washburne, for nine years secretary of the Charlevoix County Historical society; John Wright, the lecturer on "Northern Michigan Indians and their legends," have come to the support of the women. All declare the trail is hundreds of years old and used constantly by the Indians in early days, being a part of the great trail leading from the Traverse City region to Saginaw and Detroit.

"Indian legends of the past 200 years all contain mention of the visit of Father Marquette to this region and that he visited the Little Traverse bay region as well as the Grand Traverse bay region," said John Wright today.

We have no desire to smash any Petoskey idols but the writer of this has dwelt hereabouts some time, and sat on a hemlock log where the Cushman House now stands, before Petoskey was thought of.

Without going into details which are held in reserve, we are confident that Mr. Buttars was right. The Pere Marquette trail dream should be classed with the Petoskey sea serpent tradition.

Both are jokes.

In Pere Marquette's hike to Bear Creek he probably did not go around the head of Pine Lake to reach it; hence the "trail" must have re-spelled him to feed or swim Pine River.

But Charlevoix never laid any claim to either a sea serpent, or the Pere Marquette trail. If there was such a trail Charlevoix is joint owner of it.

We know there was a trail to Bear Creek, because Mrs. Cora Cookman walked it once to get Missionary Porter to pull an aching tooth for him.

THEY PUT ONE OVER ON US

The literary bureau of the anti-prohibition propaganda are sending to the country papers stereotype matter, express charges prepaid.

The SENTINEL force received a box of this medal brain matter, with others, and innocently began shoving it into the columns. In a recent issue a slice of it, purporting to be the views of former president Taft, threw consternation into the camp.

We shall be very glad indeed to receive an unlimited amount of this material, if charges are prepaid. It has a fixed commercial value in the stereo foundry, and it will be shipped thereto promptly without being soiled by printer's ink.

When state prohibition comes before the people on its own legs, the SENTINEL will earnestly support the proposition and vote for it.

NOT SO BAD AFTER ALL

The winter months are all accounted for, and twenty-five percent of the first spring month is checked off on the calendar, and we have not heard of anybody starving.

Following the crop failures of last year, there was much talk of impending winter suffering among farmers. There may have been a few such, but they are very few. Merchants tell us that trade has not fallen off to the degree that was predicted. It is quite evident that business interests were, "more scared than hurt."

The fact is, farmers of this section are every year becoming better able to sit by the roaring wood fire during a hard winter. As a rule, the collar is worn much easier and the hip loft, and also laugh at the blizzard.

Another consoling fact is that northern Michigan has fared as well as other and older sections of the state.

We have, after all, very little cause to complain.

DEATH OF WM. RANGER

William Ranger, aged 66 years, died at his home on Park avenue, this city, at mid-night Sunday, after an illness since Christmas.

He was a pioneer of Charlevoix, having located here thirty-five years ago, following the calling of plasterer and brick-layer. He leaves a wife. He was the father of Roy Ranger, of this city.

BASKET BALL BANQUET A SUCCESS

LOCAL FANS GATHERED AT THE MASONIC TEMPLE BANQUET HALL FRIDAY EVENING.

Basket Ball enthusiasm reached height, unknown in local annals last Friday evening when Charlevoix's local fans showed their appreciation for the work the local quintet handome this season by crowding the Masonic Temple banquet hall to overflowing and subsequently giving a substantial lift to financing a little proposition whereby the team will be fitted out with new suits and sweaters before the curtain falls at the end of the season.

From 6:30 to 7 o'clock the march of hungry Charlevoixites to the temple was a continuous stream until 140 had signed up at the supper register and the benignant spirit of Genial Manager Glassford had reached proportions hither to unknown, for the undertaking had been one big, grand success. The report of the treasury showed a balance of $36 after a few minor expenses were settled. This start will warrant the purchase of the uniforms and sweaters as the committee already have convictions that the rest of the money is forthcoming.

The benefit supper plan was wholly original with and managed by a committee of several of the more interested fans who have been a great factor in the success of the local basket ball team for the past two seasons. Early in the winter these parties began boosting for new uniforms and sweaters, but the time never seemed ripe for proposing the project until this week when one person in the par' of the citizens was even more than was anticipated.

Session those who so willingly provided the good things to eat and Mr. and Mrs. Saunders, Mrs. Weaver, Mrs. Glassford, Mr. and Mrs. Powers, Mr. Livingston, Supt. Craig and the high school students who gave their superviston and time to the arrangements and the serving of the banquet, there is one person deserving considerable praise and the laurel for his connection with the supper, and that person is F. J. Dennison. Loyal fan and booster of the Charlevoix quintet, who has been the big spoke in the wheel from the first and to whom we give the greatest praise for the entire success of Charlevoix's first basket ball benefit.

Long before the supper hour the tables were cleared away and for the rest of the evening everybody enjoyed dancing to the strains of music furnished by Mr. Dennison and Miss Johnson. Practically all those who attended the supper remained for the greater part of the evening either entering into the fun of dancing or looking from the sidelines. At 11:30 the orchestra was forced to retire but nothing put a halt on the affair until twelve bells as the several musicians in the hall responded willingly to the call of the dance.

During the evening a light luncheon was served which materially swelled the coffers of the benefit treasury.

Everyone pronounced the entire affair one of the most enjoyable social events of the season.

THE PRIMARY FARCE

We would not render judgment against the present primary election law because of the fact that it doubles the expense of the old system. Money spent to sympathy a system or eliminate its evils is well spent.

But there is a hole in the present law through which a political injustice is worked. In one of the several primary laws with which the public has been afflicted was the "political enrollment law," by which a voter must declare his bona-fide party affiliation. It was repealed, and now the voter is permitted to vote any old ballot at any old primary election that comes his way.

At the recent city primary we know of four democrats and one socialist who voted republican ballots. We do not make this a one-sided proposition; it works both ways. For example: An unworthy or incompetent man may put his name on a primary ballot. Under the present law it is within the power of an opposition party, by a concerted understanding, to place his name upon the regular ballot and, by the aid of his respective party supporters, elect him, for purposes that are obvious.

Therefore we say the present primary law is a snare and a delusion.

DEATH OF MRS. KNOWLTON

Mrs. Roxana A. Knowlton, sister of Mrs. C. Y. Cook, and aunt of Mrs. Geo. W. Priest, both of this city, died at the home of Judge V. H. Lane, in Ann Arbor, on the 28th of February.

Deceased was the mother of Dean J. J. Knowlton, of the Michigan University law faculty; also of Mrs. Lane, with whom she had lived since the recent return of Mrs. Cook from Florida, who brought back the remains of her late husband for interment at Ypsilanti.

Mrs. Knowlton spent a number of summers in Charlevoix with her sister.

A STORY OF THE GREAT NORTHWEST

SYNOPSIS.

Elders of Dalliby's Ferry send Sandry as a stranger to the camp, Walter Sandry introduces himself to John Dalliby, Fred Rush, at the Dillingworth Lumber Company, falls in love with Dalliby's daughter. With the camp and the town at a distance from the East he is superintend and make himself.

Out of the near gloom, which was lightening a bit with dawn, the log trail rose, an aggressive snakelike thing climbing uncompromisingly at an angle of 36 degrees, its center a bright blue log sunk to its surface, which was polished like ivory, its slightly curving sides the same. How many tapering trunks had gone into its two miles would be hard to say, for in some places they had sunk and been covered—in the dip, say, over the ridge where the rise from begun, at the turn where it wound around the Shoulder.

Before ten minutes Sandry was breathing heavily, though he said nothing and kept close at Dalliby's heels. The logger strode forward and upward with an easy, climbing lift that rippled every muscle in his loose body, while the man from the cities strained and heaved in painful labor, slipping on the wet earth, floundering in the rotten bark and brush that lined the way. They climbed beside the trail, not in it. Ahead of them the gang of men had long since disappeared from sight and hearing.

The foreman that followed was the opening page in a new chapter of his life, and Sandry set all his faculties to a grasp of outlines.

He stood silently watching the work go forward. They had reached the cutting. Here, in a wide dip, high above the world, it seemed to the Easterner, was a huge circle of activity. Close beside the built trail a second donkey engine fussed and screamed, reaching out uncannily on all sides for the great logs, to haul them in with screech of spool and strain of cable and turn them over to the mysterious steel ropes that came constantly flying back on its traveling line. This was called the 'yard' or 'log-chute'—one was the foot of the trail beside the roliway and the truck being known as the 'roader.'

The monotonous song of the crosscut saws had begun where the buck saws were operated, several hundred and fifty-foot trunks into handing sections.

A little below, two foot-wide planks some five or six feet long had been set into a giant yellow cedar and eight feet from the ground, one on either side, and on these two men were standing, their flannel shirts open at the throat, their sleeves rolled up from arms of steel and leather, their heads bare. Sandry watched the bulging of their backs, every muscle outlined under their soaked shirts, the play of their knees, the whole easy rippling of their entire bodies with the recess give and take of the long saw. The boards, known as springboards, rose and dipped with the even motion.

These men were fallers, and presently there would be a lone towering monarch of the great woods to the fraction of an inch in a given place, ready for the hookers, the hook-tender and the cable.

In the meantime the logs already down were swiftly stripped of their limbs, cut into thirty and forty foot lengths, rolled into the trail with pauser and cant hook and sent on and down to slides to be accompanied of shrill toots from the whistlehoik's restless call, the sudden roar of water and the squeak of fiber on polished iron.

The built trail ended here in the shallow hollow between the first ridge and the second ridge beyond, though up the face of the latter it was prolonged by a wide path sharply defined among the dense growth of the timber.

He was impressed by the magnitude of the country. On every hand the lifting hills were clothed in green, packed and of such girth and height as to seem almost protectively impossible. Humanity was dwarfed to insignificance, like an ant crawling on a cathedral column.

Sandry looked around. Up to this distance the woods were dotted with cuttings where the great stumps showed white and the vivid green and the debris of slashings and tops lying where they had fallen with the fern and hazel brush and other undergrowth to make a perfect tangle. But beyond, along the newcut trail, was nature, dense and untouched, waiting for the hand of pygmy man to come and take her lavish treasures.

By nine o'clock the sun was shining above the peaks and the fog had vanished from the valleys, and although it was late fall there was no feeling of the death of the year. On the contrary, there was a sense of bustle and hurry and work beginning with the advent of the rains. The tidewater slough was bank-full and muddy brown with thick grass and water growths along its edges. The stranger unconsciously drew great breaths of the sweet air of the high hills and began to feel dimly something of their charm.

John Dalliby was everywhere, looking in at the cookhouse, overseeing with an eagle eye each minute detail of the work.

One of the new owner's first impressions was that in this man he had an object of curiosity. He was just thinking this when there came one long blast from the donkey over the ridge and the men dropped their tools in their tracks, the two on the spring board jumped down, leaving the saw just where the call had caught it, fell out on one side, and the foreman came up to him.

"Dinner time, Mr. Sandry," he said, smiling. "I expect you're pretty hungry."

"What!" cried Sandry, "why, I hadn't thought of it! Is it possible we've been here five hours?"

"Sure. Time goes fast in the hills." They began to climb the trail, all men straggling out ahead and behind the youngest forging forward to the esprit of youth and healthy appetite, the older characters, all of them hardened woodsmen, taking it more leisurely.

"Where they were half way up, how ever, Sandry was breathing heavily.

"Might I ask," said Daily "some time, about the change in the company?"

"Certainly. There has simply been an outright sale of the interests, all of which, or nearly all, I bought from Dillingworth & Frazer. A fifth, I believe, is still owned by a Mr. Hubbard, who is somewhere in South America. I have come out to take absolute charge and watch the interests for them."

"I see. And you've had no experience?"

"None," said Sandry a little shortly, "Maryanna Humphrey—who pay no attention!" complained a voice behind. Sandry glanced quickly back. Three lumberjacks were plodding up the slope, their seamed and weathered faces set literally on dinner. On one, a redheaded chap of some thirty-six or eight, powerful and rugged, he set his sharply pointed ears.

"But I'm acquainting it," he finished, regretfully. Discharge that, boss! I daily did not turn.

"I can't," he said. "He's just quit."

CHAPTER IV.

Old Reins in New Hands.

The Rush and the West had met. It was apparent to every woodsman that had to do with Sandry and his men in common.

It showed when he sat among them at the head of the long table, in the masters of northern Gall while the Hipparians were commandeering Cologne. Under Hlodowig or Clovis, king of the former confederation, the Franks were converted to Christianity, while by the conquests in central Gaul, and by his subjugation of the Alemanni and the Ripuarian Franks, he not only succeeded six definitions as far as the Loire in the one direction and the Maine in the other, but he laid the foundation of what subsequently developed into the kingdom of France.

Sumatra's Tea-Growing Industry.

The island of Sumatra, now in course of development, as a tea producer, and reputed to be capable of producing finely yields from mature plants, has followed in last years in tributory period by larger supplies, and the industry has received much encouragement from the abnormally high values of the past year. The teas have already secured a good will in the market. The area under tea now approaches 5,000 acres, as last year 1,000 acres more had been opened out on the east coast from Asahan and

EARLY HISTORY OF EUROPE

Confederation of Germanic Tribes the Foundation of Countries of Germany and France.

The name Franks was applied about the middle of the third century to a confederation of Germanic tribes dwelling on the middle and lower Rhine. Later they became division into two principal groups—the salt Franks, inhabiting the districts on both sides of the lower Rhine, and the Ripuarians, settled on the middle Rhine. The Salic Franks and Franks territories bordered of them began to move southwards and afterwards became in the Emperor Julian, although he defeated the Salian invaders, allowed them to establish themselves permanently in Toxandria, the country between the Meuse and the Schaldt. From this time Frankish chiefs and warrior frequently served in the Roman armies, and during the fifth century they rendered valuable service to the empire by stemming the tide of barbarian invasion. By this time the Salian Franks had made themselves

DISCOUNT ON CZAR'S CHECK

Painter Learned Something About How Business is Conducted in the Realm of Nicholas.

When Professor Tuzen, the Danish artist, had finished his great work, "Peasants Presenting an Address to Tsar Nicholas," it appears, an order from the Hussian emperor for a copy of this painting, for which the czar was to pay 12,000 rubles.

In due course the professor repaired to Petrograd to deliver the painting. He was granted an audience with the czar, who expressed his satisfaction with the picture and thanks handed the professor an order for the sum agreed upon.

When the professor presented the check for payment he was told that an order from the emperor was subject to 5 discount, and he had therefore to account a sum commensurate smaller than the face value of the check.

Before his departure from Russia the professor had a farewell audience with the czar, who, in the course of conversation, asked him: "Did you get your money, professor?"

Professor Tuzen replied that he had not intended to accept the money, but since his majesty had not raised the question he would be glad if he had received only part of the money.

At this the czar seemed cold at all surprised, but calmly made out another order for the sum which had been deducted from the original amount, and thus Tuzen got his money.—Washington Star.

New York's Imports of Wood.

New York state produces less than one-third of the raw material used in her wood industries. In spite of the regular impression that the introduction of contracts, brick and steel is on way with the use of wood, it has been found that the state is yearly using more wood per capita than ever before. More than twice as much wood is used per person today than 50 years ago. More than six times as much wood per person is used in New York state than in Germany, and more than ten times as much as in Great Britain.

MORFORD FOR SENATOR

State Senator Morford, of Gaylord, who has very creditably represented this district in the legislature for one term, is a candidate for re-nomination.

By all recognized rules of precedent Mr. Morford is entitled to a second term. His record at Lansing is one that will compare favorably with that of any member of the legislature in either house, and his re-nomination is a matter of political justice.

ABOUT THAT HINES ROBIN

FORT ORANGE, FLA., FEB., 27.
W. A. SMITH,
Editor Charlevoix Sentinel.
My Dear Sir:

Your uncalled for "slam" at that poor half-frozen Robin and myself, cannot go unanswered.

Now there is no excuse for your picking on a poor defenseless bird like that, any more than there is for that poor bird soaring away up in that cold, ice bound region at this season when he could just as well remain here and enjoy life amid the sunshine and flowers, unless this kind of life had become monotonous to him and he craved for something different, or it may have been on account of the rapidly increasing popularity of Charlevoix as the Queen of all northern resorts that he was fearful, that if he did not arrive early all the summer homes would be taken. But the Robin is there, of that fact I have not the slightest doubt, the fact that you have not seen him proves nothing, for I well remember in other years, when I have patiently led you to where our poor half-frozen friend sat chirping on a tree in neighbor Burnett's yard, and you tried your best to convince me that it was a Sea Gull or an English Sparrow, but you did know better. Now, with such an exhibition of such inexcusable ignorance here are you expected to recognize a beautiful red breasted Robin. No, it is out of the question.

But really, Bro. Smith, I certainly do wish that you would do as I have done, and that is to borrow enough money to come down here, don't worry for I am going to get home; it would afford me the utmost pleasure to escort you around and show you the beauties and pleasures of this section, at this time of the year. I am not going to try to describe them, it would be quite impossible, but a person of your temperament would stand the visit all right, but one like Dr. Armstrong would never live to get out of one of the orange groves. No, that would be his finish, and it would'nt be from a bite of a rattler either.

From all accounts this has been Florida's greatest season, in the number of visitors. And now to give you some idea of the shipments made from Jacksonville alone I will quote from the Times-Union of this date, the numbers given are for car load, and are for the season so far, of course in some articles named the season has just commenced. Grape Fruit 3239; Oranges 15470; Pineapples 9; Strawberries 73; Lettuce 1863; Tomatoes 204; Celery 261; Potatoes 9; other vegetables 521.

It is going to tax the railroads some to get the people all home this spring.

Yours truly and sincerely, etc.

Successful Combination of Two Fabrics

"Ole Marsh Swallow Used t' Drop in Cale Flubart's Sanctum of a Mornin' an' Look Over th' Only Daily Paper That Come t' Town an' Then Put His Specs Down Deliberate an' Remark: 'Well, Cele, It Looks Like th' World Wuz gain' t' H——'."

The combination of two materials in one dress for afternoon and evening wear, crepe and taffeta are used together with perfect success. Taffeta and lace make another combination that has proved its merit, faille and satin is still another. Two kinds of cloth, or two kinds of silk are well liked. It seems as the more familiar joining of silk with cloth. Such is to do as she likes in this matter of putting one and one together—to make one gown.

A street dress is shown here in which serge and taffeta give excellent account of themselves when joined for a very useful purpose. The upper third of the skirt is of the taffeta and the lower part, of serge, is set on to it with a narrow piping of the serge. The fullness is placed at the store and back and is less apparent in street dresses than in others.

The bodice and sleeves are of the taffeta, the bodice having a short yoke and drop shoulder. The sleeves are long and narrowed toward the hand. Piping of the silk serves in setting in the sleeves and in joining the body of the waist to the yoke.

The lower part of the bodice and a peplum are made of the serge, set on in a way that shows the fullness in the back in the house that his mother could not ask him to help her. Yes, there was. George got up from his chair, when he thought of it, and softly tiptoed up the back stairs with a book under his arm.

It was the attic, where there was a storeroom. If he closed the door he could not hear her call him, and if he didn't hear her she could not be blamed if he did not help. How was he to know when baby awoke?

How long he read he did not know, but suddenly from somewhere near by he heard something, and he can't hear your mother call, can you?

THE SANDMAN

THE ATTIC BROWNIE.

It was raining very hard and it was Saturday, too, so George did not feel very pleasant when he came down to breakfast.

"I think we will have to eat a pic-nic lunch," said George's mother. "I have so much to do I wish you would amuse baby after he has his nap, George. That will give me time to get the house in order and the cook ma done before father comes home to dinner."

But George did not care about being nursemaid, so he called it, and instead of answering his mother in a cheerful manner he looked very cross and went out eating his breakfast without making any reply.

He could not go out, that was certain, for the rain came down thick and fast, and there was no place to go to in the house that his mother could not ask him to help her. Yes, there was. George got up from his chair, when he thought of it, and softly tiptoed up the back stairs with a book under his arm.

It was the attic, where there was a storeroom. If he closed the door he could not hear her call him, and if he didn't hear he just could not be blamed if he did not help. How was he to know when baby awoke?

How long he read he did not know, but suddenly from somewhere near by he heard something, and he can't hear your mother call, can you?

"Try it and See If You Can."

Add the baby will cry and you would know it. You are a fine boy to grow into a man.

"Who are you?" asked George, looking around.

"Oh, I am just the attic Brownie," replied the voice, "and here I am, if you want to see me." Then right on the window sill beside him George saw a little brown man, so little that George thought he could brush him off the sill if he said things he did not like.

"Try it and see if you can" said the little brown fellow, laughing and dancing on the window sill.

"Try what?" said George.

"See if you can break me off the sill. That is what you were thinking of doing if I said anything more you did not care to hear."

George tried to raise his hand, but to his surprise he could not raise a finger even.

"Ha! ha!" laughed the Brownie, "you see I know a thing or two or three and then some more, and you will have to listen to all I wish you to hear without moving until I let you."

"Well, I can talk, and I shall tell you what I think of you," said George. "What are you here for, anyway?"

"To give you a little advice," said George.

"I don't need any advice," said George.

"Yes you do," replied the Brownie. "You are a little, little, your mother, and that is not the way to be a man. Boys grow up to be men, but you will be afraid to help your mother. Now listen to me.

"To quickest way to become a man is to help your mother all you can.

Let them laugh and let them sing, "He's tied to his mother's apron string."

The little deeds you now dare do Will make the big ones easy for you.

That's the best way to become a man. So help your mother all you can.

George jumped up, for he heard his mother after all, and he was vexed that the baby was awake, and George went down with a pleasant face and was glad he heard her.

The picnic lunch in the kitchen was great fun, and George told his mother he liked it better than the one cook served.

"I don't know what has happened to our George," he heard his mother telling his father that night. "but he was such a help he didn't have to be told to do a thing and I am not a bit tired tonight, he did so much."

George felt that he had done some good deeds that day and he knew it was the attic Brownie who had put him on the right track to become a man, but he didn't say a word. He just kept on doing as the Brownie told him to do.

THE EVIDENCE IN THE CASE

Results Following Settlement Show That Conditions in Western Canada Are Highly Satisfactory.

Until a few years ago Mr. Henry Lohmann lived at Ashingham, Ill. He thought he would better his condition in a new country, where he would have wider scope for his farming operations. It would not seem essential to refer to Mr. Lohmann, at this particular time, as of German blood, but for the best that so many false statements have gone out as to ill treatment of Germans in Canada.

Writing from Willmore, Sask., under date of January 30, 1916, Mr. Lohmann says:

"We are perfectly satisfied in this country, and doing well up here.

"I bought a half section of land and took up a homestead, my three sons also took homesteads, two of them buying each 160 acres of land as well. I hold my homestead, and I and one of my sons own a threshing outfit.

"The crop this year was good; the oats averaged 45 bushels per acre, and wheat went 40 to 50 bushels and the price is fair."

Sam Morrow, of Millet, Alta., in writing to Mr. J. M. MacLachlan, Carrington Block, Winnipeg, Winnipeg, D. D. says: "I am well pleased with this new country. It climates better than I ever thought it could be for north, but I think the Government to accommodate themselves to the impossibles of the ground over which they are settled.

AMUSING PAPER DOLL PARTY

Original Way of Entertaining Little Girls at Small Expense—Wiener is Given Prize.

If some little girl is thinking of inviting her girl friends in for an afternoon entertainment a paper doll affair will prove most original and amusing. When you invite the girls tell them such to bring a pair of scissors

When all have arrived, seat them at a long table and allow them to choose from the colored fashion plates the dress each likes best. Heads already must be cut from advertisements so all the children will have to do is to cut out the dresses. Tissue paper, lace paper and all sorts of odds and ends of gilt and silver paper are placed on the sewing tables and with jars of library paste a happy hour will follow. Simple prizes, such as a pair of scissors, or a paper doll outfit which is put up by crepe paper houses in attractive form will prove satisfactory.

One mother who employed this game to entertain twenty little girls declared that she never gave a party which was so little trouble or gave so much pleasure. Perhaps the reason is that the secret of making children so well a grown people happy is to keep them busy.

WHAT BOYS DO IN IDLE HOUR

In Spite of Devotion to Outdoor Sports Much Reading Is Done between Friday and Monday.

Out of door sports have come to fill a great place in the lives of boys, as they should, but it is a mistake to suppose that boys no longer read. Franklin K. Matthews, Chief Scout Librarian of the Boy scouts, who has been investigating the matter, reports that in the schools of a large city, when the question was asked, "What do you do in what they did between Friday afternoon and Monday morning" it was discovered that the largest percentage of them spent their time in reading.

In another city one boy sent in the list of the twenty-eight books he had read during his summer vacation; and those who watch the habits of boys in camp or at hotels cannot fail to be struck by the fact that as soon as the exercise hour is over the present, and is beginning to think.—San Francisco Chronicle.

TRIPLE RUNNERS ON A SLED

New Device Which Is Said to Be Both Safe and Speedy—Under Control at All Times.

A couple of novelties in the construction of sleds have been recently introduced. Not long ago there appeared one with a single runner, which is operated somewhat on the principle of the bicycle, which is used for coasting mainly, but a more recent invention is a sled with three runners, which is said to have the recommendations that it is safe and speedy and that it is under perfect control at all times. There is Growing Suspicious.

There is a place on a Third street where certain printers hang out when twilight has come and the day's work is over. And there's a reason!

In filthy type from gallery to forty a printer who is not to be trusted coolly invades the place and calmly goes on his way. Not a word is said, but the printer can't work, so he goes home. Then he sits down and ponders.

He muses to the day and Ross Worden, begrimed, footsore, limping wearily, crossed a barren, desolate stretch of Belgian territory just at the moment when a tattered remnant of some homeless refugee, war-driven from shelter and security. In the distance he saw every conceivable form of glow of camp fires showed, and ever and anon a bomb burst with a robust and compelling. He was sincerely glad when someone accosted Armour and Morrow and Mouse strolled up.

"Just take charge of Nella for a minute or two, won't you?" suggested Armour, and Worden found himself beside the lovely girl in a retired corner of the clubroom.

A rose had fallen from her corsage. He picked it up and placed it carefully beta on the leaves of a memorandum book.

"An amulet," he said in a low, intense tone—"may I keep it without offending you?"

The Loving Cup

By Augustus G. Sherwin

Copyright, 1916, by W. G. Chapman.

His pulse beat high, his eye glowed with excitement, the pride of life was in its fullest ingressions. It was a moment supreme—the high point of fame and favor.

"The loving cup!—it stood before him—a delicate, costly creation, and to Ross Worden the script letters of his name, showing out in clear relief, were to him as grand and precious as though blazoned from some great scroll of fame. As the last words expressing his heartfelt appreciation of the gift friendly souls had bestowed upon him fell from his lips the warm applause of tried and trusted friends thrilled him to his inmost soul.

"There will be a bigger one when you come back from the front, Worden!" hurrahed a convivial member of the group of journalists, artists and men of letters and fashion.

"It's a new experience," said another, "I fancy it will be inspiriting and now."

"Decidedly," commented a grizzled veteran newspaper man with a scarred face, who had written war stories on the actual field sixty years again.

"Good luck, old fellow," hailed an ambitious-looking young man. Dale Armour, his pretty, blushing sister, Nella, on his arm.

Worden paused. The reigning prince in his face softened down to a sentiment of tender, yearning and robust and compelling. He was sincerely glad when someone accosted Armour and Morrow and Mouse strolled up.

ODD MONEY IN USE

Quaint Forms Replace Gold Hoarded for War Needs.

Romanoff Jubilee Postage Stamps Now Currency in Russia—Germany Uses Iron Coins—Stone Medium in Caroline Islands.

London.—Some quaint forms of money have come into existence during the war, owing to the shortage of gold. England introduced the one pound and ten shilling treasury notes, but other countries have been far more original in their makeshift arrangements at the mints.

In their annual bullion report, Messrs. Samuel Montagu & Co. tell how Russia, in order to overcome the difficulty of providing small change, has printed the designs of the ten, fifteen and twenty kopek denominations of the Romanoff jubilee postage stamp issue upon thick paper and, by lettering on the reverse side, has authorized them to be used as currency with the same legal tender as silver subsidiary money.

Iron money was put into circulation by Germany on October 1. The federal council decided that the issue should be withdrawn two years after the cessation of hostilities. A hundred million of five pfennig pieces was the authorized extent of the issue.

The Caroline Islands, which passed from Spanish to German sovereignty after the Spanish-American war by purchase, and now into the possession of Great Britain by capture, include an island called Yap, where stone money called "fei" is used as the medium of exchange. It consists of large, solid, thick stone wheels, ranging in diameter from one to twelve feet, having a central hole through which a pole can be inserted so as to convert the mass into "currency."

The value represented by the stone increases with its size, and the limestone of which the "fei" is composed must be of fine white grain to be considered good delivery. Yet there seems to be no real necessity for delivery at all, for it is quite customary to earmark the money, as it were, and leave it in its old position outside the first owner's hut—an excellent provision considering the bulkiness of the material.

The disappearance of small metallic currency in Mexico owing to the amount of paper money put into circulation during the military struggle for the presidency of the republic caused various expedients to be adopted. Tramway tickets have been used for small change and cardboard money, about one inch by two inches in size, and for five to ten and twenty centavos, was issued by different issuers.

With regard to the output of gold in 1915, the report says that in view of the improved output from the Transvaal and other African districts the world's production is likely to be about £26,000,000 ($130,000,000). About two-thirds of the world's gold supplies are derived annually from the British empire, and, roughly, £60,000,000 ($300,000,000) thus is added automatically to the gold resources of the empire.

CAR DERAILED BY HORSESHOE

Cast by Passing Nag, It Rolls Under Car and Causes Switch to Be Turned.

Kansas City, Mo.—C. F. Collins, a carpenter, was walking across the street close to a street car slowly moving in the storm. A horse, in passing, threw a shoe, which rolled under the rear truck of the car and caused a switch to be turned.

The front end of the car proceeded in a straight line, while the rear trucks started up a side street.

Collins was thrown under the car when struck by the swinging rear end, and escaped being crushed under the wheels by the quickness of the motorman.

Military Cross.

The new British decoration known as the Military Cross was designed by Henry Parsham Burke. It is of silver and is one and five-eighths inches square. In the center are the letters G. R. I., and on each arm the imperial crown. The ribbon is of three equal stripes, the center dark purple, the others white. Captains, commissioned officers or warrant officers are eligible for the decoration. The cross does not confer any individual precedence or entitle the holder to any addition after his name as a part of his description or title.

DEER ARE BECOMING PEST

Game Warden of West Virginia Predicts a Rapid Increase in Big Game.

Grafton, W. Va.—Deer are multiplying at a rapid rate in the forests of the state as a result of the position that is now being given, according to J. A. Viquesney, state game, fish and forest warden. Deer are becoming so thick, Mr. Viquesney says, that in a few years they will be pests. Turkeys also are multiplying rapidly.

Mr. Viquesney is preparing to establish sanctuaries or refuges for game in every county in the state under provisions of the law enacted at the last session of the legislature. This has not been possible before because of lack of funds, which now are available. The law provides that as much as 10,000 acres may be leased in each county, the owner to continue to occupy the land, but the state to have jurisdiction, so far as the game is concerned. The owner becomes deputy game warden.

GEM IN A CHICKEN'S CRAW

Pennsylvania Woman Found There a Diamond Worth More Than One Hundred Dollars.

Colwyn, Pa.—Whether there is a diamond mine in Philadelphia or in Delaware county, Mrs. Otto Woerner of No. 50 South Third street, Colwyn, is not sure, but she does know that the chicken that she purchased from a Baltimore avenue food merchant dealer a few days ago was a most valuable bird, and incidentally proved the best investment she ever made.

When Mrs. Woerner opened the chicken and cut open the craw she saw something sparkle, and on closer examination was surprised and delighted to find that it was a pure blue-white diamond of the first water.

Having it appraised by an expert, she was told that it was worth considerably more than one hundred dollars. Since the announcement of this discovery was made the dealer has had a run on chickens.

BABY HANDS STAY ARM OF THE LAW

Father Is Saved From Prison Term by Prattle of Child.

CROWD WINS PAROLE

Intercedes With Judge in Behalf of Prisoner — Somebody Passes the Hat and His Honor Scowls and Then Contributes.

Kansas City, Mo.—A pair of baby hands reached out and stayed the arm of the law just before it threw Arthur Beeson into the penitentiary for three years. The hands belonged to Baby Beeson, aged eighteen months, who sat upon his mother's lap during the trial of his father.

Beeson, who is an expert handler of horses, took a horse from the pasture of Herman Vogel, near Independence. He sold the animal and went to Des Moines, where he worked steadily until his arrest. Beeson attracted little attention in the courtroom. But every one not otherwise engaged was looking at or playing with Baby Beeson.

"Three years," said Judge Latshaw. The prisoner hung his head and followed the officer in charge.

Went on Prattling.

Baby Beeson's mother blushed. Baby Beeson reached out his hands to a newspaper friend and went on prattling. That was too much for the attaches of the court. They had seen many men sink into the room behind the jury box and pass down the long corridor and stairway of the jail—the way that leads finally to the penitentiary.

A newspaper man went down to the jail to talk to the prisoner. Then he came back and talked to the judge in the courtroom, which awaited the call of the next trial. A dozen men went to talk to Judge Latshaw. Somebody else passed the hat.

The judge said something about the general "cussedness" of horse stealing.

Outside the judge's chambers the dimes and quarters and half dollars and dollars were clinking as they dropped into the hat. Up in the front of the courtroom baby Beeson was holding a lovee and Mother Beeson was trying hard not to let anyone see that she was crying.

"But the baby," pleaded the delegation.

"All right, get him a job and I'll parole him," said the judge.

Dignity is Forgotten.

"Good boy, judge!" shouted some one who had forgotten the dignity of the court.

The judge scowled and slipped into the hand of a deputy marshal "something for the bal."

Leo Newton, one of the marshal's force, wired to Des Moines as his own expense to see if Beeson could have his former position back.

During the afternoon a message came from Beeson's former employer in Des Moines. It said that there is no work for him now but that as soon as a place can be found he will be given one. The marshal's force offered to pay Beeson's way to Des Moines.

Better get him something to do here. I'll let him out as soon as you do," suggested Judge Latshaw.

Robbing Your Own Pay Envelope

The password and key to lasting success lie in two little words, "work and save." Many learn the password "work," but those who use the through ticket of "save" are few and far between.

—"I've earned it, and I am going to spend it as I please," say so many young sons and women, blindly and thoughtlessly.

—When the pinch of want comes the lesson of thrift comes too late. Once down and the world forgets the man who wasted his opportunities and neglected to save against a rainy day.

—Young man—young woman, are you robbing your pay envelope for pleasure and pastimes which in later years will deprive you of the comforts and necessities of life?

Take $1.00 from your pay envelope this week and open a savings account with this strong bank. Then plan to lay aside a certain percentage of your income every payday thereafter.

MURDER AND SUICIDE AT EAST JORDAN

An East Jordan special of Saturday to the Grand Rapids Herald says:

"Doctors tonight are making strenuous efforts to save the lives of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Richards of East Jordan, who are suffering from bullet wounds as an result of an attempted murder and suicide on the part of Richards. In a fit of jealousy Richards fired three shots at his wife while they were in their home, the first glancing off her temple and the second entering her back.

"The woman then escaped and, running to a neighbor's house, notified the police. Before the arrival of the officers, Richards turned the revolver on himself, the shot entering just behind the temple. Doctors believe that the wife, who is 29 years old, will recover, but Richards, 35 years old, is believed to be fatally wounded. The couple has been married about a year and a half and have no children. They came from Antrim two weeks ago.

Oscar Richards was brought to the Charlevoix jail by Sheriff Novak Monday. Richards is able to walk about, and will be arraigned in the hotel with which he shot himself traversing the skull without penetrating the brain. Richards will be arraigned for examination as soon as he is able to appear.

MILLIONAIRES AT "RUBE" FOLEY'S WINTER HOTEL

Mrs. Potter Palmer, with a retinue of servants, arrived at the New Seminole Hotel, Winter Park, Fla., last week, and according to a local paper, Mrs. Palmer freely expressed her admiration of the building and grounds, and especially of the attractive "living room." She was greatly interested in the construction of the hotel, which is of brick and stucco, and the interior finish, which is of the beautiful Louisiana Gum, and asked for the names of the architects and contractor. The New Seminole will be one of the hotels entained more people of wealth and prominence than some that any hotel of its size in the south.

NATIONAL GUARD RECOGNIZED

CONGRESS WILL REJECT CONTINENTAL ARMY PROPOSITION — STATE TROOPS WILL BE FEDERALIZED

A poll of both houses of Congress makes it certain that the National Guard of the several states will be brought under Federal control and recruited to full war strength. Public sentiment did the trick. It was the issue of the Guard vs. the "continental army" plan that brought about the resignation of secretary Garrison.

The discussion of the question throughout the country brought out the fact that there was existing a lamentable lack of familiarity with the effectiveness as a military force of the National Guard. We recently referred to the publication of a lengthy article in the Metropolitan—an article pregnant with ignorance and prejudice. The writer has received the following letter from Brigadier General John T. Kirk, commanding the Michigan National Guard:

MICHIGAN NATIONAL GUARD
HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE
GRAND RAPIDS

FEB. 11, 1916.

Captain Willard A. Smith,
Charlevoix, Michigan.
My Dear Captain:

I am in receipt of your valued issue of your paper of date February 10, and read very carefully the article "Defamers of National Guard." You quote of the state as very much indebted to you for your kind words, and I am to assure you that I appreciate them very much. By reason of your experience in the Spanish War you know as well as any one that the article published in the magazine quoted in your article is a bare slander, and that when the men go to Camp they go there for service, and perform that work in a very creditable manner. Your article is valuable to us, and other newspapers would be doing us a great favor if they would take the same position that you do and occasionally give us some of the advertising which we deserve.

Yours truly,
JOHN P. KIRK,
Chief of Staff.

Now that there is a probability that the Guard may be called into active service, the commanding officers cannot wait for the call, but are pleading for the opportunity to show what they can do. The Michigan brigade of 3,200 effectives is ready for the call. If entered out they will prove that they are something more than kid-glove soldiers.

JUDGE DEUEL ON TAXATION

The following article is from the pen of Judge A. L. Deuel, Harbor Springs:

"The expenses of our state government are increasing to an alarming extent. In 1900 the expenses of the state $3,302,845.38 and in 1916 the expenses of the state were $10,526,262.62, an increase of over 50 per cent; while during that period the population of the state increased less than 25 per cent. During this same period we have been creating a great many new, and in my opinion, unnecessary boards and commissions which have enormously increased our state expenses. For instance, the State Board of Tax Commissioners in 1905 cost us $42,744.00, and for the year 1914 it cost us the sum of $166,117.00, almost twice the cost of the Tax Commission for the state of Ohio, although that state is far ahead of ours in population and wealth. The fact is the legislature is open to the charge of voting money rather carelessly, because it is "Other Peoples Money." Our present system (if it is a system) of appropriating money for our state institutions is a disgrace to the state. It is nothing but a "pork barrel proposition, and under our present laws a man with the best of intentions is almost absolutely helpless to prevent these large, and in many cases, unnecessary appropriations. This great burden on our home folks, is driving the resorters from our county, and a great many cottages are now for sale for far less than the valuation placed upon them by the State Tax Commission. The Little Traverse Bay region is unsurpassed for beauty of location, for the purity of its water, and its magnificent climate, and it rests with us to make it the play-grounds for the nation. Resorters, who have been coming here for years, not to make, but to spend money freely, are being driven out on account of excessive taxation.

If present conditions continue we shall go backward instead of forward. The prosperity of this portion of the state depends upon our making a concerted effort to change present existing conditions and to attract and keep resorters here. This is a self evident proposition and needs no discussion. Under the law creating the "State Board of Tax Commissioners" it is empowered to employ so-called experts, and send them from southern Michigan clear up here to Emmet county, in a territory entirely new to them, and have them place assessed by any local man, and without a knowledge of local conditions, the valuations on our farming lands, resort and village property. The result has been that valuations have been placed on a good many farms far in excess of what they will sell for, thereby placing upon the farmer an unjust burden of taxation. Not only have the farmers' taxes been increased, but if the resorters leave us on account of excessive taxation then the farmer is losing a splendid home market.

The decision of the State Tax Commission as to its valuation on property is FINAL for three years from which decision there is no appeal, it may if it sees fit, on complaint and one of these experts to look the property over again. In my opinion the law should be amended so that we may know as well as any one that the article recently published in the magazine quoted in your article is a bare slander, and that when the men go to Camp they go there for service, and perform that work in a very creditable manner. Your article is valuable to us, and other newspapers would be doing us a great favor if they would take the same position that you do and occasionally give us some of the advertising which we deserve.

Yours truly,
JOHN P. KIRK,
Chief of Staff.

MAKING CHOICE OF HUSBAND

Methods Vary in Different Communities—Peculiar Custom That Has Long Prevailed in Russia.

To ninety-nine girls out of a hundred the most important duty in life is choosing a husband. Methods of choice vary a good deal, of course, chiefly perhaps as between town and country-bred maidens.

To the town or suburban girl a man's clothes count almost for everything. The bride is to the best dressed. The cut of a coat or the color of a cravat weighs more with Clara than character.

Her country cousin, on the other hand, knows better than to pin her faith to a tailor's dummy. She is entitled to her choice by more cogent signs. By assisting with her hand the water in a bucket she can see the lounge of her future spouse. If she desires confirmation she has only to throw broken eggs over a friend's head and the same image will appear.

The peasant girls of Russia arrive at a similar result by seating themselves in front of a small looking-glass in a comrade's room, when a vision of their future lord and master will be certain to present itself.

Once a year an exceptional opportunity occurs. At 12 o'clock Christmas eve every girl who can contrive to steal away in order to ask the first man she meets his name. Whatever he gives is that of the bridegroom-to-be.—Exchange.

COCKNEY AN OLD DIALECT

Writer Asserts That Peculiar Pronunciations Have Been Rife for Hundreds of Years.

Cockney speech has found a defender in Mr. Mackenzie Mackintosh, who undertakes to show that Cockney is no modern dialect or corrupted form of the King's English, but that it is of ancient and honorable lineage running back for nearly a thousand years.

It is pointed out that when the poet "born within the sound of Bow bells" sang of "Cockaigne" he rhymed "bank," and "hyll" for "hallo," he is guilty neither of no corruption of the English language, since these pronunciations have obtained not only in London but in Kent and Surrey for hundreds of years.

In this manner is justified "shall" and "should" for "about" and "out side." It is suggested that many London words have been carried out to the "uttermost and ancient" pronunciations. Mr. Mackintosh certainly urges them not to change their speech because of any uncalled-for animadversions against it.

Whether Mr. Mackintosh be correct or not in his contention, it is a fact that Cockney has survived for many centuries in the midst of speech that is deemed more cultured. It is a curious fact that in the Bahama Islands, which were settled more than 200 years ago by Londoners, the Cockney speech is as strong as it is in Cheapside.

Electric Furnace Proves Best.

An electric furnace for the best treatment of steel and its subsequent construction has been introduced. Its method of producing uniform, dependable heat that is so urgently sought by automobile manufacturers is quite novel in electric furnace practice, although its principle is comparable to that of the well-known Nernst lamp. Both the floor and the domed top cover of this furnace are of a refractory material which is practically non-conducting at ordinary temperatures. To start the furnace, a current is passed through a bed of coke laid on its floor. On being sufficiently heated it will become a conductor and in turn heats the walls and top, rendering them conductive, until finally the furnace becomes incandescent. It is stated by those who have tried the furnace that its use in the heat treatment of automobile parts promises to be extensive in the future.

Good Workmanship.

WAR WITH MEXICO IMPENDING

EIGHT THOUSAND TROOPS TO ENTER MEXICO AFTER BANDIT VILLA

The United States is mighty close to war with Mexico. Following a raid at Columbus, Texas by Villa men in which 18 Americans were killed, the president ordered a punitive expedition into Mexico to capture or kill the Villa outfit. Gen. Funston, who is in command on the frontier, has given Gen. Pershing command of the expedition.

The president has assured the Mexican government that once the above is accomplished troops will be withdrawn. Carranza comes back with a demand that Mexican troops be permitted to enter American territory if necessary in the pursuit of Villa, and here is where the clash occurs. There seems to be some hesitation in Washington in granting this request, Carranza's reply to Wilson is belligerent.

At first glance it seems that, inasmuch as Mexican territory is being invaded by an American raiding party, a protest should be granted Mexico. Both governments have joint interests in the elimination of Villa.

Woman Suffrage Notes

The feeling in Kansas is general that the women have exercised their right of franchise without any sly way neglecting their homes.—S. M. Brewster, Attorney General of Kansas.

Manitoba has extended full suffrage to the women. This is the first Canadian Province to adopt equal suffrage and the influence of this progressive measure will be felt throughout the Dominion. Alberta and Saskatchewan through their premiers have already taken steps to secure similar action by their legislatures.

"Baby Week" has been claiming the attention of the Nation through the efforts of the Children's Welfare Bureau. It is interesting to note in this connection that the world's lowest infant death rate is found in New Zealand, where women have voted for nearly a quarter of a century, and that in all of the states and foreign countries where women vote improved health conditions for children followed the granting of the ballot to women.

It is charged that the liquor interests contributed large sums to defeat the equal suffrage amendments in the eastern states last November. The United States government is making an investigation. U. S. Attorney Humes will try to discover among other things, how the brewery association raised funds, on their own admission, to fight organized women. It will be able to enlist labor leaders to help the association fight local option and woman suffrage.

City of Deserted Glory.

Compared with Nineveh and Babylon, both founded in inquity, Baghdad, a tangled city of 150,000, full of great ruined mosques today, is a mere child. The oldest city of Harun al Rashid, Glory today, unassisted, with its low, windowless houses and its narrow, unpaved streets, has long clung to a primal, immemorial, home life, too, because its place on the overland trail from the Orient.

Good Remedy.

Bones is the most efficacious remedy we know for the removal of nits and roaches. Do not believe it, but try it in powdered form with gum camphor if you can stand the odor of the latter; if not, use the borax, alone and sprinkle the mixture thickly over the closet shelves and into all the cracks which seem infested. It will take several applications.

CHAPTER V—Continued.

Sandry was enjoying her accustomed position of knowledge and experience.

And you've spent all those years in the mines of the Klondike, eh Mister?" he asked. "How in the world did you do it—and how did you escape the follows?"

"Now," said Ma Daily kindly, "you can knock the country to me, but don't you go doin' it where the people hear you. My husband was killed in the rain, but we don't like to hear the Easterners rate about it. It's a thing on every Oregonian's shoulder. You don't want to cover yourself."

There was a deep if somber good edytie in the words and tone, and Sandry as a sudden sense of the general little happiness that had puzzled him—the tranquillity, the confidence, the warmth of this shiver in a rain that had asked his overcoat, and a few remarks about the fact that Oregon rain didn't wet through.

"Why, you're Ma Daily," he said earnestly with a sudden feeling of gratitude for the kindness, and a shadow over her eyes.

"Why, I guess I am," she said, "you care to you may rile Black Bolt whenever you wish."

She nodded quietly, without a trace of the pleased excitement he had expected in the light of her sensitive and elevate love of the animal, but a slow, dull flush spread upward in her dark face and her fingers trembled a bit, he fancied, on the cups.

They ended he in all surety the next morning, when, with a bridle of colored and woven horsehair over her arm, she entered the lean-to.

Black Bolt was a gentleman born. Though he was wild as the girl for the free air, the green slopes and the yielding soil under his feet, he stood still while she came up lightly, as a cat approves, with a little soft alkalinine and they were gone, down over the smooth slope of the valley toward the lower rollway.

There were two interesting aspects to this adventure. Black Bolt, from the cook-shack porch, who wiped her eyes a bit and said aloud, "Bless the child! Wild—wild! But it's natural," and Walter Sandry standing at the south window of the office.

"Did you like it?" Sandry asked her anxiously that evening as he passed through the sitting room.

"Yes," said Gilesa with her habitual quietness.

"I believe I've found a study," he said to himself as he went on, "a worthy study in human nature."

And Gilesa had found a new heaven and a new earth. Something wild within her that had never quite realized, broke forth, a glorious flower of ecstasy. Day by day thereafter she loosed Black Bolt and stood into fields of Elysium, lost to earth, intoxicated mad with the rush of wind and rain. Always when she came back there was the dusky flush in her face, the deep wild of intoxication in her eyes.

Thus winter closed in on the lonely camp in the mountains, bleakness and gray with mist and rain and vivid green with the new grass of the coast country.

CHAPTER VI.

Trouble With the Yellow Pines.

Walter Sandry sat in the office at the station one hour with the mail letter. Two months had passed and something had lifted from him in those two months, a weight had lightened. Where had been a huge distrust, almost intolerable in its intensity, for this rain-soaked land, there had crept in an indescribable content. Often now he looked down the green little valley sharply defined between the blushing hills and felt the sudden cearn of the intimate shadows, the near white dusk and the great trees under whose drooping feathery boughs there lay silence and a sense of refuge.

Suddenly there came to him a clan of voices, calls and the throaty tones of strong men in anger. Up from the lower rollway a group of lumbermen came stalking in—men with sodden woolens from sloppy rain and scarcely along in the tiny locomotive

Sandry sat his ledger and stepped outdoors.

"What's the matter, Collins?" he asked of a huge man in the lead, a perfect type of the issues of the great Northwest, sun-browned, hard-muscled, wiry of figure and with the endurance and power of a bull elephant.

"Matter enough. Them damned Yella Pines wouldn't give pile a lick in rollway an' tore up two lengths of track."

Sandry went about down the track and found a state of things sufficient to raise the ire of any riverman or lumberjack.

Where the track approached the rollway it had been torn up badly, the ties and rails thrown into the narrow stream, as evidenced by a few pry lasting ends, and the rollway itself, a tumbling floor of logs more two feet thick supported on a group of gradually piled piles, ranged in the center and two—plus had worn out and grind asunder. The lower sides also dropped for the same reason. It had been the work of pure, blind, fierce saw at a log.

"Collins," he said as the men came in on a sullen group, "yet to work and repair the rollway. Bring some men and posts and pry them back on their bases."

Jim sang sent slowly down the sharp bank of the Sidewater slough.

"Johnny Blaine," he said one day, "all right, all right! Prize up a roll-log. My aunt Sandry."

Sandry stood near, realizing his inflexions and reading helplessly, with very them newly twisted and pushing three and there.

"Hadn't we better just spike 'em on to the sides?" asked Collins, with a dull upward glance.

Sandry was about to reply when John Daily slid down from the track beside him under the lee of the damaged rollway.

"Collins," he said sternly, "you go back to camp and bring tools—pryers, hooks, a couple of chains and some spikes. Bring a couple of axes, too. What do you mean by such business?"

"Orders," said Collins with a grin.

"You see, Mr. Sandry," said jaily apologetically, "there's no Sam' sure timbers as them, not when they've gone to carry such weight. They'll have to be taken out entirely an' new ones set."

"I Don't Just Know."

"I didn't know," returned Sandry frankly, "that they had had back work."

"A day or so, mebbe. We can take the fallers out an' put them on with Collins an' the rest. There's enough down to keep the buckers busy a day or two, anyway. We won't lose much."

"Do you think this is the work of the Yellow Pines people, Daily?"

"Sure," said Daily with certainty, "they've done worse than this before now. Cut our best cable two years ago and twice they've run the dinkey off the track into the slough. They're bad actors."

"But what's the use? What do they gain?"

"Why, want to run us out of the bills. Been at it for ten years. They're just giving you a bust as the new owner."

The revarting of the damaged rollway was accomplished with amazing rapidity. Now timbers were brought down and the standing floor was thrust underpinned. Then with pick and shovel the men went at the work of digging out the damaged timbers. The work was heavier, more dangerous and disagreeable by reason of the water four feet deep at low tide, eight at high, which lapped their backs.

Daily put Sandy at the digging from the slope side at low tide, but on the second day he stood long running his blunt thrusts through his hair, as was his custom, when perplexed.

Sandry had come down from the office and now stood on the track above the rollway looking over the wet country below. At the rollway's foot the sluggish ribbon of tidewater sullen and discoloured, wound up from the south. To the north the valley lifted gently toward the camp and the wilderness beyond.

Suddenly, "Daily," he said, "what are you going to do about it?"

"I don't just know. The men can't work in the water, and then piles have got to come out. But there's a way of doin' it, of course."

"Of course," said the sauterner, "and you go at it from above."

The foreman looked at him inquiringly.

"That left bank of the slough up there is in the form of a ridge. Don't you think we could set a crew at it low tide and slip it through, turning the water into the channel? We would leave the slough empty here for the time between high tides. Could we get the timbers and in in two hours?"

Daily's experience eye had already taken in every detail of the possibility lies as Sandry talked.

"That's a good scheme, Mr. Sandry," he said slowly. "I believe it'll work."

So it was that the fire, practical engineering of the new owner was set into action.

The whole crew of the camp was brought out of the hills and set to work and the damaged rollway was repaired as good as new, the break in the west bank filled, the stream running full again and nothing to show for the trouble but the flooded field of hay.

Under Walter Sandry's cool demeanor there was a small glow of satisfaction, a sense of having in a day redeemed himself.

At supper time Sileta, moving between the tables, laughed to herself, softly, and her dark eyes under the little shadow of her parted hair held a sparkling gleam as if she had seen that conflict and enjoyed it.

"Sileta," said the owner, coming in suddenly from the east porch after the men had tramped heavily away to the bunkhouse, "whom do you know out side this camp?"

She was alone in the big spotless kitchen, her sleeves rolled up from her arms, slim and brown with a smooth color that was of the sun's giving.

"Outside the camp?" she asked, turning to him for a moment, stopped in some task of the afternoon of the meat. "Why—nobody."

"Don't you ever go down to Toledo?"

Sandry was leaning in the doorway, his bright blue eyes upon her.

"Sometimes."

"Have you no friends there? No girl friends?"

She shook her head and he noticed the clean profile, the line of the small pointed chin, the good forehead outlining with a vague expression of fleeting wild things in the velvety eyes.

"Is there no one with whom you associate outside the camp? Think."

Suddenly there passed over her features a quick change. He could listen to nothing but a wind on the surface of water, just a breath of change.

"Only the Preacher," she said with a swift stirring of softness in her voice.

"The Preacher?"

"You don't know him. He only comes sometimes. He was here just before you came."

"Who is he?" asked Sandry curious-ly.

"I don't know. Nobody knows. But I love him."

"The Preacher," he said to himself a little later in the bare south room under the dripping eaves. "Hm! The title—of course."

With a new interest he picked up the quaint old book of Holy Writ and let it fall open in his hands as it had a way of doing.

Out from that marvelous song of an

WORTHY OF STUDY BY ALL

Lessons Taught in the Book of Ruth Should Find Comprehension in Every Mind.

The Book of Ruth is the greatest pastoral idyl in literature. It is founded on loving kindness, the joy ing kindness of the Meekness revealed to her family, and the loving kindness of Ruth, the wealthy Israelite, to Ruth, his kinswoman. It also contains the germ of that great heavenly kinship which is the center of the gospel of Christian love.

It is a book that opens with tears and famine and ends with the sound of wedding bells. The story turns upon the straightforwardness of Boaz, who showed kindness and manliness to Ruth, a stranger of a nation that was Israel's foe, and in that kindness founded a new house, the house of Jesse and David, the royal line that begs a greater than David.

It was first the mingling of the blood of the Jew and Gentile, symbolic of the cosmopolitan width of the Christian religion. If was the sign that religion was not to be founded upon wealth or upon social caste, but upon the heart, upon kinship of the human heart. Boaz is impressive in his courtesy, in his kindness, his plain, everyday generosity, his sense of protecting his care for the lonely, unprotected Moabitess girl, his good kinsman's gifts, who, in her poverty gleaned in the harvest field after the reapers. Four eyes order to his reapers that they should pluck her to glean even amting the sheaves and not to shame her. Large-hearted men gained a wife, with more than that, made a place for himself in immortal company who are remembered for naught but for being kind.—Christian Herald.

NEW TREATMENT FOR SWOLLEN VEINS

Swollen veins are dangerous and often result in serious ulcers. Mr. Geo. Dawson writes, enclosing bottle of Emerald Oil (full strength) as any druggist can supply, "Please send me a bottle of your Emerald Oil. I find it the best thing for my varicose veins." Emerald Oil, 1 to 2 ounces, and a small bottle will last a long time, before discarding varicose veins, apply Emerald Oil freely and with the palm of the hand. Results are marvelous. It is also marvelously powerful, penetrating, healing and soothing for all pains and aches. Any druggist.

ADD TO BEAUTY OF EARTH

Writer's Tribute to the Tree Is Worthy of Remembrance Throughout the Ages.

Dull Oak Pepino, old trees in their living mass are the noblest things that money cannot command. Rivers leave their beds, run into cities and traverse mountains for it; obelisks and arches, palaces and temples, amphitheatres and pyramids rise up like acclamations at its bidding, even the free spirit of man, the only thing grand, bows and crouches and cowers in its presence—it passes away and vanishes before venerable trees. . . . How many food and how many lively thoughts have been nurtured under this tree! how many kind hearts have beaten here! its branches are not so numerous as the couples they have invited to sit beside it, nor its blossoms and leaves numerous as the expressions of tenderness it has witnessed. What opposite to the pure, ever-acting nature that wins blades to the overflowing mountains what protestations of eternal friendship constancy!—from those who are now earth; they and their sweets and their coffins. The caper and its tree have split their monuments, and hoys have broken the hazel nut with the fragments. Dilemma of past ages and future hopes, revered names which holiest rites united, broken letters of brief happiness, beneath the rose land appears to the passerby in vain.—Walter Savage Landor.

Growing Industry.

This country produces more talc and soapstone than all the rest of the world combined. The soapstone output has nearly doubled in the last decade and the comparatively uniform development of the industry indicates its stability and gives promise for continued increasing demand. Half or it is from New York, the balance chiefly from Vermont and Virginia. Soapstone finds extensive use in commerce as lining for heartbeams, mantels, sinks etc., and when powdered as a pigment in paper making, as a lubricator for dressing, skins and leather, as a filler, tine granular or cryptocrystalline varieties are used for natural purposes under the name of French chalk.

HUNT FOR BANDIT TREASURE

Group of Texas Men Use Traction Engine and Machinery to Dig in Cave.

Dallas, Tex.—A group of Dallas men here have excavated an immense hole in the remains of an old cave near the Bunard Ranch, about four miles west of the Waco Club Lake, in the belief that there are about to find buried treasure. The amount has been estimated as high as $2,000,000.

T. B. Sharp, organizer of the party, says that ten years ago a negro woman, then one hundred and four years old, told him of the treasure. He located the land and has often searched for the treasure. A traction engine and other machinery are now being used.

The negro woman said that she had once been held captive and forced to cook for a band of highwaymen who made the cave their hiding place and the strongroom for their booty. The loot was placed in kettles and chests and buried.

ENGRAVINGS ON OLD NUT

A Virginian Made the Pictures With a Pocket Knife Many Years Ago.

Alpharetta, Ga.—Miss Mary Hook has a large hickory nut which has been a cherished possession of her family for six generations. It is covered with engravings made with a pocket knife in 1731.

The work was done by one of her ancestors, William Kendrick, a civil engineer and schoolteacher. The engravings are perfect pictures, although so small that the aid of a glass is required to see them.

In addition to the initials "W. K." and the date, "1731," the pictures are a hickory nut tree, a hog, a cornerant, a fox, one eagle and a squirrel with its tail curved over its back and a nut in its paws. This was done in Virginia.

SECOND HELEN KELLER, 16

State Cares for Miss Frick, Who Was Born, Deaf, Dumb and Blind.

Philadelphia. Katherine May Frick, a deaf, dumb and blind ward of the state for whom the Pennsylvania legislature makes an appropriation at each session, will celebrate her sixteenth birthday on Thursday. Seven years ago Katherine came to the care of the state from her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Frick of Harrisburg. Her mind was totally undeveloped and she was absolutely helpless. The girl now speaks with a clear enunciation, though she has never heard a word spoken, is well informed on all current subjects, uses a typewriter and does about everything within certain limitations that any normal girl can do.

For seven years she has been under the care of Miss Mabel P. Whitman, and is pronounced almost the equal of Helen Keller.

Katherine has a topographical map on which she follows the course of the various military campaigns in Europe.

FIVE CENTS FOR A HORSE

Delaware Farmer Made Bid as a Joke, but Creature Was Sold to Him.

Georgetown, Del.—The lowest price ever paid for a horse in Delaware was received at a public sale of the property of Delaware Burton when David Warrington bought one for five cents.

When it was offered for sale the bidding was very slack; in fact, there was no one to start it. Warrington, after considerable speculation, did five cents, just for fun, and was surprised a moment later when it was knocked down to him at that price. The horse put in a full day soon hauling wood and, although it is rather thin, will develop with proper care, horsemen say, into an animal worth $100.

Prophets of Self-Sacrifice.

The bishop of Hereford is in the field again, this time with a beautifully-worded demand that we should all be self-sacrificing and give up smoking. The appeal, I confess, arrested the after-breakfast match on its way to my after-breakfast pipe—till I discovered that the bishop is not himself a smoker. How grateful we ought to be to our vicarious prophets! Self-sacrifice!—London Evening Standard.

FORTY-SIX YEARS AGO.

Forty-six years ago this week the present publisher of the SENTINEL walked into the little settlement that had just been christened Charlevoix. He walked in with a satchel on his back and began at once the work of printing the first issue of the paper that he is printing yet, and it, therefore, the dean of the newspaper profession in Michigan, in active service.

And we think that the SENTINEL, by its quality and conduct, has earned the confidence and good opinion of the people of Northern Michigan. If it has not, it is an encumbrance and ought to die. But it is very much alive.

ROASTS HIS FEET INSTEAD OF HAM

Fire-Water, Fire in Range, Man's Feet in Oven, Hot-Foot.

SCENTS STRANGE ODOR

Wife Returning From Church Cannot Reconcile Aroma With That of Cooking Ham—George Is Puzzle to Her.

Chicago,—Sunday surpassed in its geniality. There was the hum of spring in the air, and one could almost hear the birds tweet.

George Bronjobla yawned fearsomely and viewed the earth with restful Sabbath satisfaction.

"George," said Mrs. Bronjobla, as she wiped off the stove and laid a on the stove for a moment to dry them, "George, I bet it's a fine day to go to church."

"You lose," said George.

Mrs. Bronjobla sized George up out of the corner of her eye and went hurriedly along with the dishes. She wiped off the kitchen table, shoved it in a corner, and took off her apron.

"I guess I'll stop over and hear the sermon," said she. "It's a fine day and too bad to miss it. When it gets time put the ham in the oven for dinner, and I'll be right home."

"Fair enough," quoth George, and his wife went her way to the church.

He Smokes a Nip or Six.

George yawned again and decided he felt a night nip in the air, even though it did seem like a swell day, so he tossed off about two fingers of shark soup from a black bottle. This was reviving, to be candid, and George drew a chair up to the stove and toasted his shins generously.

Presently an idea occurred to him, and he opened the oven door and inserted his weary feet in the kindly warmth.

Then he fell asleep.

It was this time when Mrs. Bronjobla returned from church, and she couldn't exactly reconcile the odor she met with the delicious aroma of ham she expected.

"No ham ever sounded like that," she muttered to herself as she walked toward the kitchen. "George, is something burning?"

Thrashed the Air With His Flaming Pedals.

Something was.

George's feet. His wife pulled him rudely and he came to with a start.

"Refugee of Halifax!" howled George, and he lunged to his feet. Then he sat down again, it being not so convenient to stand.

Little Left but Ashes.

His shoes were for all practical purposes, incinerated. His socks were a dream so that he resembled in some measure the winged Mercury doing a hot-foot, that is most to characterize the habits of a messenger boy. And George was not lacking in zeal, for he thrashed the air with his flaming pedals until the fire died out and blisters commenced.

Mrs. Bronjobla called the South Chicago police, and an ambulance came. "I don't understand it," said Mrs. Bronjobla, "how he came to mistake his foot for a ham."

GERMANS AGAIN LOSE AT VERDUN

All Attacks on French Positions Are Beaten Back.

ALSO ADMIT LOSS IN LORRAINE

Berlin Reports French Fire Compelled Kaiser's Men to Withdraw from Thiaville Trenches Taken February 28—Paris Reports Four Infantry Attacks Suffered Heavily.

PARIS — Another attempt by the crown prince's army to break through the French line near Douaumont, north of Verdun, was made but the line held and the Germans fell back to their own trenches under the fire of the French artillery. Sunday morning a German force attacked in the woods just east of Vacherauville, a little to the west of the line against which the assault of the night before was directed, but with no more success.

German Attack Repulsed.

In the contest for the possession of Verdun the operations have reached for the time being to the short sector about the plateau of Douaumont. The Germans concentrated their artillery fire Saturday on the restricted front between the Haudromont wood and Douaumont village. The bombardment was very violent. After great quantities of heavy shells had been thrown, the German infantry made its charge at 4 o'clock at night. The attacking waves at once were brought under the barrage fire of the French guns, with which machine guns and rifle fire co-operated, and were unable to reach the French trenches. At the village of Douaumont itself, where the Germans hold the village proper and the French are entrenched in the southern outskirts, fighting of considerable fiveness lasted well into the night without changing the situation.

The German artillery continued the firing with some intensity throughout the night on the whole front east of the Meuse, from the region of the Louvemont and Cote de l'Oie.

Shift Attack Repulsed.

Early Sunday morning the bombardment increased in violence along the whole of this front, especially on the sector which had been the scene of the earlier attack. But the attack was not repeated here, instead the Germans shifted their assaulting column to the west, and sought to make an opening through the woods east of Vacherauville. Here again they were completely repulsed.

German troops being brought up to the Saillant front were forced to under the fire of the French artillery to the north of Vacherauville and near Louvemont, northeast of Douaumont.

No infantry action is reported from the Woevre, but the artillery of both sides was very active about Pressnes and east of Haudromont.

The French artillery conducted a heavy bombardment all night and during the day of the German positions near the Binarville road north of La Harazee, and at the Hauts zones Chavatche, in the Argonne.

Germans Shelled Up Trenches.

The German official statement announces the evacuation by the German troops of the trenches captured by them in the French region of Thiaville and adds that the French further, in Lorraine, on Feb. 28. The evacuation was ordered to avoid unnecessary losses, could not stand the concentrated fire of the French artillery.

FORCED TO WATCH ROBBERS

Man Held Prisoner in Pennsylvania Town While Post Office is Looted.

Dubois, Pa.—W. W. Haven of Sommerville, Jefferson county, works nights and was on his way home from work when he discovered two robbers in the act of breaking into the post office. The robbers held Haven up at the point of revolver while they bound and gagged him.

Then they drilled the safe before Haven's eyes and blew it up with so much dynamite that the interior of the building was costly wrecked.

The robbers gathered up $100 in money and stamps, forced Haven to accompany them to the outskirts of the village and there set him free. He spread the alarm at once, but the safe blowers made their escape.

SNOBBERY IN THE CAPITAL

Residents of Washington Said to Have a Prejudice Against "Those Who Are "In Trade."

In the American Magazine a member of the house of representatives was unusually frank in giving his opinion of Washington society. Among other things he said:

"One evening my little boy came in and mentioned that the boy next door had refused to play with him, stating as his reason:

"'You folks are just renters, and don't own your own home like we do.'

"It was a trivial matter of course, but it reminded me that we were living in a hotbed of snobbery. The commissioner next door had not thought up that himself. He had got it from some of his elders. I wondered if in the event that we came to our own home, my boy would have absorbed so much of the snobbish atmosphere that he would brush by some other boy and tell him he was nothing but a renter. I can give you another like on the snobbery that prevails in the capital of our democratic nation when I tell you that two of the leading clubs in and about Washington bar from membership all persons who are 'in trade.' A man may be highly educated, a well-bred and accomplished gentleman, but if he owns an establishment where anything is bought and sold across a counter he cannot be a member of a certain one of the best clubs, because, as I once heard an Englishman express it, 'the fellow works for a living.'

"This reminds me that Washington more than any or any other city abounds in signs which say, 'Tradesmen to Rear Entrance.' Everybody seems to have a horror of coming into personal contact with persons whose living is provided by the work they do."

RELICS OF ROMAN LONDON

Interesting Discoveries Made When for Above Purposes the Soil Is Dug Into at Some Depth.

Roman London lies buried about eighteen feet below the level of Cheapside. In nearly all parts of the city there have been discovered tessellated pavements, Roman tombs, lamps, vases, sandals, keys, ornaments, weapons, coins and statues of the Roman gods.

When, a little over a century ago, deep sections were made for the sewers in Lombard street, the lowest stratum was found to consist of tessellated pavements. Many colored dice were found lying scattered about, and above this stratum was a thick layer of wood ashes, suggesting the debris of charred wooden buildings.

While building the Exchange workmen came upon a gravel-pit full of oyster shells, bones of cattle, old sandals and shoes of leather. Two pavements were dug up under the French church in Threadneedle street, and other pavements have been cut through in several parts of the city. The soil seems to have risen over Roman London at the rate of nearly a foot a century. Still further must the searcher dig to find the third London, the earlier London of the Britons.

School Commissioner's Column

May L. Stewart, Commissioner

This is a very solemn occasion.

Making a correction in last week's notes—The general promotion tests for all but the eighth grade will be held May 4-5th. The state eighth grade examination will be held May 11-12th. The teachers' examination will be held April 27-28th. Reading is based on "Men Without Country," agriculture questions largely from the Reading Circle book on agriculture.

Next meeting of the board of examiners May 6th. Requests for renewals should be in before this time, together with the original certificate and the institute fee for the term of the certificate.

"A Try See Club" has been organized in Deer Lake. This is a sewing club under the supervision of the M. A. C. man, Miss Sidney Lumley is the leader.

Mr. Holcomb, of East Jordan, has organized the boys into a boys club. They will work for an exhibit at the County fair, will demonstrate milk testing and stock judging, when called to the nearby country schools, and will take charge of the rural athletic contests in their neighborhood.

Now is the best time to start that "Community Exhibit."

According to a letter from Mr. Pattengill, the wholesale price of Smith's Combination Register is 75c. When just one is bought the price is $1.00. The commissioner is sorry to have made a mistake in quoting from an earlier letter.

The returns from the midyear examinations are on file and summarized. In some respects the tests were disappointing but when we take into consideration the fact that this was the first test and that the teachers did not have any idea what standard to work up to, both teachers and pupils are to be commended.

"1900" Gravity Washer

What This Invention Means to Women

THE hardest part of the housework is the washing, when it is done by the old way—done with the tub and the wash-board. No matter whether you do it yourself or not, some woman does it. And its work that no woman should do. Servants dread it and rightly. Servants are always more contented if there is none of it. There should be none. Washing can now be done with one-fourth of the time.

Suppose a man had the washing to do. How long do you suppose he would do it by hand? He would do just as men do with their work today—he would use a mechanical help. On the farm, in the factory—everywhere—men have machinery to do their hard work now. Why should not women do likewise? They are less fitted for hard work than men are. There is no question about it. The "1900" Washer is a help that every housewife should employ. Hundreds of thousands have done it already. The balance should do it now. There is no reason in the world why women should work, as women have worked to take care of the family washing. There is no merit for any dread on anyone's part when washing day comes around.

IT IS EVEN CHEAPER

The question of cost is a very slight matter compared with back-breaking labor.

If it cost twice as much to do the washing by machine, still women should use the machine. But it doesn't. On the contrary, the "1900" pays for itself, over and over, in the visible saving of expense.

The average family washing costs about $1.20 per week. You may pay it to a wash-woman or pay it for help. The average expense, as we find it, is that. The woman who does her own washing has more than that to do so after getting this washer. The machine will save at least one-half the time. That will month—will it save half of the cost. The saving can go first into paying for the washer, as the installment plan. Then it goes, year after year, into profit. So the "1900" is not an expense. This saving in labor involves no extra cost. On the contrary, it is far cheaper to have the machine than to go without it. For Sale by

MARY PICKFORD IN "CINDERELLA"

AT THE MAJESTIC THEATRE ON TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH TWENTY-FIRST

In the exquisitely fanciful fairy-tale "Cinderella," arranged from the beautifully symbolic and century-old story, Mary Pickford portrays the pathetic but bewitching little cinder-girl, the heroine of the world-renowned and universally loved tale of the abused stepsister who was at last rewarded for her virtue and patience by a splendid triumph over the haughty sisters and unkind stepmother, and crowned princess, and sovereign of her true-love's heart. This new and modern version of "Cinderella" is a delightful blend of comedy and pathos and provides a consummately artistic treat for people of all ages.

The varying vicissitudes of Cinderella's life, with her many sorrows and her great triumph are shown just as they are chronicled in the beautiful story that is its origin.

Growth of Rubber Industry.

The world's production of crude rubber last year amounted to 142,000 tons. This is a substantial increase over 1914. Of this amount of rubber 72,000 tons is used in the United States, and of that amount more than one-half finds its way into Akron, O., the home of the tire industry. It is a matter of record that in 1905 75,000 acres of land were devoted to rubber culture, and in 1915 there were 1,410,000 acres devoted to this industry.

The Straight Tip

By EVANS MACAULAY RANDALL

(Copyright, 1916, by W. G. Chapman.)

"I'm through!"

Roland Dalton looked it. Young, handsome, well dressed, sober, energetic, unlike the man had been his friend "on the board" for two years, but just now there was in his face an appalling disconragement.

"See here, Jerry," he said to his trader and manager, "there's no point to publish it, but I don't dare to go over tomorrow. If I did, it would be no business credit and I'll take no chance with other people's money."

"No, sir, we owe nothing, the decks are clear."

"Are I'm going to quit, while there are. You follow orders. Pay off every bill and close up the office. I'll pay you and Miss Blount a month's salary ahead. I'll leave each of you a fine cash recommendation to business & co., who will be glad of your services. I'm going up into Wisconsin and get as far away from the bubbub and worry as I can for a month. Then I think I'll strike out for the coast and begin all over again."

Local Jerry Watson's lips puckered. Marcia Blount, at the typewriter, was white as a sheet. Hitherto, a glance at her and he gulped down a sigh. Shattered business a shattered, though half-hinted, romance—"I was pitiful."

"Close up the office and tell anybody that I'm off for a rest," proceeded Dalton. "Put pay everybody and let Dalton & Co. fade away without any sensation."

"I'm Through!"

"But, sir," expostulated Jerry. "Things are not so bad as you think. We're square. Well, then, how about the big broncoco consignment?"

Dalton shook his head drearily.

"Jerry, he said, "the market's down on that and we are up stage."

"But the ten thousand dollar option, sir?"

"I'll lose it rather than take the lot and invest other people's money in it. No, I'm through. I tell you, I'm done."

Then Roland Dalton went away. Twenty hours later, Jerry stood looking about him like a lost soul. Miss Blount was crying softly.

"I never thought he'd flunk!" sniffered Jerry. "Well, we're through, too. He's a sport, for both of us, I'm thinking."

"I will stay and get everybody checked up," volunteered the pretty stenographer. "Your feeling blue, sir. Go home and forget it all."

Jerry was seated in the midst of his daughter's dinner, when Miss Blount unexpectedly intruded. She looked excited and triumphant.

"Mr. Watson," she announced, "two strange things happened at the office after you left. Mr. Dalton—"

"Yes?" murmured Jerry, interrogatively.

"The first was a notification that our people at Aberdeen had shipped the entire broncoco consignment."

"Why?" fairly shouted Jerry, in dire consternation. "Nothing in it worth! No market! Freight charges alone amount to thousands! A ten thousand dollar option!"

"Don't you ask," suggested Marcia eagerly, "they are banking on the good credit of our house. They are not afraid to trust Mr. Dalton."

"But, my dear Miss Blount," exclaimed Jerry, "there is absolutely no demand for the stuff, the quotations are disastrously below the profit point, no one wants it, no one ever wants it, price without a disastrous loss, and we simply cannot take it!"

"We must!"

Never had Jerry Watson seen so determined a look on the little lady's face. There was power unutterable in its expression.

"Mr. Watson," she said, resolutely, and there was a tremulous thrill in her voice, "I am not willing that an opportunity should be allowed to pass unregarded, after his extreme kind ness to us, that may mean the rehabilitation of Mr. Dalton's business."

"But that is impossible!"

"But I thought that just after receiving the telegram from the broncoco people. Ned Prosser came into the office."

"That kid," ejaculated Watson, deliberately, "can't be got to do with it."

"Everything. You remember I set him his position with Vermilye & Co. He is a grateful little fellow. He always boasted he would prove that for us some day. Well, he comes into the office this afternoon, all excitement. 'I've got the straight tip,' he declared. 'Vermilye & Co. are going to run a corner in stock feed and broomcorn. They are going to rush the market up twenty to thirty points delivery day, and hold it there. It's a sure play—any good to you?' Mr. Dalton's eyes shone. 'Why, Can-ned, I wouldn't hurt a fly. Gerald—You couldn't if it were double-loaded.'

There are times when the corkscrew is mightier than the typewriter.

Meeting Requirements of Modes in Model in Perfect Taste

A party frock for the social hod, which does its American designer no end of credit, tells its pretty story in the picture above. But half its charm must be left to the imagination, since it lies in combination of colors, both exite, but not too pale shades of pink and blue, with the introduction of silver lace, make up a flowerlike confection which it is an impertinence to look at.

The underskirt of pink silk net contributes to fairly full about the hips, and very full about the ankles, by the simple and lovely expedient of the band of silver lace insertion set in, like a girdle, below the hips. It is piped at two ends with a cord, covered with pink satin, and the net is gathered to it. This allows the flounce to be much fuller than the upper portion. The flounce is bound at the bottom with a cord covered with satin. Over this underskirt a second skirt of blue net falls, covering its entire length. It is bound with blue satin, which causes it to stand out about the bottom.

The bodice is cleverly designed of blue satin, with a square piece set on to the middle of the front and back, which does its American designer no end of credit, tells its pretty story in the picture above. But half its charm must be left to the imagination, since it lies in combination of colors, both exite, but not too pale shades of pink and blue, with the introduction of silver lace, make up a flowerlike confection which it is an impertinence to look at.

The underskirt of pink silk net contributes to fairly full about the hips, and very full about the ankles, by the simple and lovely expedient of the band of silver lace insertion set in, like a girdle, below the hips. It is piped at two ends with a cord, covered with pink satin, and the net is gathered to it. This allows the flounce to be much fuller than the upper portion. The flounce is bound at the bottom with a cord covered with satin. Over this underskirt a second skirt of blue net falls, covering its entire length. It is bound with blue satin, which causes it to stand out about the bottom.

The bodice is cleverly designed of blue satin, with a square piece set on to the middle of the front and back, forming points above and below the waist line. The side bodice are cut into points at the bottom and extend to the arms. There are small ruffled straps over the shoulders. At the ends of the pink and blue nets is folded in at the top of the bodice and gathered to form a narrow ruffle about the round neck. Short puffed sleeves are made of the two nets also. The waist line is defined by two bands of narrow silver gauze ribbon, and the neckwear of silver edging outlines the ruffle about the neck.

All the requirements of the modes of the hour are met in this model of good taste in using them. The very full skirt, the close-fitting bodices and the airy fabrics that fashion approves find expression in it.

The combination of blue and pink, which is a French suggestion, is only one of several combinations of color which might be considered in a frock made in the same way. But pink and blue used together are met with so often in displays of spring apparel, (notably in millinery) that it promises to be a feature in coming fashions.

Costume for the Small Boy and His Charming Sister

After studying the displays of ready-made clothing for little boys and girls one is inclined to think that it is a waste of time and energy for the busy mother to undertake the making of it at home. In the little suits and dresses, rompers, and aprons shown in the shops there is a degree of excellent and the workmanship satisfactory. The prices are better than reasonable, they are low. There is economy in making fine dresses, on which much embroidery and lace and tucks are used, but for garments that are to be worn by and and, the manufacturer has met all requirements, including low prices.

One of the prettiest of the new wash suits for the small boy is shown at the left of the picture above. It is a model in medium dark shade of brown with collar and belt in brown and white stripe. The cuffs are piped with the striped material. White bone buttons fasten the short coat down the front, and machine stitching figures in the coat trimming. Heavy linen and cotton materials are used for suits of this kind, and they are made in blue, brown, unbleached linen, and white.

An everyday dress for the little girl, shown at the right of the picture is of checked gingham, finished with bands of plain chambray. A real pocket is set in, slanting from the side of the top, and a belt extends across the back, terminating in a bow. A number of similar dresses are shown, and the variations in trimming and color combinations attest to the resourcefulness of their makers. They are neatly made and are pretty and attractive, even when judged by the standards of the capable needlewoman.

Long Gloves Preferred.

Smart women are wearing the gloves with a long, soft cuff, which is brought up cuffless over the sleeve. White is the preferred color, but gray and delicate tan and also dark blue are seen.

Animal Procession at Birthday Party.

Dip the feet of "animal crackers" in stiff frosting and stand on flat wafers. These make an interesting procession to march round a birthday cake at a children's party—Good Housekeeping.

Colored Face Veils.

The popular veil is either large or small, and square mesh net, run with heavy silk in the same color or with a pattern worked in chainstitch, in vine or in scattered leaf design. The leading colors are bright purple, emerald green, French blue, petunia, gray, and a light golden brown. The draped veil of net, embroidered on the edges, will be worn over hats of colored straw in the early spring.

PITY NOT CALLED FOR WRITER POINTS OUT SOME OF THE JOYS OF THE POOR.

By No Means the Unfortunate Class Generally Depicted—Simple Feasts That Leave a Lasting Impression of Real Joy.

The happiest people in the world are the poor. Without a doubt the older the ambition for self-advancement, religion, has always taught them to be content with their lot and shown the folly of relying upon possession as the key to happiness, a writer in Leslie's observes. Our materialistic day has worshiped financial success, and by bearing this doctrine constantly preached those who are poor have been made to feel themselves unfortunate and condemned to miss the great joys of life.

Mrs. Kathleen Norris, author of "Mother," "The Rich Mrs. Burgoyne" and "Saturday's Child," says that too many writers have been telling us about the sorrows of the poor, but though ignorant of the fact that the poor family is often brilliant and happier in every way than the rich family. "We need writers," says Mrs. Norris, "who will be aware of the pleasures to be derived from a good dinner of corned beef and cabbage and a visit to a moving picture theater, often when I pass a row of mean houses, as they would be called, I think gratefully of the good times that I have had in just such places."

Who is there who has come up from a childhood and youth of comparative poverty who doesn't have the same memory of the joys of those days? The simplest feasts are always the best, and holidays and outings which happen but seldom are far more appreciated than that seemingly happier state when every day is a holiday that brings a feast. Mrs. Norris speaks of her appreciation of Dickens because he understood so well the joys of the poor. Their life was not one long story of despair, but he gave them "roast goose and plum pudding, for their Christmas dinner—he gave them faith and hope and love."

If more of our modern novelists would write of the joys of the poor man's household there would be less of the spirit of discontent in the minds of the people, and of unreasonable envy of those who happen to have more of this world's goods and there would be more of the real spirit of the holiday season.

Motor Car Acts Like Mauve.

An automobile that will run on its "hind legs," spin about, back and perform generally like the little mauve one of the circus, has been the star feature of a number of race meets held in widely separated parts of the country. Popular Science Monthly states. The car, known as "Mauve, the Motor Mule."

Wonderful and adventurous talents are due to a heavy weight hung over her tail and to individual brakes, and that a proportion of the weight is heavy enough to overbalance the car. It is only a matter of adjusting projecting over the axle, and is controlled by a lever which is on the reel with the original cast," explained the engineer who has to do with all afternoon to engage the company."—New York Telegram.

Old Restaurant Man Dies.

James Tanner, whose restaurant gave the name of "Tenderloin" to that section of the city in the neighborhood of Broadway and West Thirty-third street, died recently in a hotel here. Tanner's restaurant, in his days, was been torn down, was famous for its steaks. When Police Commissioner Williams was sent from police headquarters to take command of the West Thirties street police station he dined at Tranner's restaurant. Returning, he said to a friend of the loiterings, he said: "I'm through chuck steak. It's tenderloin for me now up-town." Thereafter the district included within that police precinct was known as the "Tenderloin."—New York Correspondent Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Are Hands Ever Kissed?

The etiquette of gloves barred the moving picture censors of Ohio and Pennsylvania. Hereafter no kiss may fill more than ten feet of film. A ten-foot kiss might seem to be a mile long one to the outsider, but ten feet of film whisks past in about two seconds.

But what about the hand kiss? Is it proper, outside of a book, ever on a man kiss a woman's hand? Not in this part of the country, at least. But in nearly every novelette there is a scene the hero bends over the hand of the woman he loves and kisses her fingers fondly and long.—Kansas City Times.

Gets Soft Wood From America.

China, draws its principal supplies of soft woods from the United States and Japan. In 1915, the last year for which figures are available, China imported from the United States no less than 79,700,000 feet board measure, valued at $1,600,000. These imports were more than double those of the preceding year, and 16,000,000 feet in excess of 1913.

Busy Mother.

"That woman next door is a thoroughly practical woman. Hear that piano playing? Learning how to go there now, would they not have to fasten it? Then, too, there is the report that there is a heavy war tax on lard."

I was surprised to learn that these old yarns, stories that I thought had been exploded long ago, were still in use duty in many parts of the United States, and that a proportion of the wide learning of my friend, was inclined to believe them.

"Conscription!" I said. "With Canada contributing 250,000 men voluntarily, no conscription is necessary. There is no conscription in Canada, and never will there be. It is not needed. In any case no legislation could be passed by the Dominion Parliament which would impose military service upon people who are not citizens of Canada, either by birth or naturalization. Settlers from the United States could not become naturalized British subjects until they and resided in Canada continuously for three years. I have proved this by official documents.

"In the first few months of the war I clearly stated that there would be no conscription in Canada. I repeat that statement today."

"And then as to taxes," I continued, quoting again from official authority. "Taxes levied by the Canadian government take the indirect form of customs excise and internal revenue taxes. It is untrue that farmers are paying direct war tax levies and no opening settler need be afraid to come to Canada on this account.

"Mr. Crais, I trust I have convinced you that all apprehensions which have been making some would-be settlers in the United States hesitate to make a change while the war lasts are without foundation. These misunderstandings cleared up, the present war conditions offer increase in added inducement to settlement in any part of the provinces of western Canada, instead of war prices not been demanded for all manner of farm products, afford the farmer a special opportunity to make money."

I was glad of the chance and pleased to have him state that his views had altogether changed.

I could have continued, and told him of the fortunes that had been made in the season of 1915, out of farming what growing, out growing, barley growing, cattle raising, dairying and mixed farming. I could have told him of an Ottawa (Canada) syndicate that had a yield of 25 bushels of oats per acre from their farm at Wainright and from 10 to 12 of wheat. Sold they threshed over 60 bushels per acre. These yields, while phenomenal, were repeated in many portions of western Canada. It was interesting to know that the average yield of spring wheat in Saskatchewan was 25.6 bushels per acre, Manitoba 26.3 bushels in Alberta, 26.16 bushels, and over the three provinces there was a total average of over 30 bushels per acre.

"The immense crop that has just been harvested has put millions of dollars in the hands of the farmers, and they will spend a large part of it in regular channels of trade has already begun. Millions of bushels of grain are still in the hands of the farmers, which means that there is a store of realizable wealth that will be steadily going into circulation, benefitting the thousands who are dependent for directly on the basic industry of the province for their livelihood.

"The stock prosperity that rested on the insecure foundation of inflated real estate values has passed away, and in its place the corner stone of the country's sound financial future is being built.

"The trust and mortgage companies, the large implement concerns and the wholesale merchants all tell the same story today of marked improvement in their business. The farmers and others are meeting their just dues and paying off debts that in many cases have been long overdue. Collections are better today than they have been since the most prosperous days of our history, and obligations are being met freely and promptly.

"Now," I said, "why should they wait until the war is over?"

And he agreed with me.—Advertisement.

Qualified.

"So you want a job as press agent of the big Top shows," said the circus man. "Have you any experience?"

"Sure," replied the applicant.

"Well, who, is an elephant?" asked the circus man.

"An elephant is a ponderous pachyderm," replied the applicant.

"And, what is a hippopotamus?" asked the circus man.

"A hippopotamus is a bloodsweating behemoth of Holy Writ," replied the applicant.

"Correct," announced the circus man. "You are engaged."
